Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty-eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

The Right Will Right Itself.

When overcome with anxious fears,
And moved with passion strong,
Because the right seems losing ground
And everything goes wrong,
How oft does admonition say:
"Put trouble on the shelf;
Truth will outlive the liars' day,
And right will right itself!"

By all the triumphs of the past,
By all the victories won,
The good achieved, the progress made
Each day, from sun to sun;
In spite of artful ways employed
By perfidy or pelf,
Of one thing we can rest assured,
The right will right itself!

Unshaken in our faith and zeal,
'Tis ours to do and dare,
To find the place we best can fill,
And serve our Maker there;
For he is only brave who thus
Puts trouble on the shelf,
And trusts in God, for by his aid
The right will right itself.

A Plain Girl.

Said a young friend to me the other day: "If I had only been born with good looks I might be more attractive to people. Now, there's Alice Scott, she has such beautiful eyes, and Hattie Barnes such a lovely complexion, and Mamie Reed—well, her face is altogether perfect; but I am so plain, not one redeeming feature."

I was just about to reply when the girl laid her hand over my mouth and laughingly continued:

"I know just what you are going to say, 'Handsome is that handsome does,' and that is such an old proverb that it is worn threadbare."

"You are much mistaken," I interrupted, "although it is true notwithstanding, Miss Saucebox; I was going to tell you about a lady I once had the pleasure of meeting. I was visiting a friend at one time who had a very large circle of acquaintances; wherever we went I was sure to hear the name of a certain lady (Miss Rollins) mentioned, and every one, strange to relate, had something to say in her favor—indeed, every one seemed to be quite carried away with her.

"Naturally I was desirous to meet so charming a creature, of whom I had drawn a mental picture. It is needless to say that I fancied her a great beauty.

"One morning my friend and I were sitting on the veranda, reading, and hearing the gate click I looked up and saw a very plain looking woman coming up the drive way. With a beaming smile and delighted exclamation, my friend advanced to meet her, and when greetings were exchanged she was brought forward to where I was sitting and introduced as Miss Rollins. Judge of my surprise. This plain, unassuming woman—Miss Rollins! I could not believe my eyes—but she smiled, and then her countenance was illumined. She spoke, and her voice was music. For an hour I listened, almost entranced, and when our visitor had gone I confessed myself another devotee at her shrine."

"But after all she was attractive—she did have charm," began my young friend. "I haven't finished, Miss Impetuosity," I answered. "I learned afterwards that when Miss Rollins was in her girlhood she spent so much time fretting over her plain looks that she really made herself very unattractive and unlovely; but it was her good fortune to meet with one who urged her to self forgetfulness and a desire to please and help others, and she soon learned that a kind, thoughtful act, a sympathetic word and a pleasant smile, went further than mere beauty of countenance."

"But she couldn't change her voice," still argued the girl. "Indeed she could, Miss Incredulous," I replied. "A voice trained only to articulate the gentlest and kindest of words unconsciously grows soft and musical in tone. Don't you suppose that if Miss Rollins had kept on grieving and grumbling because of the plainness of her features she would soon have cultivated a fretful and whining tone? And if gloomy and peevish thoughts had been allowed to rankle in her heart instead of the winsome smile there would have been scowls and wrinkles!

"Ah, my dear! true beauty comes from within if the heart is right; if peace, contentment and love dwell within it, they will reflect themselves in the countenance and brighten the plainest features. So take my advice, accept the inevitable, give up thinking about your looks, do good and be good, and in the end you will be happier and have more friends than if you had simply a pretty face.

"Beautiful faces are they that wear
The light of a quiet spirit there,
It matters little if dark or fair."

Why They Often Fail.

Young men often fail to get on in the world because they neglect small opportunities. Not being faithful in little things, they were not promoted to the charge of greater things. A young man who gets a subordinate situation sometimes thinks it is not necessary for him to give it much attention. He will wait till he gets a place of responsibility, and then he will show people what he can do. This a very great mistake. Whatever his situation may be, he should master it in all its details, and perform all its duties faithfully. The habit of doing everything thoroughly and conscientiously is the most likely to enable a young man to make his way. With this habit, a man with only ordinary abilities will be one of greater talents who is capable of slighting subordinate matters. After all, the more adoption by a young man of this great essential rule of life he possessed of superior

Courtesy at Home.

The home is the center of the social fabric, the keystone of its arch. Its conduct and character determine the future of the wider circle, society and the State. The cradle rocked by mothers conscious of their high mission has been the saving of the world. Home training is the determiner of the fate of nations.

Good manners in public are a necessity, the oil of the machinery of life, causing it to move without friction and violence. But courtesy at home is more important still, for its influence molds the plastic character of those dear little men and maidens who are to arise and call us blessed or—shall I say it?—reproduce our private ignorances to the greater audiences they meet in future life.

To this end, the husband and wife owe to each other a natural indebtedness. We have no right to be too familiar in speech and manners with those we love the best. Many "a little rift within the lute, which, slowly widening, makes all the music mute," has opened out of careless words which sprang from a heart whose love was vailed from observation by impoliteness.

The husband has no right to yawn in his wife's face, during a story, any more than he has to do so to Jones at the club. We set with martyr-like patience the Mrs. Brown's tweedledum and tweedledee; we affect a deep sadness when she relieves us of her presence, but when John comes home to tell of his doings at the store, we do not hesitate to let him see he is wearisome. It is the absence of courtesy at home which destroys its attractiveness and harmony both.

And when we think that keen-eyed little ones are gathered as an attentive audience to note this absence of good manners and the presence of these little domestic vulgarities, how careful should it make us in all our conversation and action. "My children are my truest critics," said a charming lady, recently. It is so. The child's innocent gaze looks deep down into every character with which it is brought into contact.

"Company manners" are a sure sign of bad taste and deceitful conduct. Such a distinction has no right to exist. Our best thoughts, kindest words, cheeriest looks and noblest examples are due at home, in the sacred privacy of that temple of which God has made the priests and priestesses.

The charm of the household is when good manners are so perfectly natural as to reduce all friction to a minimum and banish rudeness into oblivion. Then, and only then, shall our sons and daughters grow up as corner-stones, polished after the similitude of a palace, possessing a native grace and inherent dignity.—New York Ledger.

An Old Field Weed.

Many seeking that old field weed, the mullein stalk, never consider the good it is accomplishing in curing lung troubles. It presents in Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein the finest known remedy for coughs, croup, colds and consumption.

Wheelbarrow Folk.

There are a good many children, and some grown people, who go like a wheelbarrow—that is, they go just as far as you push them, and when you stop they stop. You tell them to do a thing and they do it, and that is all they will do. If you want a thing done again, you must tell them to do it again. If you want it done forty times, you must tell them forty times to do it.

There are other people who, when you set them going, can keep on themselves. They have some "go" in them. If you tell them to day that you want a thing done, tomorrow you will find the same thing done without telling them. If you complain that a thing has been neglected this week, next week they will see that it is not neglected.

There is a great deal of difference in the value of these two kinds of people, because the wheelbarrow kind of folks need somebody to run them, just as much as a machine needs somebody to attend it. They only go while you watch them and push them; so if you have one such person at work you must employ another one to watch him and keep him going; but if you have one of the other kind at work he will watch himself, do his work, and make you no trouble about it.

It is very important for all boys and girls to decide which class they will belong to, whether they will be wheelbarrow folks, that go as far as they are pushed and then stop, or whether they can be depended upon to keep in motion after they are once started. Boys or girls who must be told what to do and watched while they do it are not worthy of their salt; but if a person can do a thing with once telling, and continue doing it without further care, such a person is worth more than gold.—Little Christian.

Unconscious Ministry.

It is a broad city street, with houses on either side, occupied by people of ample means. Almost at the end of the street, which is short, stands a house whose generous front suggests both wealth and hospitality. There is a large bay window at one side of the front door, and in this window, from October to June, flowers are in bloom constantly. Nor does the generosity of the owner stop at merely keeping flowers in the window; every week the plants are changed. Winter snows find hot-house plants, rare and beautiful, filling the window, making a glory of color, delighting every neighbor and arresting the footsteps of every passerby. The first touch of Spring in the Winter air and that herald of beauty, the crocus, blooms in the window; primroses follow, modest, dainty, but promising soft air and sunshine. As if in rivalry of nature, the flowers of each month blossom, announcing to the unknown what the world of nature does.

The owner has no conception of the feeling of gratitude which this window arouses. Throughout the whole neighborhood the question is daily asked: "Have you seen Mrs. ——'s window this week?" "No." "Then you must; it is lovely!" The walk to or from market is varied and cheered by the flowers in this window; the memory of them makes the whole day bright.

Within sight of the window is a boarding house in which a young girl, an invalid, passed last Winter. She could sit by the window, far above the noise of the street. In speaking of the long week shut in from any outside interest she said: "I wish I could thank the owner for that window; it was not the beauty of the flowers, but there was always the anticipation of what would follow. And when the flowers were changed, they were always more beautiful than those they displaced. Why, when the Flower Show was open I did not mind not being able to go—the orchids in that window were so beautiful, and there was some change every day." The owner will probably never know how much pleasure or how much inspiration is given by that which she maintains for her own pleasure. Other lives are enriched by this ministry, of which she has no knowledge, of whose existence she does not dream.

We often speak of the open window as if it were only to look out of, forgetting that every open window has something behind it that the passer by may take with him in memory. How often, when walking along the street at night, the open window into some room that wealth and taste have made beautiful will give a thrill of pleasure! How frequently a suggestion for the arrangement of furniture, or a combination of colors, will be carried away that will make a much more humble home more beautiful and a source of greater pleasure.

We associate ministry with action, with animate life. But is there not a world of ministry in color, in form, in artistic adaptation? How much of the joy of giving and receiving we lose because we think of ministry solely in connection with sorrow, poverty, crime; as a duty from the rich to the poor; missing the blessing, whether we are conscious of it or not, of the ministry of the beauty, grace and harmony with which we make our home lives more attractive. The open window is not only to look out of, but to look into. Let us see to it that it gives all that we can make it give to the stranger outside our gates, for sometimes angels pass by—they do not always enter.—The Christian Union

Prizes at the World's Fair.

The board has decided that in the general Exposition buildings, where the competitive exhibits will be placed, it will not separate the exhibits of women's work from that of men, for the reason that, as women are working side by side with men in all the factories of the world, it would be practically impossible to divide the finished result of their combined labor, writes Mrs. Potter Palmer in the Ladies' Home Journal.

Nor would women be satisfied with prizes unless they were awarded without distinction as to sex and as the result of fair competition with the best work shown under the general classification. They are striving for excellence, and desire recognition only for demonstrated merit. In order, however, that the enormous amount of work being done by women may be appreciated, a tabulated statement will be procured and shown with every exhibit, stating the proportion of women's work that enters into it.

Rev. Jesse Howell.

I ask space enough in the RECORDER to make brief mention of this veteran servant of God for the special benefit of the older class of its readers in Duplin and Sampson counties.

My acquaintance with this venerable minister has been very brief, but to me of thrilling interest. I first saw him through the window back of the pulpit in old Johnson's meeting house, in Duplin county. I think it was in 1845, when I was about nine years old. He was conducting a revival there of great power. We did not arrive in time for the baptismal service. Many had been baptized, and the house was filled to overflowing, with a large crowd in the yard. So I had only a glimpse of the preacher through the pulpit window as stated. From Johnson's he went to Kenansville, and another meeting of far-reaching power and influence followed. Here for the first time I witnessed the ordinance of baptism. If I was ever converted it was when I was five or six years old, and I had been leading the quiet life of a country boy, carrying the secret of my religious hope locked up in my own bosom. No one knew of it but God. The sight of the ordinance filled me with a burning desire to be baptized by Mr. Howell. After great hesitation, I mentioned it to my parents, but they refused me permission, thinking I was too young to know what I was about. It was a bitter disappointment to me, and I deeply regretted the departure of the great revivalist, and wondered if I ever should see him again.

Forty-seven long years had passed away. Our Mt. Zion Association was to meet on the eighteenth of October at Olive's Chapel, in Wake county. I was the more anxious to attend it because I was told that old Bro. Howell was still living in the neighborhood. Bro. Hocutt and I, riding together, went to his house the first night. It was a delightful visit. The dear old man, now in his eighty-second year, is quite feeble in body, but very bright mentally. He gave us a hearty welcome, and finding out who I was, began at once to talk of his meetings in Duplin and Sampson. He recalled readily the names of many of the people whom he had met then, and told us many pleasant incidents connected with his meetings.

But I was particularly charmed with the noble wife who has lived there in their quiet country home for more than sixty years, and bravely taken care of the family and their domestic affairs while her husband has been away from home engaged in his ministerial labors. Notwithstanding the monotonous and wearing round of house duties in these long years, she has been marvellously well preserved. Though now in her eightieth year, her hair is still black, and her hearing excellent. She has never worn spectacles, nor had the service of a doctor save when injured in one of her feet. She has never weighed more than 115 pounds, and she thinks she could now pull down eighty. She jokingly tells Bro. Howell, when he complains much of his infirmities, that when she marries again she is going to inquire more particularly about the health of her would-be husband. As I looked upon this bright and cheery and hopeful little woman, and thought of the patient labors and self-denials of her life, I felt that I was standing in the presence of one of the uncrowned heroines in the Lord's service. But "the crowning day is coming by-and-by," and I felt sure that "when the chief shepherd shall appear, she shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

I left this venerable pair with regret. They have been wonderfully useful. Bro. Howell counts the people baptized by himself by the thousand. I pray God's richest blessing upon them, and feel assured that when the summons come for them they will go into the kingdom with rejoicing, carrying their sheaves with them.

J. L. CARROLL.

Chapel Hill, Oct. 24.

In Time of Loneliness.

Loneliness is one of the most pathetic of human experiences. The yearning for companionship is one of the deepest of all yearnings. The religion of Christ has something to meet every human need; what is its blessing for loneliness? We may turn to the Master's own life for answer to our question. He met all the experiences that ever become ours, and he found for himself the best there is to be found in the divine love to meet his experiences. Thus he showed us what we may find in our times of need, and how we may find it.

Christ's loneliness was one of the most bitter elements of his earthly sorrow. His very greatness of character made it impossible for him to have any real companionship in this world. Besides, those whom he came to bless and save rejected him. The only human relief to his loneliness along the years of his public ministry was in the love of his chosen friends, and this was most unsatisfactory. But we know where he ever turned for solace and comfort in his experiences. After a day of pain and suffering, he would climb the mountain and spend the night in communion with his father, returning in the morning renewed and strong for another day of sweet life. In his darkest hour he said that though left alone as to human companionship, he was not alone, because his father was with him.

The comfort of our Lord's heart in his loneliness is for us, too, if we are walking in his steps. We, too, have our experiences of loneliness in this world, and we, too, may have the blessed companionship that shall fill the emptiness. In a certain sense all life is lonely. Even with sympathetic companionships all about us, there is an inner life which each one of us lives altogether alone. We must make our own choices and decisions. We must meet our own questions and answer them ourselves. We must fight our own battles, endure our own sorrows, carry our own burdens. Friendship may be very close and tender, but there is a sanctuary of each life into which even the holiest friendship may not enter.

"Still in each heart of hearts a hidden deep, Lies, never fathomed by its dearest, best."

Blessed are they who in this aloneness can say, "Yet, I am not alone, because the Father is with me." God's is the only friendship that can really meet all our soul's needs and cravings. Human companionship helps us at a few points; the divine has its blessing for every experience. We never shall be left alone when we have Christ. When other helpers fail and comforts flee, he will ever stand close beside us. When other faces fade out of view, his will shine out with sweet love, pouring its light upon us.

There are special experiences of loneliness in every life for which Christ is needed. Youth is one of these times. Youth seems happy and light-hearted. Companionships swarm all around it. But ofttimes a young person feels lonely even amid such scenes and friendships. All life is new to him. As his soul awakes a thousand questions arise demanding answer. He is in a world with a thousand paths and he must choose in which he will walk. Everything is mysterious. There are perils lurking on all sides. Choices must be made. Lessons must be learned. All is new, and at every step the voice is heard, "You have not passed this way heretofore." This loneliness of inexperience, when a young soul is taking its earliest steps in life, is one of the most trying and painful feelings of all the years. If Christ be not then the companion, lonely and perilous indeed is the way. But if he walks beside the young soul in its inexperience, all is well.

There are those who are lonely because they are homeless. It is impossible to estimate too highly the value and the helpfulness of a true home of love. Home is a shelter. Young lives nest there and find warmth and protection. There is also guidance in a true christian home. Many of life's hardest questions are answered by a wise mother or father. Blessed is that young man or young woman who takes every perplexity, every mystery, every doubt or fear, every hunger, home to the sacredness of love's sanctuary and gets there sympathy, patient counsel, and true guidance. Home has also its blessed companionship. It is the one place where we are absolutely sure of each other and do not need to be on our guard. Youth has its unspeakable longings, its deep hungers, its cravings for tenderness. In the true home these are all met. Those who have such a home do not realize the half it is to them. It is the very shadow of Christ's wings over their lives, the very cleft of the Rock, the very bosom of divine love. Life's loneliness means far less to them while home shields them and blesses them with its companionships and its sweet, patient, wise, helpful, nourishing love.

But sometimes the home is pulled down over youth and its shelter broken up. Few things are sadder than homelessness. Loneliness begins to be really felt when the home is gone, when there is no longer a wise and loving mother to give her counsel in your inexperience, to lay her hand on your head in benediction, to listen to your questions and answer them, to restrain your impetuous spirit, to quiet you when you are perturbed and when your peace is broken, to lead you through perplexing paths, to fill your hungry heart with the comfort of love when you long for sympathy and companionship. Bitter indeed is the sense of loneliness when a young person, used to all that a mother's love means, turns away from a mother's grave to miss thenceforward the blessings that have been so much in the past. Nothing earthly will in any full measure compensate for the loss. Other human friendships may be very sweet, but they will not give back home with its shelter, its affection, its trust, its guidance, its soothing, its security.

But blessed is that life which in earthly homelessness can say, "Yet I am not alone, because Christ is with me." Blessed is that loneliness of homelessness which has Christ to fill the emptiness. With Christ unseen yet loved and made real to the heart by love and faith, even a room in a boarding house may become a home, a sanctuary of peace, a shelter of divine love.

Another time of special loneliness is when sorrow strips off the sweet friendships of life. Old age is an illustration. Old people are ofttimes very lonely. Once they were the centre of groups of friends and companions who clustered about them. But the years brought their changes. Now the old man stands alone. Still the streets are full; but where are the faces of forty, fifty years ago? There is a memory of vacant chairs, of marriage altars with the unbindings and separation that follow. The old faces are gone. It is the young life that now fills the home, the street, the church, and the old people are lonely because their old friends are gone.

Yet in Christ even old age can say, "I am not alone." No changes in life can take him away. He is the companion of life's feebleness. He loves the old people. There is a special promise for them: "Even to old age I am he; and even to hoar hair will I carry you." The christian old age is very near to glory. It will not be long before the old people reach home to stand again amid the circle of loved ones who blessed their youth and early years.

"So long thy power has blest me, sure it still will lead me on
O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till the night is gone,
And with the morn those angel faces smile
Which I have loved long since, and lost a while."

But not the old people only are left lonely by life's changes. Sorrow touches all ages, and if we have not Christ when other friends are taken, desolate indeed shall we be. Blessed is that life which, when human friends are taken away, finds the friendship of Christ all filling, all satisfying, and can say: "Yet I am not alone, for Christ is with me."

The loneliest of all human experiences is that of dying. We cannot die in clusters, not even two and two; we must die alone. Human hands must unclasp ours as we enter the valley of shadows. Human faces must fade from our vision as we pass into the mists. "I cannot see you," said one dying, as the loved ones stood about his bed. So it will be with each one of us in our turn. Human love cannot go beyond the edge of the valley. But we need not be alone even in that deepest of all loneliness, for if we are Christ's we can say, "Yet I am not alone, because my Saviour is with me." When the human hands unclasp, his will clasp ours the more firmly. When human loved faces fade out, his will shine above us in all its glorious brightness. When we must creep out of the bosom of human affection, it will be only into the clasp of the everlasting arms, into the bosom of Christ. Death's loneliness will thus be filled with divine companionship.

The inference from all this is our absolute need of the friendship and companionship of Christ, without which we can only sink away in life's loneliness and perish. One reason, no doubt, why our lives are so full of experiences of need is, that we may learn to walk with Christ. If earth's human companionships satisfied us, and if we never lost them, we might not care for Christ's. If earth's homes were perfect, and if they never crumbled, we might not grow homesick for heaven.—Westminister Teacher.

Be Content.

Be content with such things as ye have. Some people have better things; others have worse. You, perhaps, cannot have the better, and you have no desire for the worse; then be content with what you have. You may have had better things in the past, you may have worse things in the future. Be thankful for the present, and be content. If your lot is a hard one, you may improve it, but not by murmuring, fretting, or repining. Just here, to-day, learn the lesson of contentment, and wait on God for brighter days, for richer fruits, for purer joys.

No blessing comes to the murmuring, complaining, discontented heart. When once this evil demon of discontent has entered into the soul, nothing is right. Even the "angel's food" was not enough for the murmuring Israelites, and "the corn of heaven" could not satisfy those whose souls were filled with the discontent of earth. But where once the heart has found its rest in God, and all its murmurings are hushed in sweet submission to his will, there is peace in believing, and joy in the Holy Ghost, and a hallowed confidence in the kind providence of him who hath done all things well. "Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have; for he has said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee. So that we may boldly say, the Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me."—The Christian.

The Skeptic's Lesson.

HOW THE READING OF A BIBLE OPENED AN INFIDEL'S EYES.

Two men were once traveling in the far west. One was a skeptic, the other a christian. The former was on every occasion ready to denounce religion as an imposture and professors as hypocrites. According to his own account of the matter, he always suspected those who made pretensions to piety, felt particularly exposed in the company of christians and took special care of his horse and watch when the saints were around him. They had traveled late one evening and were in the wilderness.

They at last drew near to a solitary hut, and rejoiced in the prospect of a shelter, however humble. They asked admission and obtained it. But it was almost as dreary and comfortless within as without, and there was nothing prepossessing in the appearance of its inhabitants. These were an elderly man, his wife and two sons, sunburned, hardy and rough. They were apparently hospitable, and welcomed our travelers to such homely fare as the forest afforded; but this air of kindness might be assumed to deceive them, and the travelers became seriously apprehensive that evil was intended. It was a lonely place, and well suited to deeds of robbery and blood. No help was at hand.

The two friends communicated to each other their suspicions, and resolved that on retiring to their part of the hut, they would barricade the door against the entrance of their host; that they would have their weapons of defense at hand; that they would alternate in watching, so that one should be constantly on his guard while his companion slept. Having hastily made their arrangements they joined the family, partook of the homely meal, and spoke of retiring to rest. The old man said it had been his practice in better times, and he continued it still, before his family retired to commend them to God, and if the strangers had no objection, he would do so now. The christian rejoiced to find a brother in the wilderness, and even the skeptic could not conceal his satisfaction at the proposition.

The old man then took down a well-worn Bible, on which no dust had gathered, though age had marked it, and read with emphasis a portion of the sacred Scriptures. He then supplicated the divine protection, acknowledged the divine goodness, and prayed for grace, guidance and salvation. He prayed, too, for the strangers—that they might be prospered in their journey, and when their earthly journey was done they might have a home in heaven. He was evidently a man of prayer, and that humble cottage was a place where prayer was wont to be made.

The travelers retired to their apartment. According to their arrangement the skeptic was to have the first watch during the night, but instead of priming his pistols and bracing his nerves for an attack, he was for lying down to sleep as quietly as if he had never thought of danger. His friend reminded him of their engagement, and asked where he had lost his apprehension of danger. Ah, the infidel felt the force of the question and all it implied, and had the frankness to confess that he could not but feel as safe as at a New England fireside in any house or in any forest where the Bible was read as the old man read it and prayer offered as he prayed.—Christian Herald.

Dr. Pierson Speaks Out.

The discussion of the denominational standing of Dr. Arthur T. Pierson has been ended by the man who alone could end it, and who might have ended it long ago if he had so chosen, namely, Dr. Pierson. Twice within the past week, once in a letter to the Philadelphia Presbytery, and again in a letter to the editor of the New York Tribune, he has most positively and explicitly stated that he is a Presbyterian, loyal to his church, in no sense a Baptist in conviction. To his Presbytery he narrates, almost in a tone of apology, the circumstances of his connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle pulpit. He makes it clear that he intends nothing more than to supply the pulpit for a time, and he accepts an invitation to do this mainly because he is under appointment as the "Alexander Duff Lecturer on Missions," which will necessitate his presence in Scotland in February and March. "It seemed God's will," he says, "that I should accept the invitation of the Metropolitan Tabernacle for the months of the coming autumn and winter, not otherwise pre-occupied by this lectureship, so it is probable I shall sail for England October 22d."

This is quite satisfactory. We have known, in numerous cases, Baptists to supply Presbyterian pulpits for months at a time, without any question being raised on either side as to the propriety of the arrangement. There can be no objection to a Presbyterian's supplying a Baptist pulpit. That is purely a matter for the parties directly interested to settle. If it had been stated in first place as Dr. Pierson now states it, the matter would probably have provoked no comment whatever. But it was given out from the first that Dr. Pierson was invited to become the permanent incumbent of the Tabernacle pulpit; it was also publicly and frequently stated that he had preached believers' baptism in that pulpit, and had declared there that "only a little thing separated him from Baptists"; men who claimed to know his opinions proclaimed that he was a Baptist in sentiment, and that he would have been one in form before this but for certain obstacles. Only within the last week a pastor wrote me to say that he knew Dr. Pierson would have been baptized within the past few weeks but for an offensive paragraph in a denominational paper, and urged the The Examiner to assure him of a warm welcome among Baptists if he chose to join us.

We do not undertake to decide just how much of this is unfounded gossip, and how much is misinterpretation of what Dr. Pierson may have said or done. He does not seem to have been excessively frank in declaring himself plainly. Mr. Spurgeon has left on record, we believe, that he supposed Dr. Pierson to be a Baptist when he invited the Presbyterian divine to supply his pulpit during his (as he hoped) temporary disability. The Tabernacle people certainly have a very different idea of Dr. Pierson's convictions and denominational attitude than he now avows. We do not say that he has intentionally misled them, but he has practiced a prudent reticence that has given them an opportunity to infer far more than he is willing to confirm. We think that when the Tabernacle people read his present, outspoken avowal of Presbyterianism, there will be a strong revulsion of feeling among them regarding Dr. Pierson's fitness for the permanent occupancy of their pulpit. They have been cherishing the illusion that he was more than half a Baptist, and the discovery that he is all Presbyterian will be anything but pleasing. At least, that is how we understand the situation of things in the Tabernacle church, from the testimony of those who have been on the ground during the past summer and have personally looked over the field and conversed with some of the most influential members.

Dr. Pierson has done well to put himself on record. Nobody can accuse him of any undue haste in the premises, but he has spoken at his own time and in his own way, and what he says cannot be misunderstood. He has chosen to speak somewhat harshly of those who have, as he claims, misrepresented him. For that, we take leave to say, he has himself chiefly to thank. Rumors about him have been plenty as blackberries for months past, and a single word from him would have settled them long ago. It is not strange that what he did not think it worth while to contradict many people had begun to think must be true.—Examiner.

Compact Truths.

What is the gospel? It is a warm-hearted invitation from the throne of God to all the world to come and be saved. It is the heart of God's affection flowering out into immortal bloom.

The church aisle may be made the road to heaven. Many a man who was unaffected by what the minister said has been captured for God by the christian word of an unpretending layman on the way out.

How do I know that there is only one God? I know it just as the boy knew it when his teacher asked him how many Gods there are. He said: "There is but one." "How do you know that?" inquired the teacher. The boy replied: "There is only room for one, for he fills the heavens and the earth."

The chief glory of God comes after the rain. No shower, no rainbow; no trouble, no brightness of christian consolation. Weavers are sometimes, by reason of their work, dusty and rough in their apparel; and so it is the coarse clad tempest, whose hand and foot swing the shuttle, that weaves the rainbow.

It is as natural for some people to attack others as it is for a hound to go after a hare. There are in every community great factories of falsehood that run day and night because the demand is so large. The reason that so many people become soured with the world and misanthropic is that they believe all they read and hear about the moral deficits of others. Almost everybody, before he dies, is lied about.

Look out for those athletic men and women who will not work. When the French nobleman was asked why he kept busy when he had so large a property, he said: "I keep on engraving so I may not hang myself." I do not care who the man is, you can not afford to be idle. It is from the idle classes that the criminal classes are made up. Character, like water, gets putrid if it stands too long.—Talmage.

A Drawing Preacher.

Certainly we need to draw congregations, but we need to look well by what means we do it. A brother who had taken charge of a prominent church in a fashionable city announced from Sabbath to Sabbath sensational themes to draw the crowd. He said, "I will first get these worldly people to church; I will show them that I am up with them in the study of all the phases of [illegible] thought; I will teach them to respect my information and my ability, and then I will hold a protracted meeting and carry the gospel to their consciences, convert them and bring them into the church." The first part of the programme was carried out successfully; the second failed. The protracted meeting was held, but no revival, and with the most earnest preaching the congregation dwindled. The preacher seemed [illegible] ing a part in his earnest efforts, compromised himself and his [illegible] the method which he had used congregation.—Southwestern

"STAND YOUR GROUND."

Such is the rather military expression used to denote the importance of one who occupies a certain post, or holds certain ground, to stand there, until he who has placed him there orders him away. The Apostle Paul was fond of military illustrations, and often uses them in exhorting and encouraging christians in the spiritual warfare in which they are engaged. The memorable passage found in Eph. 6: 10-18, shows the heroic mould and the military instinct of this veteran soldier of Christ.

Secular warfare, as much as it is to be deplored, and notwithstanding the death and destruction that follow in its wake, throws a great deal of light on the spiritual warfare in which Christ's soldiers are engaged. In secular warfare there must always be a head, a commander-in-chief, whose orders must be implicitly obeyed. So in spiritual warfare there is a Head, and that Head is Christ, the Captain of the Lord's hosts, and his orders must be strictly obeyed by his people; by preachers and by those to whom they preach. We, as Baptists, believe in a divine call to the ministry. We believe that if God requires a man to preach his word he impresses that fact so forcibly upon his mind, heart and conscience that he cannot shake off the conviction; that go where he may it will follow him, and that, if need be, the Lord will place him in circumstances, or so hedge in his way, that he will feel woe be to him if he preach not the gospel.

Such being the case, and these facts being included more or less in the experience of every minister called to preach God's word, it follows that ministers of the gospel are, in a special sense, Christ's soldiers, and are under special obligation to obey orders. On this account we contend that no young minister has the inherent right to select his field of labor, or decide to remain in his own country preaching to the home people, until he lays the matter before the Lord, and asks him to indicate through his providence what he would have him to do. If the Lord has called him, then he is in a peculiar sense set apart to do his work, and he ought to be anxious to commence work where the Saviour needs him. If he is needed in the foreign field he ought to be willing to go there; if in an humbler sphere than he thinks his talents qualify him to fill at home, he ought to be willing to fill it.

Christ is the Captain of the Lord's hosts. His eyes constantly survey the field of conflict between his army and that of the adversary. He knows where the line is strong, and he knows where it is weak; so if as ministers we are willing to follow the leadings of his providence, we will make no mistakes, because he makes none. It is to be noticed that Christ commends the faith of the Roman centurion who had sent for him to heal one who was dear to him when he asked Christ to "speak the word" and his servant should be healed, because he had only to speak the word of command and the soldiers under him obeyed. It is right here that difficulty occurs not only with our younger but also with older ministers. They do not always seem to be aware of the peculiar relation existing between them and him whose service they have entered and whose orders they ought to obey. They are willing to fight for the Master, but they desire to do so in places of their own selection. Some want bomb proof positions when they are needed at the front, at posts of danger, where the conflict rages most fiercely. Some stout, hearty young men that are amply able to "endure hardness" as good soldiers of Christ want easy pastorates and soft places. Some veterans whose services are valuable on account of age and experience sometimes sigh for and seek an easy place in the rear, when the Master still needs them at the front, or in active service. All this we think is wrong. What right, brother, have you to decide to leave the post where you think the Lord directed you, without first knowing the mind of the Lord?

Our system of church government, and our theory concerning the best manner of supplying pastorless churches, and pastors needing churches, demand that churches and pastors should seek the divine guidance in supplying vacant pastorates, and that when a pastor goes to a field he and the people whom he goes should feel that the Lord directed him there. If the Lord [illegible] him there, then he has a work [illegible] and he has no right to abandon [illegible] done. The hasty [illegible] brethren sometimes occupy [illegible] fields to which they have [illegible] the hasty manner in which churches that call them conclude they need another pastor even before one year has elapsed, is rather a sad commentary on our theory regulating pastoral supply, and furnishes conclusive proof that some of our people, including some of our preachers, have a very dim perception of the fact that the Lord has much to do with the coming or going of pastors.

The truth of the above remark is seen, especially so far as some of our ministers are concerned, when in the providence of God they are called to and accept churches in what are considered unhealthy sections of country. It is too often the case that worthy pastors accept such fields, and before twelve months have elapsed are seeking earnestly to go elsewhere, claiming that the place, or section of country, does not agree with them, or with one or more members of their households. Now for brethren thus situated, we have profound sympathy. We know somewhat by experience what a great blessing physical health and comfort are. It is sad and trying for the minister to be stopped in his work from time to time to watch perhaps by the bedside of a loved wife or child. But after all, dear brethren, somebody must occupy the sickly fields—why not you as well as some other brother? Are you not enduring hardness as a good soldier of Christ, to suffer if need be, in this way? If a general sends a captain to a post, in the movements of secular warfare, does he allow him to leave it because he discovers that there is "some malaria in the air;" because the water is not good, or because he has had a chill or two? So if the Lord has placed you, brother, where there is malaria, bad water, &c., &c., "stand your ground" like a man until he needs you elsewhere. He has a regard for the health and physical comfort of his soldiers, but there must be suffering—yes, suffering and sacrifice—in this warfare in which we are engaged, and if you are at a post where you are suffering it shows more manhood for you to stand your ground until the Lord needs you elsewhere. We must have the moral heroism to "present our bodies as living sacrifices, holy, acceptable unto God, and regard such as our reasonable service.

WOMAN AS A HELPER IN THE GOSPEL.

Baptists have always recognized women as help meets to men in all good works. They never object to woman's work for Christ, but only to those methods of work and those sorts of work which come in conflict with her sphere in life as man's "help-meet."

Paul says, 1 Tim. 2: 12—14, "I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed, then Eve. And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression." Woman was made for man's companion and helper—"a help meet for him," a help like him and near him. Being made after him and "for him," she is out of her proper sphere when she attempts to "usurp authority over him." This is true in gospel work, as well as in human work. The Bible intended woman to be a helper of man in every good work. So the Apostle Paul in Phil. 4: 3, says, "I entreat thee, true yokefellow, help those women that labored with me in the gospel." Paul's first helper in the gospel at Philippi was a woman named Lydia. How did she help? She and other women were holding a female prayer meeting. They had Paul to preach to them. "She attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul." She offered a home for Paul and Silas while they were preaching in the city. She did not attempt to teach them, nor to usurp authority over them, but she "helped them in the gospel" without getting out of her sphere. So the woman at the well of Samaria helped the Saviour in the gospel. When convinced by his teaching that he was the Messiah, she left her waterpot and went into the city and said to the men, "Come see a man that told me all things that ever I did. Is not this the Christ?" She did not mount a desk and harangue the men, but simply told them in a woman's way what she had seen and heard, and asked them to come and see and judge for themselves. Mary Magdalene, Joanna, the wife of Chusa, Susanna and many other women helped the Saviour and the twelve by ministering unto him of their substance, when "he went throughout every city and village preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God." (Luke 8: 1—3).

And Priscilla, the wife of Aquilla, with her husband, helped the eloquent and learned Apollos by taking him unto them and expounding unto him the way of the Lord more perfectly.

These are all noble examples of how women used to help in the gospel. The wives of our missionaries at home and abroad are still doing the same sort of work.

But when women neglect their duties at home and go about over the country haranguing public assemblies, religious or political, it seems to us that they are clearly out of their sphere.

There is an abundance of work for pious women to do in providing food and raiment for the poor, in teaching in the Sunday school and around the fireside, in ministering to the sick, in reading the Scriptures to the afflicted, in looking after those things which make homes what they ought to be, to engage all their powers of mind, heart and hand, without their usurping the places of husbands, engaging in public discussions, delivering lectures before mixed assemblies, or presuming to undertake the evangelistic or pastoral work of the churches.

Among the most beautiful pictures of the Old Testament are those of Hannah taking the little coat which she had made for her son Samuel when he was training for the priesthood and judgeship of Israel; Ruth, deserting her country and her kinsmen to become incorporated among God's people; and Esther, by her womanly influence, inspired by the beauty of person which she inherited, saving the whole Jewish race from utter destruction. There is nothing unfeminine in the history of these three noble women. And yet what a power they all wielded for the world's good. Had Esther undertaken to meet Haman and overcome him in man's sphere of action, she would have been defeated. Fitting companion for these was Dorcas of Joppa who is described as "a woman full of good works and almsdeeds which she did."

FROM OUR TRAVELLING AGENT.

The West Chowan met with the church at Mt. Carmel, of which Bro. Herbert Williams is pastor. A light rain which fell on Tuesday added much to the comfort of those who attended the Association.

The churches were all represented, and upon a roll-call of the pastors they reported all pledges for last year paid.

There are some features in the conduct of the business of this Association which other Associations in the State would be greatly improved by adopting. For instance, the doing away with the reading of church letters. The churches in this Association send in their letters to the clerk, which are all tabulated before the meeting of the body. By this arrangement the clerk is enabled to make some comparative statements in reference to the work of the churches which are not only interesting, but which are of real value to the churches. These statements show which of the churches have gone forward in their work, and which, if any, have fallen behind the work of the previous year, and in every case the report shows what each church has contributed, and the average of each member of these churches. Everything of any interest in the church letters is in this way made known in one-tenth of the time ordinarily consumed in reading the letters as most Associations do.

Dr. R. W. Thomas was again elected moderator, and presided with his usual vigor and satisfaction to the body. The Doctor is an alumnus of Wake Forest College, and has by a life of usefulness and highest type of christian character reflected much honor upon his alma mater.

Bro. Parker, the clerk, put a number of us under obligations for the kind offices which we received at his hands at Seaboard on our way to the Association. I learned that he once wrote to the editor of the Recorder for a copy of the best prepared minutes of any Association in the State in order that he might improve on his own work, and what was his surprise when in a few days he received a copy of the minutes of the West Chowan Association which bore his own name as clerk.

We were all sorry to find Bro. Herbert Williams in feeble health. He was, however, able to attend the Association, and seemed to grow stronger by mingling with the brethren.

The introductory sermon by Bro. B. Craig showed good preparation on the part of the speaker. The thought in the discourse was good, and the manner of treatment was appropriate and well received by the congregation.

The brethren talked some about hard times, yet there was really not much evidence of it. I have never seen so many nice things to eat, and so much of it, at any Association in the State. The brethren were dressed well, and the ladies looked well, and many of them elegantly dressed. Some churches may have gone back in their pledges for next year, but taking the entire Association, it has obligated to do more next year than has been done the previous year.

The Association will support two young preachers during the present year at Wake Forest. It also, at the suggestion of Bro. Hufham, agreed to aid the State Mission Board in the work at Washington, N. C., which is in the bounds of the Tar River Association.

Bro. Cree, who has spent a year in the Association, was delighted with his first meeting of this sort. His speech on Foreign Missions was very good, exhibiting a wide range of knowledge on this subject.

The report on the Chowan Female Institute was read by Bro. T. G. Wood, and discussed by President Brewer. The report showed that the present session was larger than any previous session, and had more boarding pupils than any other Baptist female college in the State.

Dr. C. E. Taylor spoke on general education under somewhat trying circumstances owing to the lateness of the hour, and it was much regretted by the moderator and the friends of education that he did not have an opportunity such as the merits of his speech were entitled to. We hope, however, that the readers of the Recorder may see from his pen shortly what many of them have not been privileged to hear from him.

I met at the Association many brethren who have been constant readers of the Recorder for forty years. Their love and appreciation for the paper have grown through all these years. I was placed under renewed obligations to many of these, as well as some who are younger, for the help which they gave me in obtaining a fine list of subscribers.

Up to Nov. 4th, 1891, the Treasurer had received and acknowledged for State Missions, on that year's work, $10,473 98, and for this year's work to date, he has received for State Missions, as his report in this paper shows, $8,567.96. ....A singular case of discipline comes to us by which a member was turned out of the church for the sort of obituary he wrote upon the death of his wife. The party in question had been known to have lived for years disagreeably with his wife, yet when she died a short while ago the bereaved (?) husband wrote out and had published a long tearful obituary in which he set out the many amiable and lovely qualities of his dear departed, whereupon his church arraigned him for living one way with his wife and writing another way after she was dead, and promptly turned him out of the church. We heartily endorse the action of this church. If a church member can be as mean as the above would indicate, he ought at least to be forced to be consistent.

....A touching incident occurred at the annual meeting of the Pastors' College, London. Just at the conclusion of one of the addresses, Mr. Spurgeon, father of the late C. H. As the aged man walked up the hall the whole assembly rose, and in subdued tones sang, "Abide with me, fast falls the eventide." The prayer of the father of the great preacher, mingled as it was with flowing tears, touched every heart as he prayed: "We mourn his loss for thou didst make him of great use in this world. Bless the widow and the sons. Sanctify our bereavements. Soon we must follow. We know thou wilt never leave those who put their trust in thee."—N. Y. Observer.

Bethel Hill Church in Person County.

Editor Recorder:—On Sunday evening, Oct. 23d, there was brought to a close at this place one of the most interesting revivals that the writer ever took part in. The brethren had been praying and working for it for weeks, the chief end in view being to arouse the church members and to cause a reconsecration of the people to the Lord. Every time that we came together, we felt the presence of the Spirit and every christian heart was made to rejoice. It was indeed a glorious spiritual feast.

On the Saturday before the third Sunday, Bro. Beam, the pastor, preached a sermon from Gen. 13: 8, on strife between brethren. It was especially adapted to these times of political excitement, when, as is so often the case, fraternal ties are liable to be ruptured by sectionalism and prejudice.

On the third Sunday he commenced a series of sermons on what Christ has done, is doing, and will do for man, which—as they were presented to the people in an earnest and forcible manner—drew every believing heart in closer sympathy with a loving, crucified Saviour. These sermons were followed by one on the "Barren Fig Tree," and another on the "Consecration of our Hearts and Interests to God." These were, it seemed to the writer, enough to arouse any one to a sense of their duty by their Maker.

On last Sunday morning nine persons followed the Saviour in the ordinance of baptism, among them an aged blind lady who could with an eye of faith behold the one in whom blind Bartimeus trusted. It was a very impressive scene. In the evening the church gave a hand of christian love to the class of young ministers and other students who have lately arrived and commenced work at the Institute. How much it was appreciated can only be known by one who, like the writer, can speak from the depths of a truly grateful heart, and who, since he began to prepare himself for his sacred calling, has often had cause to thank God that his lot, for a short time at least, has been cast in such a neighborhood of generous, christian-hearted people as Bethel Hill. That God may bless them all will long be the prayers of many a grateful heart.

Yours fraternally,

CHAS. L. GRAVES.

Dr. Durham's Remarks Approved.

I wish to express my heartiest endorsement to Dr. Durham's communication respecting the closing of our churches to aid some movement outside of the church. As the Tabernacle was not closed I was not present at the mass meeting, but preaching to a large audience in our own place of worship, at the close of which service five persons requested prayers and one came out confessing Jesus Christ as his Saviour. I am therefore not able to pass any judgment upon the nature of the address given by Dr. George, although I met the gentleman the next morning, and desire success to the cause he represents (the better observance of the Sabbath, or rather, the Lord's day). But I do think it a mistake to close our churches and join in a great mass meeting to "boom"—pardon the word, but it is one the agents use themselves in such connection—some cause so general in its nature as to be confined to no particular church.

I do not think any who know me will charge me with either intolerance or narrowness. But this question of closing the house of God and forcing the people either to go to an overcrowded mass meeting or walking the streets, or staying at home is a serious thing. Besides, the churches must more and more do their own work in their own way. Whatever may be the wish of some hopeful brethren the fact remains that we are not all one in faith and practice, and as Baptists we have to stand to some extent by ourselves and not go too far in great union meetings that attempt to show how the Lord's work can better be done than we are doing it. Of course as citizens, philanthropists, and in many ways we can show our common interest with all others. But anything that tends to weaken the individual church is a mistake, and more, and should the churches realize the greatness of their opportunity and responsibility in giving the word of life to the people, and by faithful service watching until the Lord's return.

A Criticism Criticised.

Editor of Recorder:—As you know, I have no passion for newspaper controversy; but an occasion has come when it seems to me that it is my duty to ask for a little of your valuable space.

In your last issue, Bro. C. Durham severely criticises the meeting held in the First Baptist church of Raleigh on Sunday night, Oct. 23d. But his criticism, in my judgment, is more vigorous than judicious; and is certainly more miscellaneous than definite. Let me state the facts:

Several of the congregations of Raleigh joined in a meeting to emphasize the importance of Sabbath observance. The leading address was delivered by Dr. H. H. George, Field Secretary of the American Sabbath Union. Dr. George read Isaiah 58: 13, 14—"If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." He commented briefly upon the passage, and spoke upon the perils which threaten the sanctity of the Lord's Day. He especially emphasized the distribution of the mails, the running of railroad trains, the publishing of newspapers, and the opening of the Columbian Exposition on Sunday.

Not one word was said about any effort to obtain any legislation either from the State of North Carolina or the Congress of the United States. I cannot see that the enactment of righteous laws, either by the Legislature of North Carolina or the national Congress is an atrocious offence to be denounced in a religious newspaper. But in Dr. George's address there was not one point which, even by the dreamiest imagination could be construed into a legislative crusade, unless it was his earnest appeal to christians to use their influence, not to secure any new laws, but to prevent the repeal of the existing law which forbids the opening of the Exhibition at Chicago on the Lord's Day; and to that I add a hearty amen. Now, was the meeting that I have described a desecration of the Lord's Day? Bro. Durham says that it was, but I have not sense enough to see it.

More than once, I have, on the Lord's Day, tried to preach sermons on the sacredness and proper observance of the day. In these sermons I have protested against some of the evils which Dr. George opposed; but I never had the faintest suspicion that I was desecrating the day of rest and worship until Bro. Durham told me so, and I don't believe it now. Is the day so awfully sacred that we profane its sanctity, if we use an hour of it in urging the rightful observence? If a pastor wishes to preach on the value and claims of the Lord's Day, must he select a week day for the service? Shall we petition the Lord to give us an entirely new day to be dedicated to the work of preserving the day already given?

But, perhaps, it was the union of different congregations that provoked Bro. Durham's displeasure. If so, his reasoning is peculiar. If it is not wrong for one pastor and congregation to devote a portion of the Lord's Day to enforcing the Scriptural claims of the day, can it be wrong for several pastors and congregations to join in the service, when they are all in agreement upon the subject to be discussed? The logic which maintains that it may be right for one congregation to hold such a service, but wrong for several to unite in it, has, I think, already passed far beyond the vanishing point.

Brother Durham claims that the meeting which he criticises was somehow a desecration of the day which we regard; but that is merely his opinion, and my opinion is that his opinion is prejudiced and unjust.

Raleigh, N. C.

From Rev. J. A. Stradley.

Dear Recorder:—I am now near the close of my twenty seventh year with Amis Chapel church as pastor. We had a good meeting there in August. Seventeen were added to the church. All were delighted with the preaching of Bro. J. S. Hardaway during the meeting.

I have served Island Creek church as pastor about twenty years. We held a delightful meeting there last week. Fifteen have recently been added to the church. The people were much benefitted by the preaching of Rev. J. S. Hardaway during the meeting.

About seven years ago I began to preach, as a missionary, at Stovall, a small town on the Oxford and Clarksville Railroad. We have now a respectable church house and a self supporting church with 135 members. In July, Rev. J. H. Lamberth rendered valuable aid in a meeting with this church. Twenty-five were added to the church.

Seven or eight years ago, I began to preach in the neighborhood of what is now Rock Spring church. I preached then in private houses, tobacco barns, &c. Now we have a good house, with sixty-three church members. In July, being efficiently aided by Rev. R. VanDeventer, a meeting was held with this church. Eleven were added to her membership.

All these churches are in the Flat River Association. I have baptized sixty persons in these meetings.

It might be inferred from the above, that I am not much of a believer in frequent pastoral changes.

The Lord be praised for his goodness to my churches.

Larger Patronage for Wake Forest College.

What an inspring gathering a Baptist Association is! The groves filled with vehicles and neighing horses, the crowds of people overflowing from the house into the yard, the arguments and appeals of fervid orators, the boundless hospitality, the cordial greetings, all serve to justify the enthusiasm with which they are anticipated and attended. It has been my privilege within the last few weeks to attend several of these meetings in the interest of larger patronage for Wake Forest College. The multiplicity of objects now claiming the attention of the brethren does not allow much time for the public discussion of general education, and my work has been, for the most part, privately done. I have met more than twenty young men who are hoping at no distant day to attend the College, and have heard of several others.

But for the very great scarcity of money, I think that we should have three hundred students here next session. And we may have in spite of it, nay, because of it. In proportion as old methods pay less and less well, do our people appreciate more and more the value of education.

Elder James S. Purefoy used to hold a theory that, when seasons were good, and prices of tobacco high, and farmers prosperous, the latter cared little to educate their children, especially to give their sons collegiate training, thinking that they could do well enough without. But that when crops failed or prices fell, they would begin to see advantages in education as a means of livelihood even if not desirable on other grounds.

A few days ago, looking over Wheeler's History of North Carolina, I found the following reference to Wake Forest:

"The location of Wake Forest College is a very fortunate one. It is in Wake county, sixteen miles north of Raleigh, and immediately on the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad. Its distance from the distracting influence of towns, the healthiness of the surrounding country, the beauty of the scenery, and the elevated character of the inhabitants for intelligence and morality make it a fortunate location for a great literary institution.

The institution has gradually been gaining in public favor, is free from debt, and has the prospect of a speedy endowment. It has had a most happy influence upon the denomination that founded it, and has also contributed much to diffuse a lively interest in the cause of education throughout the State."

How much more true the last paragraph is now than when it was written forty years ago. A pretty good idea of the work of the institution is given in the General Catalogue. And no arithmetic is adequate to sum up the moral and educational forces that have been put into operation by the institution. Shall the future be unworthy of so useful a past? The answer is with the Baptist people of the State. Many have been the expressions of appreciation that have come to me in regard to the Catalogue.

This is from Georgia: "You can't imagine what a pleasure the Catalogue of old Wake Forest gave me this afternoon. I really felt good while looking through it, and wished that I might be again a student."

The next is from Alabama: "The General Catalogue has been received and has contributed greatly to my enjoyment. You are certainly entitled to the thanks of every loyal student and friend of the College. It supplies a demand which is natural to every man who has attended college, viz, the desire to know what has become of those who, like himself, left college with hearts beating and throbbing with high hope and expectation. The pleasure which it has afforded me has not been unmingled with sadness at the record of so many who have passed away—some in the bloom of youth, and many amid the strife and conflict of battle."

The last is from South Carolina: "The General Catalogue has been a source of much delight to me. How eagerly did I look for the names of the boys who were there from '75 to '79. The little said told me so much. Sometimes tears came to my eyes as I looked for the name of some bright, good fellow, and he had passed over the river. Little do we know how dear is the tie that binds us until we are separated. How often I have thought of the young men, and wanted to know just what the Catalogue tells me."

A friend showed me a few days ago a paper from Dixon, California, containing an account of a speech made in the opera house by our young friend, Walter Stradley. I venture to quote a few lines: "So much has been said in praise of this young man that a large percentage of the audience was present for the sole purpose of determining if what they had heard was true. They went home convinced that the half had not been told. Men of all parties alike pronounce him one of the ablest young political speakers on the stump. He concluded with a brilliant peoration and retired in the midst of a storm of applause."

Those who heard his oration on Gladstone, delivered in Memorial Hall during his senior year, will not be at all surprised at the ovation which he is receiving on the Pacific coast.

The Centennial Fund.

The Southern Baptist Convention has twice decided to attempt to raise during the current year $250,000 as a special fund for permanent work. This fund is to be divided equally between our Home and Foreign Boards, unless otherwise designated, and is to be used for Bible Translation, Chapel Building and the Church Edifice Fund—expences which once incurred will not need to be repeated. It is not designed that the raising of this fund shall in any way interfere with the regular contributions for the current work, indeed it is proposed that these contributions shall also be as largely increased as possible. So far there has been little specific effort to raise this fund, except what has been done by means of the Chapel Cards.

It became evident to the Centennial Committee that something more than this must be done if the money is to be raised. We have, therefore, secured the services for several months of Dr. W. D. Powell, who will devote himself to this work. Dr. Powell is too well known to need any commendation; and he is singularly gifted for such service. The Foreign Mission Board kindly releases him from his work in Mexico in order that he may labor for the raising of this permanent fund. He is to receive no extra salary.

The Committee congratulate themselves and also the denomination on securing Dr. Powell's services. He will visit such points as may be desired, on consultation with those in charge of the work in the different States; and we bespeak for him the hearty co operation of all Southern Baptists. His headquarters will be in Louisville, and his address will be care of the Baptist Book Concern.

If other leading churches would do as the Eutaw Place church, Baltimore, has done, they would not need a visit from Brother Powell, or from anybody else. It is the desire of Dr. Powell and also of the Committee that his time shall be used to the best advantage; and that he shall visit only those points where he is most needed, and where his visits will be likely to yield the best results. If the denomination will rally to this work, the raising of this or even a much larger amount will be rendered easy. May we not hope that the Centennial of Modern Missions furnishes a proper occasion, which the denomination will recognize, for a supreme effort to save the world.

Rev. J. W. Little's Work Greatly Blessed.

Dear Recorder:—There is one brother whose work the good Lord has greatly blessed, viz., Rev. J. W. Little. He has charge of seven churches and one mission station, has preached regularly (monthly) at each point, has baptized at the several places during the year 146, and about twelve others are to be baptized. Forty-two have joined by letter. The good Lord has greatly blessed his work.

Last year he baptized 110 on his work. There is no lukewarmness in him either winter or summer. The Spirit's power accompanies him. He is indeed a wonder; the power is not innate in him, neither to the swift or strong, but comes alone from Elijah's God. Yours in Christ,

BY SCATTERHEAD.

"We all do fade as a leaf."

In the language of an eloquent preacher, "Autumn is writing its autograph in crimson characters on the green sheet of summer." Many of the trees are now naked, which a few weeks ago were clothed with "living green." The fading, falling leaves indicate to us that winter is nigh. All nature speaks to us. God bids us listen to the voice of the fading leaf, which says in an unmistakable tone, "Man, you too are fading, and soon must fall." Men doubt many solemn and precious truths, on account of the heart being filled with unbelief, but no one doubts the truth, "We all do fade as a leaf." We are to learn a lesson from the fading leaf that death is certain, and even now upon our heels. A few weeks ago the green and beautiful leaf did not present any appearance of fading, but a few days have brought to our observation a marked change, that of decay and death. We know of a certainty that the elements of decay were in the leaf when in its beautiful state.

So with man. The elements of disease and death are lodged in the body of blooming youth, as well as the aged and infirm. Decay is unceasingly doing its work in our bodies, though unrealized by us and unobserved by others. "In the midst of life we are in death." Mortal life and death are linked together. David said, "There is but a step between me and death." Death is very close to us—"our companion" during our stay in the "earthly house." At times it may appear that we are nearer death than at other times, but we are not. Every moment brings us nearer dying, but not nearer death. It is said that life uses decay and death as its servants to minister to its varying wants, but soon the bondsmen become free, and the master makes his last fight for the supremacy, but has to yield and makes his final exit. God has spoken, "Dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return." Also, "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." "It is appointed unto men once to die." The history of all men, though great and good, with two exceptions, is they lived so many years and then died. Death must and will do its work. It is natural for man, being so engrossed with earth's cares and bewitched with the world's pleasures, to keep death from his sight, or a great ways off in the future. Satan would have the unconverted to walk over the endless gulf on a very "rotten covering" of his own manufacture. The living know they must die, but how many live as though they expected to spend eternity here! Moses saw this disposition in the hearts of the people in his day, and with his great loving heart burdened with the thought he exclaimed, "Oh! that they were wise; that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end." Man needs to be constantly reminded that this world is not his home. All nature speaks death; the thunders roar it; the tempests howl it; the gentle, passing breezes whisper it; the fading leaf and withering flower picture it."

"Death rides on every passing breeze,
And lurks in every flower;
Each season has its own disease,
Its peril every hour."

Death is not to be dreaded by the christian, since it is his servant to usher him into a grander, nobler sphere. Death tears down the old tent, and the occupant is "present with the Lord." Heaven to the redeemed soul is very near, just the body, a veil a few inches thick intervenes. Heaven is all around the heaven-born son. Let us at once discard the idea that heaven is so far away, when we know it is so near. Hell is as near to the unsaved as heaven is to the believer. The unbeliever steps out of the body into the place of the departed lost souls. Well may death have its terrors to the unconverted on account of its awful "sting" which to him has not been removed. "The sting of death is sin." To the one upon whom the wrath of God is abiding, because he has failed to believe on the Son, death indeed is armed with a terrible and fearful sting—the keen sense of guilt and the dark apprehension of the eternal suffering "to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." Most sinful men dread death, but with some the sting may be temporarily blunted through some delusions of Satan, such as there is no eternal hell, &c.; but alas, to the unsaved wretch, the stern reality will soon be experienced.

Death to the christian is a blessed sleep—sleep in Jesus—in fact, there is no death to the christian. The primitive christians were taught not to expect death, but to look for the "glorious appearing of the Son of God." "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye at the last trump." But we know if our Lord should tarry, we must shortly put off, through the servant the Lord will use, the tabernacle or house of flesh. All things are ours, even death. The great hymn-writer, Watts, makes death the dark entry through which the believer passes from one dark little room into another that is spacious and glorious. "Death to a good man is but passing through a dark entry, out of one little dusky room of his Father's house into another that is fair and large, lightsome and glorious, and divinely entertaining. Oh, may the rays and splendors of my heavenly apartment shoot far downward and gild the dark entry with such a cheerful gleam as to banish every fear when I shall be called to pass through."

The christian need not be concerned about dying, but he should be about living. We need to "live a dying life." There are fearful responsibilities involved in living. We need to forget ourselves and be occupied with Christ and the work he would have us to do. Many of us from our talk would seem to be more concerned about [illegible] about our blessed Lord. Many of God's people are very much concerned about death, which shows in them selfishness and a lack of faith in the Lord Jesus. If we live right and do the work the Master has assigned us, we will die right—will have his sweet and blessed presence when all creature help shall fail. Dying grace will be given at the dying hour. He has said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." Let us endeavor to keep our hearts fixed upon Jesus Christ forgetting everything but him, knowing that he has said in his word, "All things shall work together for our good if we love him." Let us fully trust him, yea, though he should slay us, and be wholly absorbed in him and his work. Many of us show marks of fading, which indicates to us that we are nearing home. Many resort to all kinds of artificial means to endeavor to obliterate the works of decay having an aversion to the furrowed cheek and the "blooming head." Let no christian be so foolish as to whitewash with lampblack his snowy locks, but let him remember if he be in the way of righteousness "his hoary head is a crown of glory," also, "The beauty of old men is the gray head." I am very uneasy about any brother, old or young, that uses much dye about his face; as a rule, the church should offer special prayers for the dyed brother. Satan is very apt to give him a mighty wallowing soon. "Straws show which way the wind blows." Let us pilgrims rejoice that we are "fading," that we are nearing our journey's end. Yes, a few more battles to be fought, a few more storms to meet, a few more rising and setting suns, a few more painful struggles, and the eternal Sabbath will dawn, and we will be welcomed into that house not made with hands. "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Sunday-school Society.

Putting a great truth mildly is to say that no other one agency has done, or is now doing so much for the establishment and improvement of Sunday-schools in this country as the American Baptist Publication Society. Through all the years the Society has managed to keep in advance of everybody in this important and most hopeful department of christian effort. How many large, efficient, influential Sunday-schools owe their present efficiency, directly or indirectly, to this great Society, we have no means of knowing. How many such schools, North, South, East, and West, are indebted, for the beginning of their existence, to this same truly national Society? How many poor, struggling schools are to day being helped by its donations? Who can tell? May all such Sunday-schools grow into great and still greater usefulness, and may the Society's ability for this blessed work ever increase!

The Art of Visiting.

First impressions count for much. A welcome should be cordial, deferential, as if in accordance of a favor. Response should be equally glad, yet timid, not as if the guest at once owned the new abode and its piano. A visit that begins on both sides with graceful cordiality, progressing toward eager sympathy, continues in hearty appreciation, and ends in enduring friendship.—Selected.

POKINE.

I have used the within remedy (Pokine) with great success. JAMES H. LASSITER.

I have used the Pokine Remedy (prepared by W. T. Cheatham, Jr.) in case of Sciatica with the result of positive relief in a few hours, and believe if used as directed is will effect a permanent cure.
J. L. H. MISSILLIER.

MARCH 6, 1891.

For the benefit of the public, I unhesitatingly recommend Cheatham's wonderful remedy, "Pokine," to all sufferers of rheumatism. It has produced marvelous results in my case. I was a sufferer of the malady for five years, and after taking a few bottles was entirely cured.
Very respectfully,
W. W. DOWTIN.

HENDERSON, N. C., March 7, '91.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM:
Dear Sir—My wife was down in bed with rheumatism, and the Pokine I bought of you gave her relief after taking four doses. She has not been troubled since. It is the best medicine she ever took for rheumatism. Respectfully,
ZACK DAVIS.

MR W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Dear Sir—I have been afflicted with rheumatism time and again, for the past thirteen years. I have received more relief from Pokine than any medicine I ever took, and therefore take great pleasure in recommending it to all sufferers of rheumatism. Very respectfully,
F. G. MITCHELL.

JANUARY 19, 1891.

W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Dear Sir—I desire to say that in January last I was down with rheumatism; my suffering was great, and I was completely prostrated. One bottle of your Pokine completely relieved me, and I have not had any rheumatism since. My son also was relieved of rheumatism by Pokine.
Yours truly,
CHARLES G. BURROUGHS.

Your rheumatic cure, Pokine, has completely cured me. I. M. GREEN.

Dear Sir—Being asked my opinion of your rheumatic remedy, Pokine, will gladly state I deem it the only medicine of its kind on the market that will accomplish that which is exclusively claimed for it. Being a sufferer of rheumatism, I consequently tried many remedies, until finally relieved by Pokine. Very respectfully,
J. A. KELLY.

Beautiful Lives.

Every man feels instinctively that all the beautiful sentiments in the world weigh less than a single lovely action; and that while tenderness of feeling and susceptibility of generous emotions are accidents of life, permanent goodness is an achievement and a quality of the life. "Fine words," says one homely old proverb, "butter no parsnips;" and if the question be how to render those vegetables palatable, an ounce of butter would be worth more than all the orations of Cicero. The only conclusive evidence of a man's sincerity is that he gives himself for a principle. Words, money, all things else, are comparatively easy to give away; but when a man makes a gift of his daily life and practice, it is plain that the truth, whatever it may be, has taken possession of him. From that sincerity his words gain the force and pertinency of deeds, and his money is no longer the pale drudge 'twixt man and man, but, by a beautiful magic, what erewhile bore the image and superscription of Cæsar seems now to bear the image and superscription of God.—J. Russell Lowell.

Seven Ways of Giving.

The careless way. To give something to every cause without inquiring into its merits.

The impulsive way. To give from impulse as much and as often as love and pity and sensibility prompt.

The lazy way. To make a special offer to earn money for benevolent objects by fairs, festivals, etc.

The self denying way. To save the cost of luxuries and apply them to purposes of religion and charity. This may lead to asceticism and self-complacence.

The systematic way. To lay aside as an offering to God a definite portion of our gains—one-tenth, one-fifth, one-third or one-half. This is adapted to all, whether poor or rich; and gifts would be largely increased if it were generally practiced.

The equal way. To give to God and the needy just as much as we spend on ourselves, balancing our personal expenditures by our gifts.

The heroic way. To limit our expenditures to a certain sum, and give away all the rest of our income. This was John Wesley's way.—Rev. A. T. Pierson.

"Rottenness in the Bones."

Inconsistent religious profession is far more dangerous than infidelity. The religious nature of man is a great wall about the faith. It must live because man must worship. But a dishonest, unfaithful, or unbelieving church member staggers the faith of the young and imperils many souls. The scoundrels we unmask every year have done us more harm than brilliant infidel lectures. The very men who hear the lectures and laugh loudest have something in them which makes them "believe and tremble." But the hypocrite makes the strained heart cry out: "Is there faith on the earth? Is all religious profession a cheat?" Our calling is not to profession—that goes before—but to practice, to clean, righteous, pure, manly living. Give the world that, and men will neither scoff nor laugh at the jeers of unbelievers.—Western Christian Advocate.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale says:

"I like to put myself on record also as saying that all the poverty, all the crime and all the vice which attract public attention in Boston among what we call the poorer classes, may be ascribed to the free use of intoxicating liquors. I have said a hundred times, and I am willing to say it again, that if anybody will take charge of all the poverty and crime which results from drunkenness, the South Congregational church, of which I have the honor to be minister, will alone take charge of all the rest of the poverty which needs 'outdoor relief,' in the city of Boston. If that church could satisfy its conscience with as small work as that it would certainly relieve its visiting forces and its treasury of a very considerable part of the demands now made upon them."

If you will look into the oldest book of biographies on the globe, you will find that the men who have conquered the strongest temptations have had not only the courage of their convictions, but have had the indwelling power of God. Joseph, spurning a tremendous temptation, not because Potiphar saw him, but because God saw him; Daniel, facing both a laugh in the palace and the lions in the royal park; Paul, defying Nero because "the Lord stood with me and strengthened me"—these are the models for your imitation. Good impulses are abundant and cheap. They will never hold you in a sharp fight unless you have the staying-power which Christ imparts. To stand the sneers of scoffers, to resist the rush for sudden wealth, to conquer fleshly appetites, to hold an unruly temper under control, to keep passions subdued, and to direct all your plans and purposes straight toward the highest mark, requires a power above your own. Christ's mastery of you will give you self-mastery; yes, and mastery over the powers of darkness and of hell. Faith will fire the last shot, and when the battle of life ends, you will stand among the crowned conquerors in glory.—Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

We can no more please God without absolutely separating ourselves from the world than we can fly. I know some professed christians who dance, play cards, drink beer, violate the Sabbath, and do many things which can only fail to characterize one as a true follower of the Christ our Lord. Would to God we could do or say something to cause one to shake off the yoke of bondage which sin has placed on him. Now brother, sister, "All things are possible to him that believeth."—W. H. Mayfield in American Baptist.

A Scientific View of Tobacco Using.

Tobacco using is more or less injurious to all those who use it. Some are injured much more than others. Persons of a nervous organization are generally more injuriously affected by it than some others. They are rendered more nervous, more excitable, more irritable and more liable to diseases of the nervous system. Persons who inherit tendencies to insanity are more likely to become insane if they use tobacco. Many diseases are attributed to the use of tobacco. Its use undoubtedly predisposes many of its subjects to disease. The effects of tobacco using does not end with those who use it, but may be handed down to their children. The children of excessive tobacco users are more nervous because of it, and if the mothers used tobacco as extensively as the father, the human race would be in danger of extinction.—Phrenological Journal.

More Light from the Book.

Do not let yourself be argued or laughed out of your reverence for the Bible. Thousands besides Gladstone esteem it to-day more than ever "The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture."

Despite all that the "higher critics" and the Bob Ingersolls have done to weaken its hold upon the educated and the popular mind, it is more reverenced and reverenced by more, more studied and studied by more, than ever before.

As men become more hospitable to facts and less wedded to theories, they realize more and more what John Robinson of Heddington said long ago, "There is more light still tobreak forth from God's Word."—G. B. E., in Young People's Union.

Three things to love—courage, gentleness and affection.

Three things to hate—cruelty, arrogance and ingratitude.

Three things to delight in—frankness, freedom and beauty.

Three things to wish for—health, friends and a cheerful spirit.

Three things to avoid—idleness, loquacity and flippant jesting.

Three things to pray for—faith, peace and purity of heart.

Three things to contend for—honor, country and friends.

All our city fathers say: Use Salvation Oil, the greatest cure on earth for pain, for rheumatism and neuralgia. 25 cents.

The Union Theological Seminary has, by an all-but unanimous vote, decided to repudiate its agreement of 1870 with the Presbyterian General Assembly, by which this body was given a right of veto on the appointment of professors. The legal ground on which action is taken, by advice of eminent counsel, is that the courts of this State have decided that a corporation must itself exercise all of its powers, and cannot delegate any of them to another. It does not appear, however, that the courts have denied a corporation's right to agree to exercise its right in a certain way. The compact was, no doubt, one that the law might decline to enforce; but the question is, Was it not such an agreement as honorable christian men are bound to observe, by a higher law than that of all civil statutes?—Examiner.

Affairs in Japan.

Few, if any, more auspicious changes have occurred in politics than the recent reorganization of the Cabinet and the return of well-known and honored leaders to power.

When Count Inouye and Count Ito resigned their positions and retired to private life, the control of affairs fell into the hands of new and untried men, and it seemed inevitable that serious and irreparable loss must be the result, and all the bright hopes of the past were to be disappointed.

But greatly to our surprise and relief, there has been accomplished a happy change in affairs, and the outlook for Japan to day is brighter than ever. What is evidently needed at this time is the presence of the best and ablest men at the head of the government. Constitutional government is an experiment thus far; and it is inevitable that for years to come there must be a strong and wise administrative power to check what is wrong and enforce the right.

So we have now most happily in the new ministry the ablest and most popular statesmen that the country can furnish. At the head is Count Ito once more, and associated with him is Count Inouye as Minister of Home Affairs.

To these two men more than to any others does Japan owe her present position and progress; and with years of experience in the administration, they are without question the two men to be at the head of the Cabinet and the chief advisers of the Emperor.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs is Mr. Mutsu, who was for several years the Japanese Minister at Washington, and who has thus the experience that especially fits him for such a position. It is not too much to expect that under his administration there will be some better adjustment of the present question of extra territoriality and the relations of foreign residents to the government. The recent attempt to force concessions from the foreign powers, by limiting the privileges of the foreign residents here, and making the situation more uncomfortable, has not been helpful to Japan, and is making the question of coming under Japanese control still more serious and questionable.

The question that will especially interest the christian people in the United States is the probable attitude of the present and new ministry toward missionaries and their work. I think that it is the general opinion that we owe to the men now in power the liberty that we now enjoy; and more than that, they have shown a sincere and intelligent sympathy with what has been done.

As proof of this I need only mention the liberal donation of 1000 yen (about $800) toward the Doshisha at Kyoto by Count Inouye. Count Ito signified his approval of the work and promised his aid. No institution in the country has been more decidedly christian in its character.

The erection at Yamaguchi, by Count Inouye, of a suitable building for the use of Rev. Dr. Beck in teaching his Bible class, and his liberal construction of the restrictions contained in the passports, are direct and tangible proofs that missions will not suffer from any action on the part of those now at the head of the government.

The discussion of theological questions is becoming less prominent, and the pastors and other christian workers are settling down to more steady and effective work for the salvation of souls. It has become evident to many that there is no new and better method for the conversion of sinful men than the old theories of redemption through Christ, and the necessity of the work of the Holy Spirit in sanctifying the heart

And the happy result is that extensive revivals are reported from many quarters, and a most hopeful state of things has taken the place of the deadness and indifference of the past. The greatness of the difficulties and the inadequacy of human means are being felt everywhere, and so there is a turning to the true source of success in all mission work, and that is the help of God.

Some think that there are enough missionaries in Japan to accomplish all that is needed to make this a christian nation Others think differently. But one thing is certain, that it is not by an increase of numbers alone that these hard hearts are to be subdued and won to Christ. God chose only three hundred to overthrow the Midianite host; and with his help we shall have success, whether the helpers be multiplied or not.

No doubt there is still room for many more good men, and in some places they seem to be sadly needed, but we need even more than all, such a baptism of the Spirit as will make the truth effective in the convincing men of sin and their need of a Saviour. That God is showing his power and willingness to save should call forth the gratitude of all hearts.

The Rev. I. H. Correll, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, reports that he has recently been through a large part of Kiushiu, and the work is in a very prosperous condition. The people are very attentive to preaching and the congregations are quite large. He has recently visited the Loochoo Islands, and brings back a glowing account of the reception given him. He preached several times. At the first service he had about one hundred present, two hundred at the second, and four hundred at the third. Everywhere he went he was most kindly received, and was urged to commence work on the islands. The Baptists have a native worker there now.

The school for boys connected with the Southern Methodist church at Kobe is soon to be enlarged. It has shown a constant growth since its organization three years ago. In a recent letter from the Rev. Mr. Wainwright, he says that "We have been having a very gracious work of the Holy Spirit in our school. It has been a glorious season with us, and we believe there will be much fruit unto the salvation of souls as a consequence of this blessing." The Southern Presbyterian Mission has recently opened work in Takamatsu, on the island of Shikoku, and are meeting with much success.

The conference of the missionaries of the American Missionary Union (Baptist) has recently been in session at Yokohama. The report says: "The work of the year shows progress. About twice the number that were received the previous year have been baptized into the church." Rev. J. H. Pettee writes that the late annual meeting of the representatives of the Congregational churches at Osaka was the best all-round meeting ever held. About eighteen months ago a native pastor was first stationed by the mission of the Evangelical Association at Togane, near Tokyo. The work has steadily increased, so that the present church-membership is forty-five, and ten more are ready to be baptized. Quite a revival spirit has appeared in the schools of the Methodist church at Nagasaki.

The two churches at Hachoji have recently united in holding special or revival meetings, which have been attended with good results. New interest has been awakened, the attendance at the churches has gradually been increasing, and a number of applicants for baptism are reported.—Rev. H. Loomis, Yokohama, Japan, in Missionary Review.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Letter from Wadesboro.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I am again a pastor not far from the place I first found a shelter from the rigors of colder winters among the pines of the Old North State. September first I took charge of the church at this place.

Wadesboro, as many know, is beautifully situated among the hills of the Pee-Dee section. "No better people than the Wadesboro people" is the witness of a former pastor, and already I believe his statement, for I have seen the proof, in most convincing ways. Intelligent, earnest, consecrated, loyal to the truth, they are equally generous in their treatment of the pastor. They know how to lay a man helpless at their feet. One night last week they rushed into the parsonage with overflowing numbers, and in a moment they had built a pyramid in the hall with gifts varied, valuable and rare. What could a man say under such circumstances in answer to the challenge for "a speech." Thanks now, dear friends, if our stammering tongue did fail to rightly utter them.

Very valuable improvements in the way of additional rooms have been made to the parsonage during the recent months. We now own property, both church and parsonage, which do credit to the town and will answer our needs for the next generation. The growth here has been of the best kind in every sense; and I enter upon the labors of other men with both gratitude and pride.

THE ANSON ASSOCIATION

convened Oct. 20th—23d with the Rocky River church in the northern border of Anson county. A few miles distant from the present building, Morgan Edwards first planted the Baptist banner 118 years ago. The Rocky River church has had a continuous history down to the present time, and though much reduced in numbers by the colonies she has sent out to establish other churches, the old mother still gives promise of long life and continued usefulness.

The delegates were slow assembling, and it was not until noon of the second day that all the churches were represented. The reports were in a few cases very fine, in a still larger number fairly good, while in some churches very little progress had been made.

The Association re elected Dr. Covington, Moderator. The first sermon was preached by the writer on Foreign Missions. No visitors were present from a distance, but the objects of the Convention were fairly considered. The discussions were interesting, and at times impressive. Besides the pastors who take active part in the proceedings, this Association has a number of laymen who speak well. The impression made on me by this first visit was, that while much land remains yet to be possessed, the Anson Association is making steady and hopeful progress. But for the short crops and long politics, the work of the present year would have been far more inspiring in its results. The next session will be held at Morven.

J. W. WILDMAN.

From Rev. G. M. Webb.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Our work on the old Deep River is in good trim. At Randleman, the church is growing. The brethren are hopeful. The church at Worthville is in the same condition. I preached three sermons at Central Falls last week, and on Sunday evening I baptized two. The young lady shouted as she came out of the river. We expect to organize a Baptist church there soon. I commence a meeting at Ashboro next Sunday. Rev. S. F. Conrad of Winston will help me.

I held a meeting at Ramseur's this summer with good results. The church seemed edified and there were some conversions. I also held a few days and nights meeting at Cedar Falls, where I think good seed were sown and good results will follow. Bro. Hilliard helped me at Ramseur's, and Brother Harman at Cedar Falls.

Fork Church.

Dear Recorder:—I am just home from Fork church, Davie county, where I have been preaching five days for Bro. J. D. Newton, pastor. Up to last night there had been about forty professions, and the interest still the best. I had to come so as to fill my pulpit to-morrow. Surely it was a great meeting.

Two Interesting Native Sects in North China.

There are in China many native religious sects, but I desire now to speak of only two. One is called "The Abstaining from Meat Society," and the other the "Lao T'sin Men Society," which means "Venerable Gate of Heaven." The members of the first one, called by the natives "Kii tsaity," will eat no flesh, nor any onions or garlic. They are strong believers in penance, and that by a constant self denial and suffering the ultimate good is to be attained. They have chants and also burn incense. They have leaders, who answer somewhat to pastors with us. Where there are wealthy persons members, they are expected to give. These preachers do not preach for money, but because they desire to propagate their doctrine. Several of our best christians here were formerly members of this Society, and still do more or less of voluntary telling of the new and better doctrine which they have learned.

"The Venerable Heavenly Gate Society" claims to be nearly three hundred years old. They meet once a month—the women on the 15th, and the men on the 22d—as their "commandments" forbid their meeting together. They also have pastors, one of whom will often look after the disciples in several villages. They have a spare room in the home of some members set apart for a meeting place. The leader hears the disciples confess their sins before a burning stick of incense on a table, and guarantees that they will not again be repeated. These leaders or pastors do not hold their office for pay. They all share the expense of the incense, and they meet in the house of the pastor often and share his hospitality. They are also forbidden by their "commandments" to use the Society for personal gain.

These two organizations and their customs, all purely native, show clearly that if christianity becomes planted in the hearts of the Chinese, that they will spread it and that a native ministry among them is entirely possible and practicable. We all crave to see natives who, under the guidance of God's Spirit, will go forth, hearts filled with love, to tell their new found doctrine to others in their families or villages. This Society has a number of members in various villages in the Pingtu region. One of the first persons to become interested in christianity there was one of these pastors in this native Society. But the first visit he made to one of the missionaries, he proposed that he and one of his disciples would join the "foreign church," provided he could get a preacher's place and his disciple a teacher's place—with foreign money for wages, of course. This was after he had for years enthusiastically and without reward proclaimed this native doctrine. But it is so common for missionaries to "employ" their converts to do religious work, that now heathen often come to us, with all honesty of heart, with just such a proposition as did this man. It is because of the fact that so many missionaries have been so anxious for converts as to seem willing to pay for them. The missionary to whom this proposition was made rejected it at once and gave him to understand that we were not doing such a business as he had supposed. But he seemed to have a deeper desire for spiritual things than for a "place" and persevered, and after giving evidence of conversion, he was baptized among the first converts there, and the church organized out of those then baptized has met in his house ever since its organization. He has also done no little voluntary preaching of the "Jesus doctrine," and several of those who were formerly under his care in the native Society are now members of our little church. It is from such men as he is that we are to expect the gospel to spread ultimately in China—men who get so filled with christianity that they cannot refrain from telling it to others. He has learned to read since meeting with christianity at nearly fifty years of age and without any school. I believe that he is better qualified to day to give Christ to his countrymen than many of those who have been taken in their childhood by the foreigner, educated to the topmost notch and then "put in charge" of some sections far from their homes to preach, when the first and most lasting impression many of them make is that christianity is a good thing, because it takes pity on their poverty and pays them to declare its doctrines. I believe in "education in the ministry, but not for the ministry," as I have so often heard Prof. Taylor express it. I do long to see the time when Chinamen will be fired with the same zeal and love which so highly distinguished our fathers in the early Baptist history of the United States! Oh, that we may not cut off the opportunity for the manifestation of such zeal and fervor!

This "Lao Tein Men" sect has "ten commandments," which I subjoin:

1. "It is not permitted to revile men."
2. "It is not permitted for men and women to congregate together."
3. "It is not permitted to lie nor cheat."
4. "It is not permitted to worship idols."
5. Lay not up treasures on earth."
6. "It is not permitted to use the doctrine to advance personal interests."
7. "Resist the evil impulses of the flesh, but do not restrain the appetite from nourishing food, for all things are given by the Divine Being for sustenance."
8. "Do not trust to books—that is, the reading by priests, &c. The condition of the heart is the main thing."
9. "Do not do penance for the remission of sins."
10. "Do not tell any one you are poor—i. e., do not beg. This is to prevent flattering the rich with the hope of obtaining something; also, the looking down on the poor, because nothing is to be expected from them."

These "commandments" contain much that is good, but do not show the way to life. Pray for all such in China as are like these struggling towards the light of life. May God make all readers of this more earnest in their desire to give these people Christ, God's remedy for sin.

Fraternally, G. P. BOSTICK.

Chefoo, China, Sept. 21, 1892.

Notes from Baltimore.

Dear Recorder:—The Maryland Baptist Union Association closed last night its fifty-seventh annual session. The Association met on Tuesday morning at the Seventh church, Dr. H. A. Tupper, Jr., pastor. Dr. A. J. Rowland of Franklin Square church was re-elected Moderator, and presided with rare skill and satisfaction.

Dr. Alfred Harris preached the annual sermon, and a masterful one it was. His arguments for the resurrection of Christ were fresh and strong. The Doctor is a sound theologian and a vigorous thinker.

The Association was probably never more highly entertained and instructed by its speakers than at this session. Short, crisp, thoughtful and spiritual addresses were the order. Dr. F. M. Ellis—great body, great thought, and mighty, bristling Anglo Saxon expression—kept all eyes open whenever he took the floor. Dr. Williams, from a long experience, recounted many reminiscences. The younger men—Fulton, Mullins, Henson and others—spoke occasionally with enthusiasm and keen appreciation of time. Dr. Frost made a soul stirring speech on the periodicals of the Southern Board.

In the matter of contributions, Maryland certainly is the banner State in the Southern Baptist Convention. There are eight thousand white Baptists in Maryland, but the announcement seems warranted from present reports that the Centennial funds will not fall below twenty-five thousand dollars. The Ladies Home Mission Society of Maryland, not to make an invidious comparison, has raised more money this year for Home Missions than all the Baptists of Tennessee have raised for all missionary purposes.

MISSION AND ANTI-MISSION BAPTISTS.

We have found no better illustration of the missionary and anti missionary spirit than is to be found here in Baltimore. Sixty years ago the First church and the Broadway church were excluded from the Baptist Association by the anti-mission faction because they advocated Sunday schools and missions To day in an obscure part of this great city is one little house, amply capacious to hold the only congregation of this sect in the city. Here they still gather, and, as Dr. Williams says, with a feeling of much satisfaction and security, admonish one another with the Scripture, "Fear not, little flock, it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." The Missionary Baptists, white and colored, have in the city some thirty churches, and a general state of prosperity prevails. If these things are not to be taken as a token of the Lord's approval, then the Devil has scored a big victory.

THE RECORDER.

May I be allowed to say that I take six Baptist religious papers, and with perfect confidence I assert that the RECORDER is by far the best of them all as a State organ of the denomination. The careful reader of the RECORDER knows more about Baptist affairs in North Carolina than is possible to learn concerning any other State from the paper published in such State and on the list of my subscriptions. While I miss the pleasure of meeting with the Baptists of the State, still there is hardly an association meets, a church organized, a deacon ordained, a candidate baptized, a funeral preached, or a marriage celebrated, that I do not know it. These reports to and from the churches have been a mighty power in unifying and inspiring the Baptists of North Carolina. To every Baptist subscriber to the RECORDER, I would say take the Baptist of this city as the best Baptist paper for the money outside of North Carolina; but to every Baptist of the State I would say, show a just pride in the best State paper published by the denomination by subscribing to the RECORDER and paying for it in advance. You will enjoy reading it better if you do this.

Suggestions to Ushers, and to the People.

The work of ushering in a church involves some labor, and some loss in the enjoyment of the services. We ought to be grateful to the ushers and make their work as pleasant as possible. Our ushers usually do their work admirably; but they may get some ideas which will be valuable to them from the following suggestions:

1. Fill the front and center of the church first. If possible, reserve a few seats near the entrance till after the collection.

2. Keep the two sides of the church as evenly full as possible. When one side gets fuller than the other, send the people across to the emptier side.

3. If there are two or three persons in a pew, do not seat any more in it, so long as there are any entirely empty pews in the church. It is better to scatter the audience than to have some seats crowded and some empty.

4. If the audience is small do not leave great blank spaces in front of the preacher. They look bad both to him and to the people.

5. Ushers should feel that the responsibility of having things done "decently and in order" rests largely upon them.

To the people let us say that if they wish to treat the ushers properly they should observe these rules:

1. Come early to church, and give the ushers a chance to enjoy the worship. People who come late and keep the ushers at work after the services begin, do them a real injury.

2. Don't defeat the plan of the ushers to reserve a few back seats by insisting on having them yourself early in the services.

3. Accept gratefully the seat given you, taking it for granted that the usher has given you the best seat at his disposal. Don't growl at the usher because some one else has got into a seat that you generally have.

4. Never leave an usher to march down the isle alone, while you drop into a back seat. It is discourteous and mortifying to him.

These things may seem like trifles, but "trifles make perfection," especially in conducting public worship. All success in anything comes from attention to details—Selected.

Keep Busy

The secret of success in life is to keep busy, to be persevering, patient, and untiring in the pursuit or calling you are following. The busy ones may now and then make mistakes, but it is better to risk these than to be idle and inactive. Keep doing, whether it be at work or seeking recreation. Motion is life, and the busiest are the happiest. Cheerful, active labor is a blessing. An old philosopher says: "The fire fly only shines when on the wing; so it is with the mind; when once we rest, we darken."—British Printer.

HOW TWO HUMBLE STRANGERS WERE MADE TO FEEL AT HOME.

Dot Hunt was as sweet a child as you ever saw. She was beautiful, too, and everybody loved her because she was lovely. She was an only child of a wealthy widow, and her home was one of elegance and culture. There never was a kinder or more generous child, or one more compassionate. If, while driving in the grand carriage beside her mamma, she saw a child grieved or injured she was not happy until something was done to comfort or help it. If a beggar child came to the door she turned beggar, too, begging Ann, the cook, to feed the hungry.

But Dot was only five years old. I tell you this so that you will not wonder at what I am about to relate.

Dot went to church for the first time one bright summer day. She was a perfect blossom in her snowy white dress, with a bunch of rose buds fastened in the broad sash.

At the church door stood a plainly dressed woman with a very sad face, and beside her a little girl of perhaps ten years of age, the latter wearing a calico dress and a very common-looking brown straw hat. People were going into the church very fast, but no one seemed to notice the sad-looking woman and her daughter. Presently a sunshiny voice broke the icy coldness of the churchgoers; it was Dot's.

"Isn't you doin' to church?" asked Dot of the little girl.

"It isn't our church; we're strangers; we don't know where to go," answered the girl.

"It's God's church," Dot said, reverently: "Come with mamma an' me, there's lot's of room in God's church."

The weary mother looked into Mrs. Hunt's face questioningly, and although the latter's face flushed, she seconded her daughter's hearty invitation.

"Yes, do come with us, please," she said, "we will be glad to have you." And presently seated side by side in "God's church" were the children of wealth and poverty. There had been a number of witnesses to the pretty scene, and more than one face flushed with shame as the minister during his reading, gave this passage: "I was a stranger and ye took me in."

Was it Jesus looking through that sad woman's eyes? Jesus looking through her little daughter's eyes?

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto Me."

And after the service more than one richly-dressed lady shook hands kindly with the "strangers," and made them welcome.

Dot never knew how forlorn, how homesick, how desolate those two strangers had been before her gentle welcome reached their souls, but her first Sunday at church had taught some "children of older growth" a lesson sadly needed.

And lo! how great a tree grows from a little acorn. The "strangers who had come to the city from a bereaved home, from which death had taken beloved ones and money had taken wings, found friends and pleasant, profitable employment. How far a little candle throws its beams!—Earnest Gilmore, in Morning Star.

DIED.

HINSON—W. D. Hinson, at Croft, N. C., on Oct. 3d, 1892, aged eighteen years, four months and eleven days.

This young man possessed a good christian character. He was a consistent member of the Baptist church, and much beloved by all who knew him. His last words indicated that he had a good hope through grace. His death is a great grief to those most intimately connected with him. His church has lost a consistent laborer. "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God." A.

STALLINGS—It is with sadness that I chronicle the death of Mrs. J. M. Stallings of Cedar Rock, Franklin county, N. C. Hers was a beautiful christian life—no artificials—a pure, sincere, frank, open, unvarnished woman of God. Hers was of a truth, a godly walk and a pious conversation. The most beautiful trait in her character was unselfishness. She was absorbed in the welfare of others, forgetting self. She was kind and gentle, "abounding in good works and alms deeds which she did." Verily, a Dorcas has fallen. S.

McMILLAN—Fell mortally wounded at Pembroke, Ga., on September 22d, Neill S. McMillan, in the thirtieth year of his age. He was born and reared near St. Paul's, Robeson county, N. C., but on reaching maturity removed to Georgia. At the request of an officer of the law he was engaged in arresting a negro desperado, from whom he received two fatal pistol shots, but we mourn not as those who have no hope. A few months before this sad casualty he wrote to his mother that he had entered upon a new career in life—that old things had passed away, and that he believed that her prayers and the prayers of his true friends in his behalf were answered. He also assured a brother of the same thing. His remains were interred at Mt. Moriah cemetery, Robeson county, N. C. D. C. M.

HIGHSMITH—On Saturday morning, June 25th, 1892, Miss Lizzie D. Highsmith, daughter of G. W. and M. E. Highsmith, departed this life in the twenty-sixth year of her age, leaving to mourn her loss many relatives and a host of friends. About ten years ago she gave her heart to Christ, and joined the Missionary Baptist church. As a christian she was prominent for piety and consecration. She loved all services of God's house. This will shine as the brightest star in the many-jewelled crown which she shall wear in the glory world. Her funeral sermon was preached by Rev. J. W. Sell, from Revelation 14: 13. Since her conversion she has lived a devoted christian, and while we shall miss her on earth we rejoice to feel that our loss is her eternal gain. No doubt she is now with the dear brother and sister that have gone on before. May God in mercy bless and comfort the sorrowing and bereaved family.

The Recorder
—IS AN—
Excellent Advertising Medium.
Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty-eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

Doth send an offering down,
And helps by its tremulous, golden ray
The brow of night to crown.

The river hastening to the sea,
With all its gathered treasures,
Yields up its offerings, full and free;
Their worth it never measures.

Thus nature proves in many a way
The noblest rule of living.
Would ye receive? then day by day
Increase thy store by giving.

Practical Christianity.

"It is wonderful how the Lord does take care of us—wonderful!" and little Mrs. Fransell gave the dress waist on which she was working an emphatic shake by way of affirmation. "Why, I was left a widow more than eight years ago, and I can see how he has led me and taken care of me every year and day since."

"I suppose you have done something toward the care-taking yourself!" said Mrs. Lyte, who knew somewhat of the energy pent up in the slight figure of her dressmaker.

"Certainly," said Mrs. Fransell; "I didn't sit down with my hands folded and expect my bread and butter to come to me; nor did I expect my friends to give it to me. I've worked hard, I tell you; not many idle hours nor much vacation for me in these eight years. But I have lived comfortably, and have given my daughter a good education, and I know I never could have done it if the Lord had not helped me in every way and at every time."

"I am sure you could not have worked so hard and kept so fresh and cheerful without his help," said Mrs. Lyte.

"O dear, no," said the dressmaker, her deft fingers arranging a graceful fall of lace as she talked; "but do you know there are a good many people I work for—Christian people, too—who laugh at me if I say anything about it? 'The Lord helping you to sew, Mrs. Fransell; how perfectly ridiculous!' they say. But I know he does. When my husband died I knew I should have to take care of myself and my little girl. There wasn't a thing that I knew how to do that would bring me in any money. I hated to sew, and I didn't do it very well, of course. But I made up my mind that was the thing for me to do, so I set myself to learn how. At first I went out as a seamstress; then I went for a year to a dressmaker just to learn how to put things together, and to do them the best way; then I learned to cut and fit.

"Mrs. Lyte, there was many a time when I was dreadfully discouraged. I have prayed to the Lord often to help me cut a garment right, and make a dress fit well, and I know he did help me. It is all owing to his help that I have got where I am now, as busy as I can be all the time, and people seem pretty well satisfied with my work. O, yes, indeed," she went on, "that is just my idea of a heavenly Father. He knew I had to work for my living, and he knew I was doing the very best I could, but I couldn't do it all by myself, so according to his promise he supplied my need. You know he says if we lack wisdom we may ask of God. I wanted wisdom to learn the dressmaking trade, and I asked for it and got it."

"Yes," said Mrs. Lyte, "I believe that is all true; it is Bible teaching and it is christian philosophy. If we could all of us receive the things of God 'as little children,' we would be better and happier."

"'Take it to the Lord in prayer,' that is my motto for everything," said Mrs. Fransell. "But I was working for a lady a few weeks ago—she is a member of my church, too—and I supposed she was a christian. Her little boy was naughty and she reproved him very sharply, and they had quite a tussle. Afterward she said to me: 'I am at my wit's end about that boy. He won't mind, and I lose my patience and my temper with him.' I ventured to say to her: 'Don't you ever take it to the Lord in prayer? I should never think of trying to manage a child by my own wits, nor myself either, for that matter.'

"'No,' she said, 'I don't think I ever did pray about it especially. I ask God's guidance in a general way, of course.' I asked her if she never prayed with her little boy, and she said: 'I hear him say his prayers every night, of course.' That is as much as a great many christians know about prayer, I'm afraid. And, Mrs. Lyte, I don't often tell my own views or experience about it, for when I do people look at me as if there was something wrong with my head."

"Nevertheless, Mrs. Fransell, you do tell it in your cheerful face and in the conscientious work you do," said Mrs. Lyte, "and I suppose that is really the best way to 'shine with a pure clear light,' you in your little corner, and I in mine."—N. Y. Advocate.

About the House.

People who suffer from chapped hands should be careful to dry them thoroughly after they are washed. This prevents chapping. If the hands are already chapped, however, there is nothing better than camphor ice. This preparation contains no glycerine, a component part of many other ointments used for this purpose, and consequently of no use to the large number of persons to whose skin glycerine is irritating. To make camphor ice, take three ounces of camphor gum, the same amount of spermaceti and two ounces of olive oil. Melt together in a cup on the stove, in a moderately warm place, where they will melt slowly together and form a white ointment in a few minutes. Pour it in an earthen box or cup, and when cool, use. Rub the camphor ice on the hands before going to bed; put on gloves, and after a night or two of such treatment the ordinary cases of chapped hands will succumb.

Lemon juice is much better than oxalic acid for taking out stains on the skin. It softens it and leaves it in better condition. There are a certain number of drugs that every one should have at hand in convenient places, kept in glass bottles with glass stoppers. Among these is ammonia, which is perfect in its cleansing properties; then comes vaseline, glycerine, borax, alum, camphor and alcohol. Every one of these is needed.

Home-made candies are not only superior to the cheap mixtures sold by the grocers, but cheaper as well. Excellent cream taffy can be made as follows: "Three cups of granulated sugar, half a cup of vinegar, half a cup of water, butter size of a walnut. Boil without stirring until it will candy when dropped in cold water. Flavor, and pour out on a buttered dish. When cool, pull till white, then cut up in sticks with sharp scissors.

Butter-scotch calls for one cup of sugar, one cup of molasses, half a cup of butter, one tablespoonful of vinegar, pinch of soda. Boil all together till done, pour in a buttered pan and cut in squares when cold, and wrap in paraffine paper.

For a very nice custard pie, beat three eggs, three heaping tablespoonfuls of sugar, one of flour, a pinch of salt and grated nutmeg to taste in a quart bowl, having in the meantime put your milk on to scald. When the milk is scalding, pour it over the beaten eggs, etc., stirring briskly. Have a large, deep pie-plate lined with crust, set it in the oven and let stiffen a little, then pour in the custard. Do not have the oven very hot, just hot enough to brown the froth which will rise to the top of the custard a delicate color.

For frozen pudding, take one pint of heavy cream, the yelks of four eggs and beat together; make a syrup of one pound of sugar and one pint of water, put on the fire when very hot, add forty blanched almonds, pounded fine, one ounce of chopped citron, two each of raisins and currants, one ounce of candied orange and lemon peel each, the juice of one lemon; pour in freezer and freeze. Set aside one hour to harden.

To brighten gilt picture frames, take sufficient flowers of sulphur to give a golden tinge to about one and one half pints of water, and in this boil four or five bruised onions, or garlic, which will answer the same purpose. Strain off this liquid, and with it, when cold, wash with a soft brush any gilding which requires renewing, and when dry it will come out bright as new.—Cricket, in the Waverly Magazine.

The Effect of Sleeping in Cars.

A Child's Victory.

A coal cart was delivering an order in Clinton Street the other day, and the horse made two or three great efforts to back the heavily-loaded cart to the spot desired and then became obstinate. The driver began to beat the animal, and this quickly collected a crowd. He was a big fellow, with a fierce look in his eye, and the onlookers were chary about interfering, knowing what would follow. "I pity the horse, but I don't want to get into a row," remarked one.

"I am satisfied that I could do him up with the gloves on, but he wouldn't fight that way," added a second.

"I'm not the least bit afraid to tackle him," put in a young man with a long neck, "but about the time I got him down, along would come a policeman and arrest us both."

The driver was beating the horse, and nothing was being done about it when a little girl about eight years old approached and said:

"Please, mister."

"Well, what yer want?"

"If you'll only stop, I'll get all the children around here and we'll carry every bit of the coal to the manhole and let you rest while we are doing it."

The man stood up, and looked around in a defiant way, but, meeting with only pleasant looks, he began to give in, and after a moment he smiled and said:

"Mebbe he didn't deserve it, but I'm out of sorts to day. There goes the whip, and perhaps a lift on the wheels will help him."

The crowd swarmed around the cart, a hundred hands helped to push, and the old horse had the cart to the spot with one effort.—Our Dumb Animals.

The Uses of the Lemon.

Lemonade from the juice of the lemon is one of the best and safest drinks for any person. It is suitable for all stomach diseases, gravel, liver complaint, inflammation of the bowels and fevers. It is a specific against worms and skin complaint. Lemon juice is the best antiscorbutic remedy known. It not only cures the disease, but prevents it. Sailors make daily use of it for this purpose. I advise everyone to rub their gums with lemon juice to keep them in good condition.

The hands and face are kept clean, white, soft and supple by the daily use of lemon instead of soap. It also prevents chilblains.

Lemon is used in intermittent fevers, mixed with strong, hot, black coffee, without sugar; neuralgia may also be cured by rubbing the part affected with cut lemon. It is valuable also to cure warts, and dandruff on the head, by rubbing the roots of the hair. It will alleviate and finally cure coughs and colds, and heal diseased lungs, if taken hot on going to bed at night.

Its uses are manifold, and the more we employ it internally, the better we find ourselves. Lemon juice is useful in removing tartar from the teeth, and is anti-febrile. A doctor in Rome is trying it experimentally in malarial fever with great success, and thinks it will in time supersede quinine.—Selected.

To relieve headache, correct disorders of the stomach and increase the appetite, and for the cure of liver complaint, use Ayer's Cathartic Pills. They are perfectly safe to take, and invariably promote a healthy action of the digestive and assimilative organs.

Overgrown Boys.

There can scarcely be a more refined method of cruelty than of ridiculing the awkward movements of a boy whose superfluity of flesh or stature prevents his moving gracefully among his more naturally formed brothers and sisters; and yet fathers and mothers as well as thoughtless friends or playmates are often guilty of thus wounding the feelings of the overgrown boy who is so unfortunate as to have been born among them. Even the attainment to a noble and perfectly symmetrical stature (which the years always bring to such a one, if his health does not fail under the extra imposition of labor which his mistaken friends require of him) cannot atone for the cruel hurts he thus receives. If he be a sensitive child, they rankle in his very soul, and do untold harm. Some parents are in such haste for their children to become men and women that they force them on, hasten their development in every possible way; and if nature favors them by bestowing a more than ordinary growth in bone and flesh upon any of their children, they are rejoiced to have the excuse to impose duties and exact behavior according to the number of pounds avoirdupois, when in reality that is no standard to go by. Too many children are thus defrauded of their childhood, and who is prepared to answer such a charge by and by, when it shall be brought against them.—Selected.

Chronic coughers are stupid bores and should be forced to use Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, the only infallible remedy.

From Eight to Sixteen.

A philanthropist of wide experience declares that the male criminals of London have nearly all entered upon their career of crime between the ages of eight and sixteen years; and that if a young man lives an honest life up to the age of twenty, there are forty-nine chances in favor and only one against him as to an upright life thereafter.

Here is food for thought, indeed. Teachers of uneasy, restless, wide-awake boy humanity are requested to take notice. "From eight to sixteen!" How strong willed they are! How impatient of a restraining hand! "I am trying to hold a four-horse team," said a delicate woman to whom one of these young immortals had been entrusted. No wonder her face was pale and care-marked.

"The Sunday-school teacher has so little time with the boys," some one says. Yes; but love will devise many a way in which to follow them into their week day life. Said a teacher whose success with boys was wonderful: "I literally followed them for years. But they did not know it at the time." Yes; and she saved them!

"But she had the time," you say. Judge; she was a self-supporting woman, and in delicate health much of the time.

"Time!" No; it is love that "seeks and follows!"—Exchange.

OUTLINE OF INTRODUCTORY SERMON BY REV. DR. J. L. CARROLL AT MT. ZION ASSOCIATION, OLIVE'S CHAPEL, WAKE COUNTY, OCTOBER 18, 1892.

Text—"Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."—Zech. 4: 6.

The Israelites, after a long and wasting captivity in Babylon, were permitted by King Cyrus to return, under the lead of Zerubbabel, to engage in the great and glorious work of rebuilding the house of the Lord in Jerusalem. Seven years before the close of the reign of Cyrus the work was discontinued because of an accumulation of discouraging difficulties in the way of its accomplishment. During the eight years in which his successors, Cambyses and Smerdis, reigned, nothing was done. In the second year of the reign of Darius, who succeeded them, the prophets Haggai and Zechariah began to fulminate their denunciations of the sin of neglecting this work. Their words fell like fire upon tinder. Zerubbabel was aroused from his apathy, and the work was resumed with earnestness and enthusiasm.

The vision contained in this chapter is a part of the prophecy of Zechariah which had great influence in stimulating their zeal. It was designed to show Zerubbabel that he should not be discouraged by reason of the poverty and weakness of the people in attempting to rebuild the temple and re-establish its worship. Just as the two olive trees in an unnatural way furnished the needed oil to keep the lamps burning, so God would furnish unexpected supplies to aid in this great work. The two olive trees, standing upon either side of the golden candlestick and lamps, represented Zerubbabel and Joshua, the one the civil and the other the religious leader of his people, standing by this temple. Through them the Lord would communicate his Spirit in such an unnatural or miraculous way that the work should be completed, and the fires should be rekindled upon its altar, even as the lamps burned upon the candlestick. He must not depend so much upon material agencies and resources. The work was to be accomplished not by human might nor power, but by God Almighty's Spirit. The "great mountain" of difficulties should "become a plain before Zerubbabel." "The hands of Zerubbabel here laid the foundation of this house, his hand shall also finish it." "And he shall bring forth the headstone thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it." He must not "despise the day of small things," for "the eyes of the Lord which run to and fro through the whole earth"—his all-watchful providence—would behold with gracious favor the work of Zerubbabel and carry it forward to a gloriously successful completion.

Now, this truth is not only capable of application to that spiritual building which "fitly framed together growth unto an holy temple in the Lord, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone," but was doubtless intended to do so. As the antetype is greater than the type, so does truth concerning the type more aptly apply to the antetype. By as much as the spiritual is more precious in the sight of the Lord than the natural temple, by so much the more is it true that the spiritual temple is to be reared not by human might nor power, but by God's Spirit. We learn from Rev. 11: 4 that there are still two olive trees "standing before the God of the earth," which are his two witnesses—his church and ministry. As the natural temple was to be reared by his Spirit communicated through the two olive trees representing his two anointed servants, Zerubbabel and Joshua, so by the mysterious but potent energies of the same Holy Spirit communicated through the two olive trees which represent his church and ministry, is the spiritual temple to be completed. Material agencies and resources have their degree of importance; but of themselves they are utterly impotent. Machinery, however beautiful in its proportions and appointments and perfect in its details, can accomplish nothing without that subtle but mighty agent called steam to invest it with life and energy. "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation." Luke 17: 20. God's people need to be oft reminded while engaged in this work of faith and labor of love for the spread of the gospel, of their absolute dependence upon the Almighty Spirit of God. In the hope of deepening this impression to-day, let us consider the indispensableness of the Spirit's help.

1. In calling to the work those who are to preach the gospel. Preaching is God's chosen agency for the salvation of men. 1 Cor. 1: 21, "For after that in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." In order to be saved the people must call upon the name of the Lord. Rom. 10: 13, "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe on him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?" Sent not only by men, but sent of God, with the seal of his heavenly unction. As in the ancient priesthood, so in this ministry. Hebrew 5: 4, "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." In Rom. 1: 1 Paul says he was "called to be an apostle." In 1 Timothy 1: 12, he speaks of Christ as "putting him into the ministry." This divine call, so indispensable in apostolic times, is equally indispensable now. It is a life of self-sacrificing toil and labor. True it is that some might be brought into it by unworthy considerations without such call; but those who will devote themselves to it and be blessed of God in it will not unless they feel that "necessity is laid upon them." How then shall the thinning ranks of the ministry be recruited with earnest, self-denying ministers? The text gives the answer from the skies—"Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

2. In qualifying the ministry for their work. Apart from the fundamental work of regenerating and calling to the ministry, there is further need of the Spirit to qualify the called for the work assigned them. He must give qualification which neither human might nor power can furnish.

For instance, we who preach the gospel need to be impressed with such a profound sense of the importance of our office as will lead us like Paul to "magnify" it, and labor and study by every means in our power to attain to the highest possible degree of efficiency in it. O, we all might make so much better preachers if we felt as we ought the importance of our high calling, and lent all our energies and opportunities to it! We need, further, a native power which will keep us in the work, notwithstanding the discouragements we meet; such a love for Christ as will become an all constraining inducement, and such a love for man as will make us feel with Paul, "I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians; both to the wise and to the unwise," to the highest and the lowliest, and that we cannot repudiate the obligation!

Then we so sadly need to be qualified to act with prudence and discretion in dealing with the endless variety of human character with which we have to meet to make us as wise as serpents and as harmless as doves. O how many mistakes we make, and how it hurts our usefulness. Whence shall we derive the heavenly wisdom and tact which without compromise will make us "all things to all men that we may by all means save some?"

And again, in the study of God's word how much do we need the illumination from on high, that we may behold the wondrous things in the land, understand how to gather them up, and unite and combine them for the happiest results when we preach them to the people. And above all, how much do we need to attain to that deep, unaffected, humble piety, which will "commend us to every man's conscience in the sight of God," which will give us power with God, and, consequently, power with men. How much we need to learn the importance of teaching by example as well as by precept that our business here is not only to "lure to brighter worlds," but to "lead the way" as well. O, how much more effective our preaching would be if it were endorsed thoroughly with the power of a consecrated christian life and character! These all-important qualifications for usefulness in the ministry—whence shall we derive them? They come not from human might nor power, but from God's Spirit.

3. In constraining the churches to sustain the ministry and other gospel agencies. "How shall they preach except they be sent?" Sent not only of the Lord, but by the churches of God. How shall the ministry devote itself successfully to its great work if the churches do not sustain it? The law on this subject is—1 Cor. 9: 14, "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel." How sadly has this divine ordinance been violated in all ages of his churches. What violence is done to it now? How many good preachers are crippled in their usefulness by having to study the intensely practical questions—what shall we eat, and what shall be drink, and wherewithal shall we be clothed? And thus it is with all our benevolent enterprises, our boards, and colleges and theological seminaries—the efficiency of all is crippled by inadequate support. And yet our churches are abundantly able to sustain them if they could only be gotten to think so. Can human might or power bring them up to it? They have been persuaded by men of honeyed lips, and threatened by the sons of thunder, and still the cause languishes. But is there no help? Yes, God's Spirit can relax purse strings and open the doors of coffers, and make the contributions flow in streams into his treasury. But the ministry needs not only financial, but moral support. The gospel needs to be sustained by the pious examples and consecrated lives of those who believe it. How greatly is its progress hindered for the lack of this moral support! Too often is it shorn of its power by the unholy lives of christians. What vouchers for the gospel are consistent christian lives! And what power to keep it is in their sympathies and prayers. So Paul felt. 2 Thess. 3: 1, "Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified, even as it is with you." Whence shall our churches derive this moral and spiritual power which shall make it so helpful to the gospel? Neither human might nor power can furnish it. Only God's Spirit, with his sanctifying, spiritualizing, energizing power can do it.

"'Tis he that works to will,
'Tis he that works to do,
The power by which we act is his,
His be the glory too."

4. In making the word preached effectual to salvation. Here is another feature of our work in which our dependence on the Spirit is absolute. If we had a preacher called, qualified and sustained most amply upon every square mile of the earth's surface, aye, if he was a Spurgeon, he could do nothing to save men without the Spirit's help. The valley of dry bones in Ezekiel's vision is a striking representation of the spiritual condition of the race. In obedience to God's command the ministry may prophesy unto the dry bones and say unto them, "O, ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord. But not until God shall say, "Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain that they may live," shall they live and "stand upon their feet an exceeding great army." Yes, if there be two of the best preachers upon every square mile, a Paul to plant, and an Apollos to water, God the Spirit must give the increase. "So then neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase." 1 Cor. 3: 7. He must open the hearts of the people as he did Lydia's before they will attend unto the things spoken by his servants. With the Spirit to help, the merest dwarf in the ministry becomes a very Samson of strength in the pulpit. When abandoned by the Spirit, Spurgeon or Paul is a Samson shorn of the locks of his strength. Nothing can take his place in rising to life the soul dead in trespasses and sins. He alone can do it.

"The Spirit, like some heavenly wind,
Breathes on the head of flesh,
Creates anew the carnal mind
And forms the man afresh.

Our quickened souls awake and rise
From their long sleep of death,
On heavenly things we fix our eyes
And praise employs our breath."

Conclusion: Prayer for the Spirit, then, is the duty and privilege of the hour, as we assemble in our Association. O for an outpouring of his blessed influences upon all the meetings of our people, especially in this Centennial year. Then would our people come up to the help of the Lord along all the lines of our work, our Boards be soon relieved of all embarrassment and their treasury filled, and the word of the Lord have free course and be glorified in all the earth.

The Waves and the Rock.

I was on the ocean shore yesterday. There had been a strong sea breeze all night, and, as the tide was coming in, the sea ran high. The waves beat like hammers on the rock, but it threw them back in foam and spray. As I stood there watching that repeated assault and repulse, and remembered that it had been going on thus day after day for thousands of years, and yet that the rock towered unmoved and unbroken, I thought of the Bible and its critics. How they have raged around it. How they have hurled against it their objections, as if they would sweep it from the earth. Yet it stands, not only firm, like the rock, but stronger than ever in the faith and love of the race. The lesson of the rock and the waves was impressive, and yet, wishing to complete it, I turned to where a young oak stood battling with the storm. The winds seemed to say, as they rushed upon it: "How dare you stand in our way? We will lift you up and toss you before us as we have the waves on the ocean." But the scion, knowing that it was firmly rooted, only bowed to the winds, and said: "I thank you for coming. You help me to grow. The more you shake me the deeper my roots go down into the earth. Opposition develops my strength. Howl on, ye winds, and you will make me in time a giant of the forest." Such is the reply of the Bible to all who war against it. The more they try to destroy it the more powerful they make it. It is a tree which God has planted. It is rooted in the conscious needs of our fallen race. It finds there a soil adapted to its growth, and there it will grow until the whole earth is shaded by its leaves, which are for the healing of the nations. Let the critics criticise and let the scoffers scoff—they are only stimulating the interest of the race in this one divine book, and hastening the hour of its final triumph.—C. H. B., in Journal and Messenger.

Laurel Hill Church.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Since my last letter to you, I have helped in a meeting of six days at Laurel Hill church. This church is in Montgomery county, three miles southeast of Troy, and on the road from Troy to Candor. Rev. W. M. Bostic is the pastor. This church for many years has been one of the best churches in the Montgomery Association; but I am sorry to say that she is not to-day what she has been in the past. Troubles among the members, and for the want of more religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, the members suffered the Devil to get the advantage of them, and he has injured the church, but I hope much good was done during the six days' meeting with the church. God bless the church and the people in the community, and help them to do their duty to God, the church, and to each other, and thus move on the good cause of the church.

LOCKEY SIMMONS.

The father of Prof. W. G. Simmons lived near this church, and the house in which the Professor was born and grew up to manhood is still standing, and is occupied by a Methodist brother named Towder, who is cultivating the farm on which Bro. Lockey Simmons raised his family and where he made the money by which he was enabled to educate his children, one of whom was our great and good and ever to be remembered W. G. Simmons. The house, the spring, the beautiful Little river, and the grand hills with which W. G. Simmons was made so familiar as he grew up, all made a profound impression on my mind as I looked at them; and in my heart I thanked God for blessing the world with such men as Lockey Simmons and his son, W. G. Simmons. The last named it has been my privilege to set before in his recitation room at Wake Forest College and received instruction from him. The lives and labors of such good and useful men will never die, and acts of kindness and words of advice are still living and of vast benefit to the world.

PINE RIDGE SCHOOL-HOUSE.

This place in Moore county is located two miles north of Lindon, and seven or eight miles northwest of Aberdeen. It is in what was called in my boyhood days as the sand hills of Moore county. Before the war it was an extended region of country and thickly timbered with the long leaf pine, with here and there a settlement. It was the home of the wild deer. I have often seen them bound in beauty and swiftness of flight over these sand hill plains. The sheep thrived well here. It was a good grazing country for them in the summer and a warm home in the winter. Cattle of all kinds did well, and I have known several men to have hundreds of them. They did well without being fed in the winter, save a little salt. I notice a great change; the pines have been boxed, the turpentine has been taken from them, many of them dying by being bled to death. The saw-mills have sawed them up into lumber; and thus the once beautiful pine forest is gone—yes, forever gone, for it will never, no, never, be what it once was.

I am holding a meeting of days at the above named school-house. I hope the meeting will result in good. One person has professed faith in Christ, and some have asked for the prayers of the christians. Bro. John Deaton, a licensed brother, is helping me in this meeting and doing some very good preaching.

I will go from here to Sulpur Springs in Montgomery county to help Bro. W. M. Bostick in a meeting.

I will go from there to Star, Montgomery county, where Bro. Futrell, a Methodist minister, and I will hold a meeting together. I will go from them to help Bro. I. M. Leach at one of his churches, and I will then go from there to help Bro. Ingram at Blackwood's Chapel, Pekin, Montgomery county, commencing the second Sabbath in December. May God bless the people in these meetings. W. A. BARRETT.

Columbus Day Exercises at Oxford Female Seminary.

On the evening of Oct. 21st, "Columbus Day" was celebrated by the pupils of Oxford Female Seminary. The spacious chapel was brilliantly illuminated, the walls and rostrum tastefully decorated with the national colors caught up in graceful festoons with rich clusters of autumn leaves, russet and crimson and gold, the royal garniture of October, and wreathed with the yellow glory of the golden rod.

At the appointed hour, the sound of martial music announced the opening of the exercises, and soon, with measured tread, about one hundred beautiful girls, arrayed in flowing draperies of red, white and blue, with banners waving, marched into the hall, singing the stirring old chorus "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean." With stately precision, they took their appointed positions, and, almost ere we were aware, a band of white-robed little children stood before us softly and reverently chanting the Lord's prayer. The effect was indescribably touching and beautiful. Then followed recitations and historical readings, interspersed with national songs and anthems, all of which displayed a high degree of proficiency in these departments of education.

Where all did so well, it would be unjust to discriminate, but we cannot forbear giving expression to our admiration of the tableau presented by the formation of twenty-four radiant girls, wearing the insignia of our glorious republic, into a crescent, the central figure of which was a fair daughter of Carolina, bearing the Stars and Stripes, while under its folds arrayed as the Goddess of Liberty stood another graceful maiden, who recited with distinct enunciation and impressive manner the beautiful "Ode for Columbus Day" by Edna Dean Proctor. Then the grand old "Star Spangled Banner" was sung with thrilling effect by Miss Shepherd, the teacher of vocal music. This young lady has a voice sweet, clear, resonant and of rare power. The large hall seemed flooded with melody. The audience testified their appreciation by enthusiastic encore. The rendition of "Hail, Columbia!" with brilliant variations, by Miss Marvin, the principal of the department of instrumental music, was superb, and caused every heart to thrill with patriotic emotion.

The concert closed with a jubilee song by the whole school, after which a "book reception" was greatly enjoyed by the young people. More than one hundred standard volumes were added to the library of the Caliopean Society.

We must not neglect to say that the fine military drill did credit to Miss Rountree's thorough training in the department of physical culture.

We noticed with sincere pleasure the improvements which have been made in all the equipments of the Seminary—new desks in the study halls, musical instruments in fine condition, the art rooms newly papered, reading room with its pleasant light and warmth, good library, papers, pictures, comfortable chairs and piano for the use of students when released from study, dining hall handsomely refurnished, the rosy light falling through crimson shades upon new glassware and silver. The sleeping apartments are all well furnished and carpeted, and a general air of thrift and progress prevails.

We prophesy for this grand old institution increased prosperity and usefulness, under the management of its courteous and scholarly president and his corps of accomplished teachers. M. P.

Life's Mistakes.

Somebody has condensed the mistakes of life, and arrived at the conclusion that there are fourteen of them. Most people would say, if they told the truth, that there is no limit to the mistakes of life; that they are like drops in the ocean, or the sands on the shore in number; but it is as well to be accurate.

Here, then, are fourteen great mistakes: It is a great mistake to set up our own standard of right and wrong, and judge people accordingly; to measure the enjoyment of others by our own; to expect uniformity of opinion in this world; to look for judgment and experience in youth; to endeavor to mold all dispositions alike; not to yield to immaterial trifles; to look for perfection in our own actions; to worry ourselves and others with what cannot be remedied; not to alleviate all that needs alleviation, as far as lies in our power; not to make allowances for the infirmities of others; to consider everything impossible that we cannot perform; to believe only what our finite minds can grasp; to expect to be able to understand everything. The greatest of mistakes is to live for time alone, when any moment may launch us into eternity.—Ex.

The Bible as it Is.

A friend of the celebrated John Locke once inquired of him what was the shortest and surest way for a young gentleman to attain a true knowledge of the christian religion. He replied in these golden words: "Let him study the Holy Scriptures, especially the New Testament. Therein are contained the words of eternal life. It has God for its author, salvation for its end and truth without any mixture of error for its matter."

In these times the pulpit is seeking to unsettle the faith of the young as well as the old on the value of the Holy Scriptures. They talk now about the errors of the Scriptures—that they are not "without any mixture of error for their matter," as says the great philosopher. But it will be found in the end that God in his book is true, though it makes a good many would-be theologians liars. "The Book! the Book! the Book as it is," should be the cry of the church.—Exchange.

Girls who Make Poor Wives.

It is the worshipped daughter, who has been taught that her whims and wishes are supreme in a household, who makes marriage a failure all her life. She has had her way in things great and small; and when she desired dresses, pleasures or journeys which were beyond the family purse, she carried the day with tears or sulks, or posing as a martyr. The parents sacrificed and suffered for her sake, hoping finally to see her well married. The average man is blind to the faults of a pretty girl. He thinks her little pettish ways are more girlish moods; but when she becomes his wife and reveals her selfish and cruel nature, he is grieved and hurt to think he has been so unkind to her.—Selected.

MINISTERIAL LOVE.

It is generally understood that if a minister would be a successful pastor and preacher, he must cultivate real genuine love, not only for God, but also for the people unto whom he ministers. In fact, like his Master, he ought to love mankind in general. To love the people unto whom he ministers it is necessary for the preacher to visit them, mingle with them in their home life, and know of their joys and sorrows. The opinion that a pastor can minister successfully and efficiently unto a flock, with a majority of whom he has only a church acquaintance, is an unsafe one to adopt. To minister efficiently unto one person, or unto many, implies a knowledge of the wants of the one or the many; and how can the preacher minister properly if he knows not by personal contact the wants of his people. We do not purpose, however, to pursue this line of thought further now; but we do propose to call attention to one special direction in which ministerial love should show itself, and in which it is sometimes, we fear, sadly deficient. Do ministers love one another as they should? In the days of our youth and earlier ministry we were charitable enough to suppose that ministers, as a class, would have one for another a very marked and conspicuous kind of love, especially when they were members of the same denomination, or of the same household of faith.

This more youthful opinion, we are sorry to say, while not dissipated, has at times been so severely tested that we have been forced more or less to modify it from the actual observation and experience of life. We were once verdant enough to suppose that, considering the nature of our ministers calling, considering that there ought to be but little room for self-seeking and uncharitableness among them, that they, as a class, would be above selfishness and preeminently distinguished by the spirit that characterised Christ the Master, "He came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." It may cause some "rustle in ministerial circles," but we state now a conclusion which we have reached after a somewhat mature study of the subject, and that is, many ministers do not love their brethren or one another as they should. As one proof of this, how often do we find the pastor who is receiving an ample support from the church he is serving, almost utterly unconcerned about the poorer and less fortunate pastor, or preacher, living near him! It is said that Lord Tennyson would not use one cent of the pension granted to him by the English government as poet laureate, but gave all of it to poor and struggling authors. How many preachers, who receive larger salaries than they need to meet their current expenses, show the same kind of consideration for their poorer struggling fellow pastors? Some one may say that such preachers ought to make some provision for their old age, or that they should give much of their surplus to charitable objects. Of course the minister, when able, ought to make some provision for old age, and ought, like other men, to be charitable; but there is a marked disposition, too often manifested, to show little concern about the fellow-pastors near him. Our ministers are often good and generous men, but we do contend that there is need that they should suffer their generosity to more frequently take the direction of their fellow-pastors' homes.

The absence of this love one for another is again seen when ministers seem to show little or no concern as to their fellow-pastors future settlement, or work, when they resign pastorates near them. They seem often more willing to find another pastor to fill the vacant field than to aid the retiring pastor in finding one. We once knew one of the leading Baptist ministers of this State to do the following graceful thing under the following circumstances. A fellow-pastor, living in a town near him, for reasons that were satisfactory to him, resigned, not knowing where he would go when the resignation took effect. Soon after, his neighboring fellow-laborer heard of his resignation he (unsolicited), wrote a kind and complimentary notice for the RECORDER of his resignation, and the work he had done on the field he was leaving, expressing his regret at losing from his Association a man of [illegible] worth, &c. Now the writing of that [illegible] cost that brother but little time and [illegible] two-cent postage stamp; but it [illegible] to be very helpful to the retiring [illegible] almost immediately he [illegible] another church, a prominent member of which saw the statement concerning him in his denominational paper. Yet how slow our pastors are at times to show this kind of regard and sympathy for their fellow-pastors! There is certainly room here—room which is sometimes an aching void—for pastors to show more concern one for another; and, when necessary, help one another. Some pastors will help other pastors under such circumstances when applied to; but did it never occur to you, brother, that you could do one of the most graceful and brotherly things of your life to go to your fellow-pastor's home and offer your services? Would it not be an exceedingly graceful thing—graceful partly because of its rarity—for you, unsolicited by him, to take steps, through the public prints, or by private correspondence, to secure your brother another pastorate? Would your feet ever appear more beautiful to him than on the day when you hastened to his home with a letter in your hand containing a virtual call for him to another field?

Another evidence that our ministers do not love one another as they ought, is found in the fact that they do not visit one another as often as they should, even when they live in the same city, town, or community. Does it not happen, brother, that your brother pastor lives only a block or so from you, and yet you do not cross the threshhold of his home on an average of once in twelve months! And yet you profess to love him—pretty love, that, and you have a strange way of showing it! You once loved the woman who became your wife—we hope you love her still—and how often did you visit her? Once in twelve months! If so you would never have called her wife. A lover that showed no more warmth and devotion than that would have a hard time in finding a wife that had much heart or spirit.

You may meet your fellow-pastor in the pulpit, on the street, at the ministers' conference, &c., but you never know him until you go to his home, and talk with him and his around his fireside. The truth of the old proverb, "Actions speak louder than words," can be clearly seen in this particular thing. It matters not how much you profess to love your fellow laborer, how cordial and brotherly you are when you meet him at your home, or elsewhere, you cannot convince him or the world that you love him if you fail to visit him at his home, when you have ample opportunity to do so.

Now we do not propose to apologize for what we have written; but we do wish to say that while from time to time we may be candid enough to criticise some of our ministers, we are free to admit that they are, as a class, among our best friends and supporters. The RECORDER is under lasting obligations to the Baptist ministers of North Carolina and of other States, but this does not blind us to the fact that some of our noble brotherhood have faults that others may see; and the paper that seeks their patronage, and, as a rule, has commanded their unswerving support, would be unworthy of the place we hope it holds in their affections if it were always dealing in hollow or real personal compliments, or feeding them and the rest of its readers upon such sweet generalities of advice and counsel as to make it nauseating, as a conservator of public morals, and a medium for the promotion of personal piety among our people and true christianity in the world.

THE Associations are now closed. We want to thank the brethren who have so greatly aided us by the renewal of their subscriptions, besides helping us in many other ways in our work. There are, however, a large number of the brethren who were not permitted to be at the Associations whose subscriptions are out. We hope all of these brethren will let us hear from them as early as possible. Brethren, don't forget us.

FROM OUR TRAVELLING AGENT.

THE ROBESON ASSOCIATION

met with the church at Fair Bluff. Last year this body met at Lumberton. This was my first privilege to attend this Association, and I looked with pleasure to this meeting. I believe the brethren who visit the Associations in the State are agreed that in many respects the Robeson is the best organized and the best systematized body in the State. This has come about largely through the efforts of Bro. E. K. Proctor, the Secretary of the Association. He never becomes so engrossed in his business as to forget the interest of his church and Association.

All of our Associations are learning to economize time and to transact the business of their meetings with more system.

A scholarly gentleman of another denomination who was present at this meeting of the Association said, in private conversation, that he had attended the annual meetings of most of the religious denominations in the State, and then went on to say how these different meetings impressed him. Passing over what he said of the other denominations, I was delighted to hear him say that he had always been impressed when in a Baptist meeting that he was among a large number of practical men, who came together to transact business and plan for work.

In this Association the letters are all in the hands of the clerk before the Association meets, and a program of the exercises prepared by the executive committee. So in thirty minutes the Association was organized and the regular work of the body was in progress.

Another feature of the exercises which I wish to emphasize was the splendid reports which were read on the different subjects for discussion. This was done by the appointing of brethren to do this work a year ago, and thus having plenty of time to do the work. The reports not only contained valuable suggestions for the speaker, but many facts which were interesting to all who heard them.

We were placed under special obligations for an early report on periodicals. Many of the Associations are considerate in giving this part of the work an early hearing, and in this way giving us whatever benefit comes from the discussion.

We had an excellent sermon by Bro. F. H. Martin, pastor at Lumberton. His sermon will appear in the RECORDER next week.

The report on Home Missions was ably discussed by brethren J. A. Smith, W. R. Gwaltney, J. B. Brewer and W. J. Fulford. Bro. W. R. Gwaltney found much at the Robeson Association to encourage and aid him in his work for ministerial education.

The report on general education was read by Col. T. F. Toon who, after making a few remarks, yielded to Dr. G. T. Winston, President of the University at Chapel Hill, who occupied the remainder of the time allotted to this subject. Dr. Winston is an easy, attractive speaker, and makes a strong plea for the education of the people.

President Hobgood of Oxford and Brewer of Murfreesboro called the attention of the Association to their schools for girls.

Dr. Pritchard was present, to the delight of us all, and made a fine address on the subject of Foreign Missions.

I find much interest among the brethren of the Association in the new school building now going up at Lumberton. This will no doubt be one of the finest preparatory schools in the State, and will not only be a great blessing to this Association, but will be one of the sources from which Wake Forest will draw students in the future.

The brethren at Fair Bluff took care of the Association in a royal manner. In addition to the delicious supplies which we are accustomed to find at Baptist Associations, we found the greatest abundance of fine fish which they caught out of Lumber river.

I wish through the RECORDER to express the hearty thanks of all present for the many kindnesses we received at the hands of the brethren and citizens of Fair Bluff.

....Rev. C. A. G. Thomas of Greensboro, writes: "We are having fine crowds, last night every seat in the house was filled and we had to use some chairs. I thank God and take courage. We are reaching numbers who have not been attending church heretofore."

....The Ram's Horn, one of our sprightliest exchanges, is under the necessity of suspension. Lack of funds is the cause. We are surprised at this, as this paper had a national circulation. It takes money to run newspapers, as well as brains and grit. —Atlantic Methodist.

....Miss Fannie E. Heck, of North Carolina, president Woman's Missionary Union, charmed all present with an address on missions, showing the intimate and inseparable connection of the Home and Foreign work. So says the Baltimore Baptist in its account of the Woman's Baptist Home Mission Society in Baltimore.

....Churchill J. Gibson, one of the oldest and most distinguished Episcopal ministers in the country, died at his home in Petersburg, Va., Oct. 31st, after a protracted illness. Deceased was born in Richmond and was seventy-one years of age. For the past fifty-one years he has been rector of Grace Episcopal church, Petersburg.

....An interesting protracted meeting held at Emaus Baptist church all during last week, came to a close Sunday evening, resulting in twelve conversions and five additions to the church. The meeting was conducted by Rev. J. H. Edwards, of this city, who was ably assisted by Rev. G. L. Finch, of LaGrange.—The Headlight.

....In a recent associational meeting we heard a speaker whose every other sentence had in it "It seems to me." Many speakers "seem" unable to avoid this phrase. The Living Church, remarking on the Episcopal Convention at Baltimore, says: "'It seems to me' is still quite frequently heard on the floor of the House of Deputies, and yet the sentiment of the poet remains true, in many cases, that 'things are other than they seem.'"—Inquirer.

....The Treasurer of the Convention requests that when money is sent by individuals or churches for the Centennial mission fund, or for the other objects of the Convention, that proper designation be made as to amount, object, and by what church, society, or individual, paid. By complying with this request, contributors will prevent mistakes, and save the time, correspondence and printing to correct them.

....The report on Temperance then came up and was read by Rev. D. A. Glenn and then discussed. Rev. F. M. Jordan told of how he was praying to God to kill all the whiskey men in the country and let them go on to hell and when he said that it looked like everybody said amen away down in his heart.—Asheville Baptist. The foregoing appears in the report of the proceedings of the Western Baptist Convention. We hope for the credit of our Western brethren that the report is incorrect. We cannot see how any christian could say "Amen away down in his heart" to a prayer that God would kill and send to hell any human being. How much better would it be to pray that the power of God might be exercised in saving these men from sin and from hell. We are very much opposed to the whiskey traffic but we cannot say, amen, to any such horrible prayer.

....I want to thank you for sending me so promptly my lost RECORDER for Oct. 19th, and especially for the very timely editorial in that paper. It is indeed strange to what extremes maddening partyism will sometimes lead otherwise good men. How much of the spirit of proscription there is sometimes found outside of the Catholic hierarchy even among Baptists, the professed champions of free speech and free thought! May God overrule the folly of men to his own glory.—J. M. White, Edgefield, S. C.

....A private letter from Rev. G. W. Greene, missionary of the Southern Baptist Convention at Canton, China, gives us personally very sincere pleasure on account of various personal allusions and mentions. Mr. Green writes concerning the mission at Canton: "The work of our mission here is hopeful. The opposition to foreigners, so prevalent in Central China, has produced little impression here. There seems to be a growing disposition on the part of the people to hear the gospel, and there are frequent baptisms."—Standard.

....Yesterday, the 30th of October, was a day which will be long remembered by the people at Sandy Hook. Dr. A. E. Owen of Portsmouth, Va., was with me and preached the dedicatory sermon in our new house at that place. To say it was a good sermon does not express the universal opinion expressed by all who heard it. It was one of the best sermons I ever heard for the occasion—clear and strong, (I need not say, and sound). The congregation was immense, estimated to be between 500 and 700. The Dr. beat himself on the collection, raising $800—equal to at least $700 or $800 in good times.—R. R. Overby.

...."A test of a true gentleman is, that one man can prefer the comfort of another to that of himself."—Dr. G. T. Winston, in a speech on general education at Fair Bluff. The foregoing is a prime definition, and, like most of our best thoughts, is directly traceable to the teaching which our Saviour left us. Abraham showed true gentlemanly instincts as well as a spirit of christianity, when he gave to Lot the right of way and choice of pastures for his flock. Then the burning words of the great Teacher, "He that is greatest among you let him be your servant," and "As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them," will live and grow in their comprehensive power as long as time shall last. —J. C. C.

....The time was, and not so long ago either, when Baptist meetings, such as our Associations and even our Conventions, did not possess the interest they do now. We are glad now that the character of these meetings is such as not only interests our own people, but we frequently see representative men of other denominations present. How has this come about? The answer is plain: Wake Forest College has year after year sent out to all parts of the State preachers and teachers who are constant in their efforts to improve the educational interest of our people. The BIBLICAL RECORDER has for more than a half century tried to urge on the Baptists of North Carolina what they now hope to obtain. And now let our people remember that their future progress depends upon the loyalty with which they support their own organized agencies to do their work.—J. C. C.

....Our pastor, Rev. C. A. G. Thomas, has been so busy since his arrival that very few know the real good he has done during his short stay. Bro. Thomas came to us during the hot August weeks. Since his coming our congregations have trebled in numbers, crowds flocking to hear him who heretofore were strangers to the house of God. Our people are more liberal and more spiritual than they ever have been before. In the State Normal School over thirty Baptist families are represented. The strong voices of the young girls add much to our singing. Plans are on foot for a new Sunday-school room and increased facilities for mission work. Few men could do more solid work in ten weeks than Bro. Thomas has, and we can't get through thanking the Lord that he has raised a Joshua to take this place for Christ Jesus.—W. W. K., Greensboro, N. C.

....Within the past three months forty Baptist associations have met in the State. The work of the past year has been summed up and work for the present year has been laid out by the churches of the associations. Hardly a jar has been felt in all of these gatherings. There is no diversity of opinion among our brethren in regard to the work which ought to be done. As to how this work shall be done, there is just about the same unanimity of sentiment as there is that the work ought to be done. The discussions on missions have been very able, and in the highest sense educative to the people. There has hardly ever been so vigorous a campaign on the subject of general education. At all of these associations the claims of Wake Forest, of Murfreesboro Institute, of Oxford Female Seminary, and of High Point Female College have been ably presented by the representatives of these schools.

Meeting at Capeheart's.

Dear Recorder:—We commenced a meeting of days with the church at Capeheart's, in Bertie county, on the first Sunday in October, and closed on the second Sunday following. We had a very precious meeting, and I hope much good was accomplished. Elder Bristoe of Coleraine helped me in the meeting, and did some splendid work for the Master. The church, I believe, was greatly blest. Eighteen made a profession of religion and united with the church. I have been serving the church at Capeheart's for eight years, and love the people there dearly, and have every evidence that they love me. God bless the dear old church in my earnest prayer. W. P. JORDAN.

Churches Served Blessed with Revivals.

Dear Recorder:—The Lord has recently blessed each of the churches I am serving with a revival of religion.

A four-days' meeting in July at Ramoth Gilead resulted in apparent good to the church and the conversion and baptism of a few persons. Bro. Josiah Elliott assisted in the meeting and did very acceptable service.

The week after the third Sunday in September we held a meeting at Woodville, a church I began to preach for the first of this year. Bro. C. J. Woodson did faithful preaching for three days. I believe his strong, soul-stirring sermons will prove to be of lasting benefit to the church and community. I baptized seventeen at the close of the meeting.

The next week we held a good meeting at South Mills. Dr. R. R. Overby preached four able sermons in the first part of the meeting. Bro. Overby was pastor of this church for seventeen years, which was the most prosperous and harmonious period of all its history. We were glad to have him in the meeting. Brother Elliott came on Wednesday and continued till the close of the meeting. He preached the gospel faithfully and well, and made a good impression. The church was greatly revived and strengthened, and several professed faith in Jesus. At the close of the meeting I baptized five.

The first week in October we held a very precious meeting at Corinth. Dr. C. S. Blackwell of Elizabeth City went out and preached a few times. His sermons were strong and effective, and his visit to the church was greatly appreciated. Brethren Davis and Elliott preached some good sermons also. The pastor preached a few times and the church was alive and in earnest. The Spirit was with us from the beginning to the close of the meeting. In my judgment I have not witnessed a more spiritual meeting in a long time. As a result I baptized forty-five. Others joined by letter. The Lord be praised for such a glorious revival. This church has had a wonderful growth since its organization one year ago last August. Thirty-six men and women, poor in this world's goods but rich in faith, organized in a school-house. I began as pastor the first of September following. They now number about 120. Fifty-four of this number I have baptized. They have built and paid for a beautiful house of worship, which cost about $1,400. We bless the Lord for such wonderful success.

The Lord's work seems to be making progress in this part of his kingdom. We are all delighted with Dr. Calvin S. Blackwell, the new pastor of the Elizabeth City church. The impression he has already made is of the highest order. He is not only a very able preacher, but a most excellent pastor. He works well at home, but does not confine his work to his own flock. He seems to take pleasure in running out and assisting his brethren in union meetings and protracted meetings. I believe the Baptists of North Carolina, and especially the church here, are to be congratulated because Dr. Blackwell is among them.

Dr. Overby seems to be renewing his youth as the years go by. He preaches the old gospel he has preached and loved so long, perhaps with greater earnestness and power than ever before. He said in a speech a short time ago, "I thought awhile back that I was growing old and would have to retire, but when I look around me and see the work to be done, I cannot afford to get old."

Bro. Josiah Elliott has labored in between fifteen and twenty protracted meetings this summer and fall, and has been successful in all. The Lord's work prospers in his hands and he is greatly beloved. He has received a call to the church in Hertford and has accepted.

Brethren P. S. C. Davis and N. P. Stallings seem to be moving on well in their work.

We have just closed a very pleasant session of the Camden and Currituck Union Meeting—some say the best in ten years. Dr. Blackwell preached the introductory sermon which was very much enjoyed.

The Union laid plans for doing a great deal more work at home than they have been heretofore doing.

On Sunday the Pleasant Grove church, where the Union was in session was dedicated. Dr. A. E. Owen of Portsmouth preached the dedicatory sermon. It was one of Dr. Owen's best efforts, and those who have been so fortunate as to have heard him know what that means. It is always a benediction and blessing to have this good brother step across the line and preach one of his good sermons. He is one of those preachers that make you feel better and wiser every time you hear him preach, or are permitted to spend a while in his company. May he come often.

The new church is a beauty and a monument to the judgment, perseverance and sacrifice of Dr. Overby and to the liberality of the brethren and sisters. The small debt still due on the church was soon wiped out after the dedicatory sermon, and they are hopeful and happy. J. B. HARRELL.

Letter from Shelby.

Dear Recorder:—Perhaps the brethren in North Carolina would like to hear from a new brother coming into their midst.

Our church here is moving on nicely. We fully sustained all pledges to the Association just passed, and are moving on to enlarged contributions in this Associational year. Although Shelby church might be called the home of our beloved missionary, Rev. G. P. Bostick (his father being a deacon), yet she has not cut down her pledges through the Board, though at stated times collections are taken for him personally, these being in excess of pledges to the Board.

A good work is being done in the King's Mountain Association by our Sunday-school Convention every fifth Sabbath. As the Association decided to send all their contributions direct to the State Board, our collection at the Convention last Sunday, held at New Hope, will be sent to the Board. It is to be hoped that our Board will do some work, sorely needed, in the bounds of the King's Mountain Association.

Shelby has contributed her quota of boys to Wake Forest this year. Our College has a strong hold on the hearts of our people here in Cleveland county.

The Lord has added to the church here in Shelby since Feb. 1st, forty-five, seven of these being by baptism.

I find the holding of cottage prayer-meetings, to be productive of great good. Try them, dear brother, and they will do you good.

I have nothing to regret in the Lord's work here at Shelby, but the fact that our female college is not running at present. A fine property, and only needing a good man to take hold of it.

I expect to be on hand at the meeting of our State Convention, and form the acquaintance of my North Carolina brethren. I feel sorely the fact that as yet I am comparatively a stranger to my brethren in the Old North State.

One can never feel home sick among the good people of Shelby. The Lord has graciously favored Zion in our midst.

We are praying the Lord to thrust more of our young men out into the ministry. The indications are now that this hope will in the near future be realized.

We try to see to it that the BIBLICAL RECORDER and Foreign Mission Journal are in every Baptist home in our midst.

I will close by asking a question of my more experienced brethren in the pastorate. What is to be done with a people, who are orthodox, liberal on all lines (especially missions), fill the house on Sabbath morning and evening, but seemingly forget the Wednesday evening prayer-meetings? How can I get the church generally to come out to the prayer meetings? My trouble I know to be that of many, many good, strong churches, especially in our large cities. More anon. J. L. SPROLES.

A Letter from Winston.

We have had a gracious meeting in our church. Bro. O. L. Stringfield was with us eight days and preached the word with great simplicity and power. He resorts to no "tricks" that he may count "confessions." He preaches the whole gospel, relying upon the Spirit for power and success. Our people loved him before he came to assist in the meeting, but they love him more now. He will hold a large place in the affections of the people of Winston Salem. Twenty-two have been baptized, and a number of others await the ordinance.

Bro. L. G. Broughton preached two very earnest and effective sermons at the beginning of the meeting.

Our people are encouraged. The crying need with us is a larger and better house of worship. We need room for our Sunday-school and for our congregations. I am not without hope that a move will be made soon to supply this long felt need.

THE WORK AT BROAD STREET.

They had a precious meeting not long since, and are now in a most hopeful state. Their pastor is a live, energetic worker. He is always moving and he has his church like a bee-hive. The membership is three times as large as it was a few months ago. The congregations fill the house. I will not write of the improvements they are making on their house of worship. It is sufficient to say that it is attractive and convenient. In my judgment there is no more hopeful field in the State. The town is growing rapidly and the future of this church is full of promise. The State Board acted very wisely when they made the last appropriation to this point. It will not be long before the church will be strong and self-sustaining. The pastor has the ear of the community, and is making his influence felt for the cause of truth and righteousness.

The Union meeting of the Pilot Mountain Association was not largely attended, but good speeches were made and good sermons were preached. The brethren have their faces toward the future.

I hope we may have a pleasant session of the Convention in your city.

Fraternally, H. A. BROWN.

From Chester, Pennsylvania.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—About the second week in this month our young Bro. H. R. Overton came to the Seminary expecting to enter at once upon his studies; but the next day after his arrival he was taken sick with a severe attack of intermittent fever, and, consequently, had to take his bed. A few days after this he had one or two hemorrhages, and we thought the end was near, but he rallied, and is now slowly but surely, we think, getting well. This will be good news to his heart-strickened mother, brothers and sisters, and to a host of friends in Camden county, N. C., which is his native county and State. I can assure them that our dear class mate and brother has had the very best medical attention and professional nursing that could be procured in this city. Under this he is getting well, and will soon, if he obeys the laws of prudence, occupy his place in the class rooms.

Many of us students, who were actively engaged in the ministry before coming here, are even now longing for a chance to preach the "old, old story" to the people. But those who are here for the first year have but few opportunities for preaching. Students of the Seminary do more preaching than those of the first year.

This is no place for idleness. I usually begin my studies, either at my home or in the Senior year building, at seven o'clock in the morning and keep closely at it till 10:30 at night. C. W. MATTHEWS.

Meeting at Fork Church.

The meeting at Fork church was continued a week from October 24th. Our young pastor, J. B. Newton, who has his first pastorate here this year, was aided by Rev. N. S. Jones of Salisbury. We feel that Bro. Jones was sent by God to do a special work among us. He stayed with us four days and preached ten of the best sermons we have heard. The gospel of Jesus delivered in plain English, with the most simple and effective illustrations, and his pleasing manner, won our hearts not from God but for God. Our revival was a most glorious one. About forty professions were made. Several are restored to the church, and thirty have been baptized by our pastor. Two others are waiting for baptism. Our pastor lives among us, and is a most faithful worker. His labors are blessed with great results.

My school here at Fork Academy is in a prosperous condition.

Letter from Durham.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—We have just closed a most excellent and fruitful meeting in the First church, which continued two weeks. Dr. A. B. Woodfin of Hampton, Va., was with us for a week, but to our sorrow was called home on Tuesday on account of a death in his church. Since then the interest has continued unabated until we closed last night, when there were a number in the large, solemn congregation who asked for prayer.

Dr. Woodfin's earnest, forcible gospel preaching was greatly blessed both in the conversion of sinners and in the edification of christians. We all felt that the Lord sent him to us, and we are very grateful for the good results accomplished by his labors among us. We have already received ten additions to the church by baptism, and there are others to follow. But I think the evident and best fruit of the meeting is in the church. Our people are thoroughly revived, and I trust will now go forward in the Lord's work with renewed zeal and consecration. Fraternally yours,

W. C. TYREE.

J. M. BROUGHTON, Chm'n Com.

Raleigh, N. C.

From Hyde County, N. C.

Dear Recorder:—Through the abounding mercy and goodness of God, I am thankful to say to the Baptists of North Carolina that notwithstanding the opposition I have had to contend with in my field of work, the cause seems to be producing the desired effect. While I have many things to encourage me in my laborious work, yet those who are opposed to us try to discourage me by saying that we will never be able to organize a church in this section. But I find written in the word of God that all things work together for good to them that love God. With so many precious promises of the Lord to rely upon, I feel to say that Satan and his host combined cannot discourage me. And all that I regret is, that I am so situated that I cannot devote my entire time to our noble work.

I am thankful to say through the RECORDER to the brethren generally not to be discouraged. I believe the way is opened. I had the pleasure of baptizing three sisters last Tuesday upon a confession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and am ready, as soon as we can get two or three male members, to organize a Missionary Baptist church in Hyde county. I have never seen a greater display of earnestness in candidates for baptism than was displayed in those three young ladies. The weather was cold and inclement, but they went down into the water calmly and came up out of the water, and like the Eunuch, went on their way rejoicing. Brethren, pray for us, that we may have others to do likewise.

May the Lord in his mercy and blessings upon me put it in the hearts and minds of the brethren composing the Yeopim Union to send Rev. Josiah Elliott down here to help me, for he is just the man to aid me in my hard and laborious field. When he was here, he labored hard. Everybody loved him, and I believe his health and throat trouble improved every day while here. Hope he will soon come again and be with me at least one month. I also want other ministering brethren to come and see for themselves.

Dear brethren, we must have a church here, and I want the first one built right where I live. Dear brethren, pray for me and my work. W. R. CARAWAN.

Alexander Association.

Dear Recorder:—Brethren Durham and Caddell, missing connection at Statesville, failed to reach this Association, and no one having made any report of the proceedings, I will venture a few notes.

The body convened with the church in Taylorsville, and the annual sermon was preached by Bro. W. J. Bumgarner.

The body was organized by electing Bro. W. E. White, Moderator, and Bro. Thomas Hudson, Clerk.

Bro. W. R. Gwaltney was present two days, and made a good speech on Friday in behalf of ministerial education, and preached a good sermon on Thursday night.

Bro. E. J. Edwards was present in the interest of Charity and Children and the Orphanage.

Brethren W. A. Pool and J. C. Turner of Statesville were in attendance—Bro. Pool representing missions; but having to leave on Saturday, I failed to hear the discussion on missions, but I have understood since there was a warm discussion on Foreign Missions. Bro. Pool championed the subject for the Foreign Mission Board.

I rather like the plan of this body in appointing committees on the various objects a year in advance, and requiring the chairman to make the opening speech. By this plan the reports are always ready and well prepared, and the body gets some good speeches from its own members.

The Association has some good pastors and many good laymen. Of the former, are L. P. and J. P. Gwaltney, C. C., J. B., and D. W. Pool, W. J. Bumgarner and J. M. Shaver. They are good preachers, but might be a little more aggressive in some respects. I am not sure that these pastors are as careful in teaching their people to help their pastors as they ought. These brethren seem to have adopted for their motto, "The pastor must sacrifice with his people," but I am not sure but these pastors do the greater share of the sacrificing. Then I wish these good brethren could be induced to attend the next session of our State Convention, and get acquainted with the pastors over the State, and let others get acquainted with them, and I would be glad if some of the members of their flocks, who may read these lines, would see to it that if these brethren fail to attend this year, the fault shall not lie at the door of their churches. I simply wish that their churches would make up money enough to pay their railroad fare, and say, "Brethren, go."

This Association has received a valuable addition in the person of Bro. J. A. White, who is reviving the old Taylorsville Institute. He is repairing the building and modernizing the interior. His prospects for a large and paying school are very promising.

The Association was well entertained by the good people of the town vicinity. Any one attending a session of this body once is likely to want to go again.

CALDWELL COUNTY UNION MEETING.

We have just closed a good meeting of this body held with the Lenoir church. It was not so largely attended as some other sessions, but the spirit of the meeting was good.

Bro. C. E. Gower was with us, and aided us greatly.

On Sunday, Bro. T. C. Buchanan preached a good sermon to a large congregation, which was followed by a fairly good collection for Foreign Missions.

At night, Bro. Gower preached us a good sermon.

The next session will be held with Union church.

The Associational Executive Committee was in session during the meeting, but I have not learned their proceedings, but I suppose they employed Bro. H. M. Croom as Associational missionary.

Dedication of Pleasant Grove Church.

Dear Recorder:—At the request of Dr. R. R. Overby, I went out to Camden county, N. C., to assist in the dedication of a new house of worship built by the Baptists at a place they call Pleasant Grove. It is about six miles southeast from Shawboro. This church is a proof that a few people can accomplish a great deal. There was one family in the neighborhood who were Baptists, but they had not done a great deal as christians until they decided to build a house unto the Lord. The name of this family is Gregory. The father and one of the sons cut and hauled the logs to the saw-mill from which was cut all the timber in the church except the ceiling. In addition to that, the father gave four hundred dollars, and endorsed all the notes by which the most of the money was obtained. I ought not, I must not, leave out the fact that Sister Gregory was the inspiration of much that was accomplished. The church is one of the largest and most beautiful country houses of worship in North Carolina.

On Sunday, Oct. 30th, there was a great congregation assembled to witness the dedicatory exercises. I preached the sermon, and at its close I took a collection, aided by Dr. Overby, brethren Davis, Harrell and Stallings. It was said the community was poor, and that the people had no money. We asked for three hundred dollars—two hundred and fifty being the amount still due. We received two hundred and ninty-two dollars, and I think Dr. Overby got the eight dollars before he left the grounds.

Dr. Overby is as bright and hopeful, as full of work and zeal, as he was when I first met him in 1858, thirty four years ago.

Rev. J. B. Harrell lives in Elizabeth City and is the pastor of four good country churches. Bro. Harrell is an eloquent, genial and cultivated gentleman, and his usefulness will increase as the years roll.

Rev. N. P. Stallings was present. I had not met him before. He is an earnest preacher and a fine-looking man. How fortunate these brethren are in their wives; both of them have elegant and useful companions.

That afternoon Bro. Harrell took me in his buggy to Elizabeth City, where I found a welcome in the home of Dr. C. S. Blackwell as one of the brightest and most cultivated men of my acquaintance. I had assisted at his ordination, when he came from the Disciples to the Baptists. He gave me a cordial welcome, and his charming lady treated me as if I had been an own brother. I preached for Dr. Blackwell that night. What a beautiful house of worship! How comfortably warmed and artistically arranged! Dr. Blackwell has a great field, and there is before him abundant success. His people are delighted with him.

I heard a good many kind things said about Rev. C. A. G. Thomas, the former pastor. A. E. OWEN.

P. S. I neglected to say in its proper place that Rev. Phillip Davis, pastor at Shiloh—not far from the new church—rendered us good service in the singing, and he accomplished much in the collection, being a man well known and greatly beloved.

Revival Meetings.

Dear Recorder:—On the second Sunday in October we commenced a protracted meeting at Kernersville. Elder J. K. Fant of High Point was with us to do the preaching; and he did it most acceptably. Ten were received for baptism, and I think others will come.

It was a quiet meeting, but such as helps the church and strengthens the pastor's hands. Bro. Fant is always prudent and helpful in such meetings.

The meeting at New Friendship church began the fourth Sunday in October. We had the efficient services of Elders Thomas Carrick and C. C. Haymore through the meeting.

This was one of the best meetings ever held there. The brethren were faithful and earnest in the presentation of the truth. On Monday there were eleven or twelve professions of faith in Christ. On account of the approach of the union meetings, we had to close on Thursday following. We received nineteen for baptism and one restored. The church seemed to be ready for the meeting. "Praise ye the Lord."

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I acknowledge the following contributions for the rebuilding of Pine Level Baptist church: Brethren J. W. G. Scott, A. B. Hunter, C. Durham, P. T. Massey, H. W. Ayer, C. B. Biggs, Moseley Hotel, and Chowan Baptist Female Institute, each 50 cts.; Bro. W. N. Jones, 75 cts. Total, $18 45. If ten brethren and sisters whom the Lord has prospered in this world's goods would send us five dollars each we would be able to complete our house. Who will be the first to respond? Gospels from two Testaments.

This is an interesting volume of sermons prepared by Baptist ministers and covering the International Sunday-school lessons for the year 1893. It has been carefully edited by Dr. Andrews, president of Brown University. Every sermon is a good one, and we recognize many a friend in the list of the brethren who speak in this book. It is an excellent work for ministers, Sunday-school superintendents, and all who desire a good Sunday work out of the formal, ordinary way. The book is published by E. A. Johnson & Co., Providence, R. I. H.

God's Wisdom, or Our Wish?

Do we really want God to do what he deems best for us? Or is there in our minds a latent or half-repressed fear that he will do for us, that which he knows to be best, rather than that which we hope he will deem best? These questions may help us to disclose ourselves to ourselves.—S. S. Times.

Rev. C. S. Cashwell recently closed a protracted meeting at Eaton's church, Davie county. There were thirteen additions to the church.

Last week was Charleston's gala week. Many attractions were made and large crowds attended.

Raleigh Association.

THE OLD CHURCH—ACCOMMODATIONS FOR SLAVES, &C.

The eighty-seventh annual session of this Association (for the body was organized in 1805) met with the old church in Smithfield, N. C., on Thursday, the 27th of October, 1892. The church house is of the antebellum style with wide galleries supported by columns extending the full length of the sides and across the end of the house opposite the pulpit. These galleries were erected for the accommodation of the colored people when they were slaves, and when masters and servants met together in the same houses of worship, held their membership in the same churches, listened to the same sermons, united in the same hymns of praise, and were communicants at the same Lord's table. In those days there were frequently more colored than white communicants in our North Carolina Baptist churches, and it was no unusual thing for a slave-owner to preach to, baptize, and administer the Lord's Supper to his own "servants" (for we called them "servants" then and not "slaves," and the christian slave in matters of religion was treated by his christian master as "the Lord's freeman," and his own brother in Christ). The last ministerial service which the writer performed in Wayne county before the surrender of Gen. Lee was the baptism of two of his father's slaves and their reception into the fellowship of Falling Creek church. The first time he ever administered the ordinance of baptism to any one was when a chaplain of the Fourth Regiment of North Carolina Volunteers at Suffolk, Va., he baptized twelve negroes, who were slaves, in the Nansemond river, in the summer of 1861. The statistical tables of all our associations contained separate columns for white and black members, and these columns frequently showed a larger black than white membership in many of the churches. They were not designated "colored people" then as now, although many shades of color were visible in large congregations. A christian minister received as much joy from the conversion of his slave as he did from the conversion of his white neighbor. It was probably owing to the christian affection existing between the races, that these people remained at home, supporting by their farm labor the wives and daughters of their white owners, while the husbands and sons were gallantly fighting the battles of the Southern Confederacy, although the more intelligent among them had opportunities of learning, that the defeat of the South would result in their liberation.

In this old church, built many years before the late war, delegates were assembled on the 27th of October from fifty white Baptist churches in Wake and Johnston and Harnett counties. Among the visiting brethren who were welcomed to seats in the body were Dr. J. D. Hufham of Tarboro, hunting money to build a mission church in Edgecombe; Dr. Scott of New York with religious books to sell to the preachers; J. H. Mills, who refused an LL. D., to plead for the orphans; Dr. C. Durham, Cor. Sec. of the Baptist State Convention; Dr. W. R. Gwaltney, representing the Board of Ministerial Education; J. C. Caddell of the BIBLICAL RECORDER; Rev. A. D. Hunter of Greenville; Presidents Taylor, Hobgood and Brewer, who spoke on general education and represented the institutions over which they reside; and the writer who reported as a visitor from the Central Association and agent of the RECORDER.

Bro. Edwin S. Moore was elected Moderator, and L. O. Lougee, Clerk.

The following ordained ministers belonging to the Association were present, viz., Dr. J. J. Hall, O. C. Horton, F. H. Poston, J. R. Maynard, C. W. Blanchard, J. W. Rose, W. C. Nowell, Worley Creech and W. M. Sorrell.

The reports from the mission fields in Johnston county were very encouraging. Rev. J. W. Rose had been employed as missionary for the whole of his time, and Revs. O. C. Horton, F. H. Poston and W. Creech had occupied several mission stations with gratifying success. Houses of worship had been built or repaired at Four Oaks, Princeton, Pine Level and Lucama, a new station on Wilson Short Cut R. R.; and steps taken to organize a church and build a house at Blackman's X Roads, five miles from Smithfield.

The churches were reaching out on their borders and organizing new Sunday schools. Smithfield reported two schools, Hephzibah in Wake county five schools, and other churches more than one.

Not only were the churches in Smithfield supplied with preaching on Sunday, but ministers and laymen went out in the afternoon and held services at some of the mission stations.

Bro. N. B. Broughton, after addressing the Sunday-school mass meeting in town in the morning, spoke at two other points in the afternoon and at night.

All but two of the visiting ministers left on Saturday. One of these, Doctor Scott, preached a very able sermon on Baptist doctrine in the Baptist church at 11:30 o'clock. The other preached at 11 o'clock in the Methodist church and at 7:30 in the Baptist church. The congregations were large and attentive. One man arose for prayer at the night service, but the minister failed to see him.

Take it all together, this was one of the most enjoyable associations the writer ever attended.

Rev. I. N. Steelman and wife, from Pa[illegible], N. Y., who were appointed some time [illegible] have joined our Mexican forces and [illegible] assigned to a new field in Oaxaca, the [illegible] of a State of the same name, lying [illegible] southeast of the State of Mexico.

Rev. R. H. Waine and wife sailed on the [illegible] of China," from Vancouver, on [illegible] September, for their field of labor in Japan. Bro. Waine will join Bro. McCollum in Kokura, and will bring cheer to the workers there, who have been made sad by the departure of Bro. Brunson.

Rev. H. R. Moseley of Saltillo, Mexico, was peremptorily ordered home by his physician several months ago, to avoid a sudden and complete prostration. He rested a short time in Greenville, S. C., but as soon as possible returned to Mexico, reaching there in time to attend the meeting of the Association in September.

Rev. W. B. Bagby and family arrived from Brazil in September, the former having been threatened with a general break-down, to avoid which his physician in Rio had advised a trip home. He has been at work in the very trying climate of Rio for five years. Business men allow their foreign employees a rest every three years. Brother Bagby will put in some good work for the Board while at home, and hopes to return in the spring.

Rev. R. T. Bryan of Chinkiang, China, has consented to move to Shanghai, to take the place left vacant by Bro. Herring. This is done by Bro. Bryan at a great personal sacrifice, as he is devoted to his Chinkiang work, and has just began to reap the fruits of his faithful sowing there for several years past. But he realizes the importance of the Shanghai work and yields his personal preferences to the good of the work.

There has been a redistribution of forces in Mexico, by which our field of operations has been greatly increased in extent and a number of valuable strategic points occupied. Bro. Moseley holds the fort at Saltillo in the State of Coahuila, with Brother Watkins in the same State, to the northwest of him, and a true and tried native brother to the southwest. Bro. Rudd takes hold of Zacatecas, capital of the State, from the high elevation and rare atmosphere of which it was necessary for Mrs. McCormick to remove. Brother McCormick goes to Morelia, capital of the State of Michoacan, a new and excellent field. Between the States of Zacatecas and Michoacan lies Guanajuato, at whose capital, of the same name, Bro. D. A. Wilson has taken position. Bro. Goldsmith continues work at Guadalajara, capital of Jalisco, still further south. Brother Powell has settled at Toluca, the capital of the State of Mexico, while to the north of him Bro. Chastain is found, located at Doctor Arroyo, in the State of Nuevo Leon, the center of a promising field. To the southeast of Mexico, at Oaxaca, capital of the State, is to be found Bro. I. N. Steelman. Nearly all of these brethren are supported by tried native helpers, and they are planning large things for the Lord in Mexico. May the Spirit of the Lord be upon them.

While telling of the location of our brethren in Mexico, it should not be forgotten that we have a number of excellent lady workers there, who in school, and from house to house, are leading souls to Christ. At Saltillo, Misses McDavid, Cabaniss and Barton will work; Mrs. Duggan remains at Guadalajara, and Miss Hale at Parras; Miss Mayberry goes to Toluca, and Miss Smelser to Guanajuato.

Rev. W. E. Entzminger, by advice of the Bahia mission, in Brazil, removes from Bahia to Pernambuco, in which city we have long needed a missionary. Bro. Z. C. Taylor, with Bro. Ginsburg, will carry on the extensive and growing work in the Bahia mission field.—Foreign Mission Journal.

"A chemical success and medical triumph," so speaks an eminent physician in reference to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral; and the eulogy was none too strong. No other medicine is so safe and efficacious in all diseases of the throat and lungs.

Babies are always happy when comfortable. They are comfortable when well. They are apt to be well when fat; they worry and cry when thin.

They ought to be fat; their nature is to be fat.

I have used the within remedy (Pokine) with great success. JAMES H. LASSITER.

I have used the Pokine Remedy (prepared by W. T. Cheatham, Jr.) in case of Sciatica with the result of positive relief in a few hours, and believe if used as directed is will effect a permanent cure.
J. L. H. MISSILLIER.

MARCH 6, 1891.
For the benefit of the public, I unhesitatingly recommend Cheatham's wonderful remedy, "Pokine," to all sufferers of rheumatism. It has produced marvelous results in my case. I was a sufferer of the malady for five years, and after taking a few bottles was entirely cured.
Very respectfully,
W. W. DOWTIN.

HENDERSON, N. C., March 7, '91.
MR. W. T. CHEATHAM:
Dear Sir—My wife was down in bed with rheumatism, and the Pokine I bought of you gave her relief after taking four doses. She has not been troubled since. It is the best medicine she ever took for rheumatism. Respectfully,
ZACK DAVIS.

MR W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Dear Sir—I have been afflicted with rheumatism time and again, for the past thirteen years. I have received more relief from Pokine than any medicine I ever took, and therefore take great pleasure in recommending it to all sufferers of rheumatism. Very respectfully,
F. G. MITCHELL.

JANUARY 19, 1891.
W. T. CHEATHAM, JR.:
Dear Sir—I desire to say that in January last I was down with rheumatism; my suffering was great, and I was completely prostrated. One bottle of your Pokine completely relieved me, and I have not had any rheumatism since. My son also was relieved of rheumatism by Pokine.
Yours truly,
CHARLES G. BURROUGHS.

Your rheumatic cure, Pokine, has completely cured me. I. M. GREEN.

MR. W. T. CHEATHAM, JR., Henderson, N. C.:
Dear Sir—Being asked my opinion of your rheumatic remedy, Pokine, will gladly state I deem it the only medicine of its kind on the market that will accomplish that which is exclusively claimed for it. Being a sufferer of rheumatism, I consequently tried many remedies, until finally relieved by Pokine. Very respectfully,
J. A. KELLY.

Being, not Seeming.

"To be, or not to be; that is the question;" says the mad prince face to face with death. But we are faced with a more serious choice to-day. "To be, or to seem to be, is a more far-reaching question than the other.

Death does not end being, it does not change seeming to being. The walk through the valley of the shadow of death does not change hypocrisy to integrity; the mask may fall during the journey, and the real character be revealed, but death has no power to change character.

The one vice that always aroused the indignation of the Master was hypocrisy. "Woe unto you, Pharisees and Scribes, hypocrites;" "Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy."

The hypocrite is the old name for the actor. On the Greek stage actors wore masks, and answered under it. A hypocrite then was one who answered under a mask, one who assumed a part, hence feigned, pretended—one whose real character was disguised. On the stage, where all is acting, no one is deceived, but not infrequently the actor is so lost in his part that he becomes self deceived, and thinks he is what he assumes to be.

There is especial danger in the religious life that we assume virtues that we do not possess, deceive ourselves, and lead others astray. Very few people consciously act the hypocrite. Many are self-deceived, and seem to be what they are not. A rogue may be convicted of his sin, but a self-deceived man is very hard to change.

In the religious life a certain type of piety, or form of experience, is set up as a model. What was the natural expression of one or two men is accepted as the proper thing for all. Others set to work to duplicate the experience, and mistake the experience for the life. Matthew was just as much an apostle as were Peter and John, though he left the receipt of custom, and they the washing of nets. Timothy was as really a christian as Paul, though his new life came gently as the sunrise, and Paul's was a cyclone.

When the corn ship was wrecked, all reached shore on bits of wreckage. Probably no two had the same shaped piece, or went through the same experience in every particular, or touched the same place when they reached the island, yet all were saved. In religious experience we are apt to seek duplicates, and finding these, think we have life.

"Assume a virtue if you have it not" is poor advice for any one to follow; the assumption soon leads to hypocrisy.

In the business world false labels, inferior goods, seeming not being, is a combination of lying and stealing. If a man is caught defrauding, though he were himself innocent, having been himself deceived, he must suffer the consequences; if not legally, then morally, in the loss of confidence, and consequent loss of trade. "Honesty is the best policy" as well as the best principle; but the man who is governed by policy only, loses power to tell what is honest and what dishonest. Seeming, persisted in, destroys being.

The man who puts another's name to his note to give it value is a forger; he who pretends to be what he is not is a fraud. There is need of thorough work just here lest we be self-deceived. We cannot afford to make mistakes here; there is too much at stake. Though one should go for a term of years undiscovered, though death should not lift the mask, though one should be taken for his seeming and not real value, yet if he seem other than he is the process of disintegration is silently going on, and the soul, held up to the light of the judgment, will fall to pieces like a moth-eaten garment.

"This above all—to thine own self be true;
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man."

Integrity, consciousness of right thinking and motive, knowledge that you are all you claim to be, gives great strength in action and endurance. Let life be the tree in the orchard, fruit the natural expression of it. Better one honest word from the heart expressing being than a thousand from the lips voicing what seems to be. Better one dead that bodies being than a thousand that bear witness to what seems to be, but is not.—Young People's Union.

First.

The Young Reaper was the first Sunday-school periodical issued by the American Baptist Publication Society, and ever since its first appearance, in 1857, it has steadily advanced in favor. It has no superior among the many Sunday-school papers. It goes like God's sunshine into our schools. It makes glad the hearts of our boys and girls. We get both excellence and cheapness in The Young Reaper. Its thirty-four years of honest work and honorable history entitles it to leadership, and it has it.

Sleeplessness.

The most potent and perfect remedy for sleeplessness is to drink hot water. If one awakes in the night, as hopelessly wide awake as if galvanized or electrified with vital activity, an invariable remedy is a glass of perfectly hot—not warm—water. It can be heated over the gas or over a spirit lamp, and sipped while almost at boiling heat, and one who tries it will find himself going off to sleep like an infant, and getting, too, the most restful and peaceful sleep imaginable.—Selected.

The strongest nations are those which conquer the most, so the strongest men are the ones who have experienced the greatest trials successfully.

The one who is afraid to go into the water will never swim, and there are times when timidity will ruin one's prospects in life. Nothing ventured, nothing gained.

Brush Clothes Frequently.

Clothes of wool which are rarely brushed and never hung out of doors soon come to have an appearance of long use, when the same clothes, if carefully brushed every time they are worn and frequently hung out of doors, will always be fresh and will keep their good looks very much longer.

Care should be used to select a brush broom or whisk of fine broom-corn. It will cost more than the coarser ones, but in the end will be a saving, as the coarser ones wear the clothing more rapidly.—Housekeeper.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. "Blest be the Tie that Binds."

This hymn has been in general use for over a hundred years. It has been called 'the best poetical expression of the sentiment of christian brotherhood in the English language.' It was written in 1772, by the Rev. John Fawcett, an English Baptist, of Yorkshire. At the age of sixteen he heard Mr. Whitfield preach, and under that sermon he was converted. He went into the ministry of the Baptist church, and with such zeal and far-reaching sympathy as gave him blessed results.

After serving a little Yorkshire church for seven years he was called to an important church in London. He preached his farewell sermon, packed his goods in wagons and was ready to go. His loving people gathered about him, and 'men, women and children clung around him and his family in perfect agony of soul.' Greatly affected by these expressions of sorrow, Dr. Fawcett and his wife sat down on one of the packing-cases and wept bitterly.

Finally Mrs. Fawcett exclaimed: 'Oh, John, John, I cannot bear this! I know not how to go.'

'Nor I, either,' said the good man; 'nor will we go. Unload the wagons and put everything in place where it was before.'

The decision was hailed with tears of joy, and a letter of explanation was sent to London. He then took up again his Yorkshire work, receiving a salary of less than two hundred dollars a year. He wrote the hymn as a memorial of this experience.—Christian Witness.

Six Ways to Help the Centennial of Missions.

1. Learn what it is all about. Read missionary articles. Buy missionary books. Talk of what you read. Loan your books.
2. Ask your preacher to preach about missions, and show your appreciation of his sermon when preached. Revive the old monthly concert of prayer for missions.
3. Pray for the missions by name in your public gatherings for prayer and study for missions, and in your family and private prayers.
4. Do not decrease your gifts to the regular mission work to make a gift to the Centennial work. Let your enlarged gifts show your heart's thanksgiving. Lay aside a certain sum every month for missions. Do not be satisfied until every member of the church joins you in this. Persevere in the face of discouragement. Have some systematic way of collecting these pledges.
5. Give yourself the joy of sacrificing something for God this year. Make a pure love gift without expectation of return.
6. Encourage the women and children in their mission work. See that they are supplied with Centennial Chapel Fund Cards. Help them in this work. See that Centennial Children's Day is observed in your church.

The Call of God in the Centennial Movement.

EXTRACTS FROM TRACT BY F. M. ELLIS, D. D.

We must not for one moment undervalue the imperative importance of God's call in this Centennial movement. Let no one minimize its divine emphasis. God's providence thus honors us by such an appeal to our faith in him, by such a tribute to our self-denial for the salvation of the perishing. What shall be our answer to this expression of God's confidence in us as his children? What response shall we make to this divine call to duty? Remember that "Power to its last particle is duty."

This year of such splendid possibilities is passing. Six months are gone—but six more remain. What you and I do must be done quickly. What can I do? Nothing less than that will answer the requirements of your duty. Where there is a will there is a way, or a way will be made.

While we need men, women and money in this work of missions, and shall need these more and more as the work enlarges, yet we need even more than we need these, the deepening of a personal interest in Missions, as the work of the ascended Christ and of his redeemed church. We need more than we need money, the realization of a personal sense of our individual responsibility to God in this great work of missions. These given, then the workers and the means would quickly follow. It was this personal conviction of duty and responsibility that made Paul an apostle, that made Carey a missionary.

Wise planning, prompt action, patient, persistent, tireless, personal effort, inspired by prayer, nerved by an unquestioning faith and guided by the Holy Spirit—these requirements constitute the price of a worthy success in this Centennial movement; these are the conditions which, if properly complied with, will make this crisis the grandest success of the century. Let us each one resolve that we will personally do all in our power to realize to the fullest extent, the possibilities which God's providence offers us in this Centennial movement. When we reflect upon the difficulties our Boards have had to meet in raising what they have for mission work, and then consider that $400,000 additional is to be raised this Centennial year, it seems, I confess, a great undertaking. But if we "expect great things" we must "attempt great things," else where is our faith? But is this proposed effort too great for us to attempt? Is it expecting of our Baptist brotherhood and sisterhood of the South too much to ask of each white Baptist an additional thirty cents this year for missions? Thirty cents from each white Baptist of the South will give us $400,000. May God help us each and all to be faithful to the great trusts his providence has committed to us as Baptists in this Centennial Year of Modern Missions.

Japan's Crisis.

"The present commotion in the Buddhist world is a sure forerunner of an approaching storm. The Restoration shook every department of national life; but the field of religion remained for a long time uninvaded by the spirit of innovation. The hour has at last arrived, however, for the destruction of the old and the creation of a new religion. The new religion, which will gradually assume tangible form after the general destruction of existing creeds, will rest upon materials not only old but also new. It will be as difficult and as important to make proper use of the old materials, as to select and apply entirely new ones."

Thus does the Japan Mail of June 25th translate from the Asiya, a Japanese secular paper. The item may be taken as stating candidly, concisely, and truly the condition of Japan, religiously, at the present time. It is thus evident that religiously, no less than politically, Japan is in the midst of a crisis—a condition of things which, it is also evident, the Japanese themselves are realizing. One of their religious papers, quoted in the Mail of January 2d, enumerates the burning of the House of Parliament, the deaths of certain princes, the attack on the Russian Crown Prince at Otsu, the great earthquake of Central Japan, and the sudden extinction of the lamps at Ise Temple, as "the reflex result of the confusion and disorder in Japanese society," and then continues: "The whole nation is a struggling chaos. The fault is with ourselves. Our minds are dark; this is the significance of the extinguishing of the lights at Ise; and thus have all these events their meaning. It is for us to reform our ways and gradually to achieve, by patient individual effort, that happiness for which we are fitted."

Thus Japan is groping for the light. The inadequacy of the old demands the establishment of a new religion. But after the "destruction of existing creeds," what? The new religion—what will it be? Simply an assimilation of "materials not only old but also new?" A combination of ancient codes of morals and modern science and philosophy? A selection and compilation of the "best parts" of Confucianism, Shintoism, Buddhism and Christianity? So have said the leaders in this land of the Sunrise. But how shall we, who have the gospel of Christ, answer this question? If the new religion must be made up of the best parts of several religions, including christianity, shall we be content to let christianity take other than the first place? Nay, shall we not bend every energy to so present christianity to the Japanese, that they will see that it is all sufficient and that they, in striving after that which gives life, will not encumber themselves with that which can only result in death? Japan's crisis is the opportunity of those to whom is committed the Treasure which is above price. Christianity alone and christianity only can bring to the Japanese that true happiness, not only for this life, but for the life to come, which a loving father wishes them, together with all nations of the world, to possess.

The crisis, the opportunity, the duty, go hand in hand. Hence the reiteration of the appeal for reinforcements by the missionaries of the Union in Japan, and hence the earnest prayer that the appeal be heard, and the Baptist cause in Japan built up to the end that the kingdom of God may be hastened in this land.—Rev. S. W. Hamblen, Sendai, in the Baptist Missionary Magazine.

The Relative Authority of Scripture and Reason.

The following paper by Prof. A. T. Robertson, has been pronounced hyper-orthodox by some of our Northern brethren:

Mr. Chairman:—I had a sort of a speech in my head when I left Louisville, but so many things have been put into it since coming here that I do not know whether I have much of a speech in it now. If we have a revelation, a supernatural revelation given unto us by God, where is that revelation? Where does God speak to us? There is a babel of voices all around us, claiming to speak with divine authority, saying that here is the voice of God, and there is the voice of God. There is no question as to where the authority is. That is God, he alone is the authority. The question is where does God speak? Is God in the whirlwind and the earthquake, as well as in the still, small voice? Does he speak unto us now and give us new revelations in the present time as he did—to the men of old who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost? Do we have new revelations now, or are we to cling to the faith which was once for all delivered to the saints? Is the Bible a revelation from God, or the revelation of God's grace to men? In the thick darkness all around us, men are groping about, feeling after God, if haply they may find him. Is there a Greenwich anywhere in the religious world for us to set our time by?

Where does God speak? Some men will come as James Martineau in his voluminous book, the "Seat of Authority in Religion," trying to show that God speaks to men with divine authority, not in the Scriptures, but in the conscience, in that faculty which God has given us for discerning between right and wrong. Now conscience is a blessed gift which comes from above, and we ought not to oppose it, but rather ought to listen to its voice, so like an electric bell that responds to the touch. But we abuse our consciences till they become jangled and out of tune? We need a firmer voice in the confusion of tongues about us. We need something which is more reliable than the voice of conscience. Some people have such cranky consciences anyhow, shying at every grasshopper that jumps upon the way. You will find people of that kind. They will make a matter of conscience out of everything in the world that comes in their way. On the other hand there are some people who seem to have no conscience at all. So between these two extremes there is no stability. Where does God speak to us with infallible authority?

And then on the other hand, some men will say that the individual christian experience is the voice of God, and that hence the Bible in the heart is enough, and emancipates us from the thraldom of the written word and the old dusty dogmas. The testimony of God's spirit in the heart is a precious witness of the truth and reality of christianity, as well as a blessed comfort to the soul, which God gives unto those who are christians, but it is very far from being a reliable standard of faith and practice. The lights and shadows, phantoms and fancies of abnormally introspective souls are too vague and variable to constitute a certain guide in religious belief. There was a crank who came to Spurgeon and said, "Here, now, the Lord has given me a mission to you and has sent me to do just what you want me to do." Spurgeon said, "Then get out of here."

As to the infallibility of the church, we need not discuss that, because there is nobody here who would claim that God speaks through an infallible church. But it is an easy makeshift for those who want to turn over all responsibility to priest and pope. But it takes too much credulity for the protestant to conceive that the decrees of church and pope are more than the fallible opinions of men. Others still, not satisfied with the authority of the Scriptures, nor with that of an infallible church, recognize a figment of the brain called christian consciousness. This idea, advanced by Schleiermacher, is becoming popular among some christians of the present day. What is christian consciousness anyhow? Whose? the Baptists' or the Episcopalians' or the Presbyterians'? The christian's of the present day or the middle ages; of the fourth century, or the christian's of the first? Whose consciousness? Why at once you see a great widening vista open up here for divergent views, and where have you any reliable authority? Where is the consciousness of Christendom, and what is it? You take out what separates the various denominations which call themselves christian, including the Unitarians, and what you have left won't be worth having. Where is there any reliable authority here?

Perhaps Dr. Briggs deserves a place all by himself. He has made a place all by himself. He occupies a position about this matter that nobody else does, namely, he claims that the Bible, the church, and the reason all are sources of divine authority. He gives a long list of higher critics in his new book, "The Bible, the Church and the Reason," but while they would all perhaps recognize the reason as authoritative, few, if any, would recognize the divine authority of the church. And so he occupies a position all by himself in this matter, but it is due to him to say that he does not mean by claiming divine authority for the church and reason that they are on a level with the Bible. He says each one is a divine source of authority, but the Bible is the infallible rule of faith and practice. But God, he claims, speaks in the reason, and the reason is the only way for some people to come to God, who do not have the Scriptures; and God speaks through the church and that is the only way for some to come to God.

It is very amusing when Dr. Briggs in his [illegible] address on The Authority of the Holy Scriptures proceeds to say that "higher criticism has forced its way into the Bible, and has brought us face to face with its holy contents, all that we may see and know whether they are divine or not." The modesty of that assertion is astonishing, for he means not so much the exercise of the reasoning faculties as modern higher criticism in the form we have it now. If that be true, the people who lived before modern higher criticism came along must have had a pretty hard time of it since the Bible was a closed book to them. He claims that higher criticism can tell us whether it is divine or not. Perhaps Christendom ought to wait with bated breath till the "holy contents" of the Bible have been sifted out of the rubbish. Let us wait till it tells us finally what is divine and what is not, if it has a sort of second sight for seeing the divine in the human. He says also that it is a sin even to prop up divine authority with human authority of any kind. And he proceeds immediately to prop it up with the authority of reason and the church. Well now, if reason is always divine authority, and if the church is always divine authority, there is no other authority in the world except divine authority; and as the Scriptures are divine authority, if reason and the church are divine authority, there is no human authority. He can't mean that. Still, if you have the divine authority always in God's word, and if the authority of reason and the church are not always divine, why prop up God's word with the dicta of reason and the church? If neither is always divine, how can you tell when either is divine, for the errant reason and church may err in separating the divine from the human in the same epistle or gospel?

Where does God speak with divine authority? If God has given us a supernatural revelation, that revelation is in his holy word. It is a supernatural revelation above reason which reason never could have obtained unless it had come in this way. The Bible is not a mere ritual book as Lessing urged, to pass away when learned.

Now there are various objections that I must take up, which I heer urged against the objective authority of the holy Scriptures. It is objected that in the objective argument for the authority of the Scriptures, you only have probability after all. The fact is true that we only have probability for the canonicity of the Scriptures, but probability is the law of human evidence. Mathematics is the only exact science, strictly speaking. But when you come to the physical sciences, you have less exactness, and in the laws of human evidence a higher or lower degree of probability is all you have a right to expect; and so it is in the realm of evidence for the Scriptures. It is idle and foolish for Prof. Huxley to claim "weapons of precision" for the conclusions of modern science in the face of so many scientific theories that have fallen by the way and the present differences and clashings of scientific opinions. If it is idle for the scientists to say that, how much more idle is it for destructive higher criticism to claim for itself certitude? This is exactly what Prof. Briggs does in his famous address, saying that probability might have done for men of the eighteenth century, when men were influenced by that kind of reasoning, but the nineteenth century demands certainty! As if the multiform speculations of a certain school of criticism were to be taken as gospel truths on the dictum of said critic, and you refuse at the peril of your reputation as a scholar. Is not the law of probability the law that controls nearly everything in our human existence? Men are hung on probability; men are set free on the evidence of probability. You marry on probabilities. Probability is what decides most things in human experience. Now it is more or less certain or uncertain as to whether this or that book belongs to the canon of Scripture, and you have no right to expect any other evidence. But does that diminish its authority, when once it is recognized? Where does the authority come from? The authority comes from God. If a book is recognized as authority upon a very high degree of probability, it has the authority of God, because it is on satisfactory evidence, received as from him. And probability about the canonicity of the books of Scripture is not probability about the authority. The authority is certain. This is a distinction which has escaped many writers upon this subject.

It is more or less probable that a certain man was elected President of the United States, but when once he was inducted into office, didn't he have the authority of the President? Exactly so, it was given by the office, not on the probability. He had just as much authority when he was recognized, as if he had received every vote in the country, because he was recognized as President.

And then, besides, it is objected that we only have a record of the revelation, that the revelation itself existed before the record was made, and the record is only secondary in its authority. Is that true? Where did the authority come from? Whatever authority the original revelation had, came from God. If the original revelation had authority from God, if we have a truthful record of that revelation, has it not the same authority? Now the way that a command comes has nothing whatever to do with the authority with which that command comes. If the commander-in-chief of the army issues a command, he may send it by a general, or he may send it by the page, but when the command is received, it comes with the authority of the commander-in-chief, not with the authority of the man who brought it. It might come on paper or by word of mouth, but it comes with the authority of the one who sent it. So I would quote again a little piece of poetry you heard a short while ago:

> "Ours not to make reply,
> Ours not to reason why,
> Ours but to do or die."

About supernatural matters which are given us by God, our business is to find out whether this is God's revelation. If we recognize it as God's revelation, "Ours not to make reply, ours not to reason why, ours but to do or die" when God has commanded.

Then it is objected, that after all we are simply controlled in this matter by our interpretation of Scripture, and so it is our idea of Scripture to which we give obedience, and not to the Scripture itself. Why do you yield obedience to your idea of Scripture? Why, because you think that your interpretation of Scripture is correct, and you think mine is not. Where is the authority? Is it not in the Scripture itself? If I think that your interpretation of Scripture is not right, I won't hold to it. You honestly think your interpretation is correct, and is what the Scripture means. Hence the seat of authority is not shifted from the Scripture to your idea of Scripture, for you conceive that your idea of Scripture is the Scripture. Here is where function of reason comes in, for careful exegesis, for careful interpretation as to what God's word means, but not to make another revelation, not to tell us additional things which are contradictory to God's revelation. An obedient boy, and there are not many obedient boys in this world in these days, when his father commands, will do what he thinks his father commands, even if he misunderstands the command. And I honestly believe that much of the rebellion against the authority of the Scriptures springs from a rebellion against any authority outside of human reason. When God has spoken, what can man say?

Another objection which is urged is this. It has been objected by some that there are discrepancies and inconsistencies in the word of God, and consequently the authority of the Scripture is lessoned. You have heard of that, and I have not time to argue this in detail, but I wish to say a word or two. In the Scriptures as we have them now anybody who looks can see that there are some minor discrepancies. It would have been the greatest miracle on earth if there were none, a miracle of preservation. The whole question is whether there were any errors in the original manuscript. Now they tell us that it is all foolishness to discuss the point, for you cannot tell anything about it; it is outside of all evidence, because no one can ever see those manuscripts, and if you saw one of them, how would you know that it was the original. But it is worth while to argue it. The statement was made yesterday that it is not in accordance with God's dealings in nature, that there should have been an inerrant revelation made. Is that statement true? When God made the first horse in the world, was he a perfect horse or an imperfect horse? When God made the first man was he imperfect or perfect? which do you think? Do you think God made man with sin or without sin? and yet it makes no difference, it is all the same! I contend that it is not all the same, because it is in accord with God's dealings in his world when he gave a revelation to make it free from errors. I believe he first made it inerrant as he made nature so. Man did not stay free from sin, but God made him so. When God looked upon what he had done, he said it was "Good, very good." This argument is presumptive, certainly, but it is not idle argument. Hence, I boldly maintain that the analogy of nature is in favor of the inerrancy of God's original Scriptures. But why in the world is it that there is such a terrible contention by the destructive higher critics, for there are many kinds of critics, against the inerrancy of the original Scriptures? I may be imputing wrong motives, but I think I can tell; it is because the school of Kuenen and Wellhausen want to change the whole order of the Old Testament narrative; they want to put the prophets before the Pentateuch, and put the psalms up in the times of the Maccabees. But they wish to get an entering wedge by having it admitted that there were inaccuracies in the original autographs, in order to shift and change the order of the Word, to suit themselves. It acknowledged that the present arrangement of the narrative is against the evolutionary theory. Hence the narrative is cut up to meet the theory of anti-Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch. The strangest thing of modern times, is to see the anti supernatural notions of Kuenen and Wellhausen masquerading in the guise of devout criticism.

It is further objected that some things in the Bible were only the customs of the time, and hence the authority of the Bible is weakened. Now the revelation had to have a human setting, this setting was hence imperfect and the picture was gradual in its portrayal, but not wrong. Some things were allowed because of the low state of civilization that passed away in time, others were local and temporary. But what was temporary was temporary authority, and what was universal has binding authority, and in the way the Bible met the questions of its day we can find the right spirit for meeting the new questions of our day.

The thing that our times need is not a new revelation, not an additional revelation to the Scriptures, but an earnest appeal to these self same Scriptures. So that we shall acknowledge the authority of Jesus Christ. We need to reproduce the spirit and power of the revelation already given. Every day has its own questions to meet. In the spirit of Jesus, let us meet those of our day. We shall not allow ourselves to be swept away from the "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scriptures," lest we may be carried out to the shoreless darkened sea of doubt, or sink in the gulf of despair.

I have spoken in earnest because I can see that there is more involved than appears on the surface of this question. Bear in mind three things: Scripture speaks in a realm which is above that of reason; Scripture speaks where reason never could have spoken; Scripture is then the sole authority in the realm where it speaks. If we have a supernatural revelation above reason, when Scripture has spoken on that subject, that is the end of the matter; for how can reason get higher? We have not the prophets and apostles to come around and make new revelations to us now. Scripture is not inconsistent with sound reason. It is inconsistent with the rapid reasonings of vain and wicked men. Scripture speaks above reason as sole authority, but Scripture is not inconsistent with reason. Revelation is not an unreasonable thing. It is the noblest exercise of the human intellect to sit at the feet of the Nazarene and learn of him what human hearts most need to know and can learn nowhere else.

God help us one and all, men and brethren, to come to God's own Word and recognize that he has spoken here as he speaks nowhere else, and that the only way by which man can be saved, is here revealed. Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth and the life." There is no other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved. When God has spoken, let all the world be dumb.

We often hear people say there is only one good cough medicine and that is Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, the specific for colds.

Poisonous English Fiction.

Prof. Thomas Davidson in the Forum says: "A great deal has been spoken and written against reprints of foreign books on the score of the dishonesty involved in them, and with good reason; but they deserve far more and far stronger reprobation on another ground. Even if the authors' copyright had been, in all cases, duly regarded, they ought still, in the majority of cases, to be protested against, as tending to corrupt our people and draw them away from that simple ideal of life and freedom which is the very soul of our nation. I am here referring not solely or chiefly to reproductions of those unclean works with which France favors us, or of that vapid, sentimental Damen-literatur in which Germany abounds, but rather, and especially, to those innumerable reprints of English works of innumerable reprints of English works of unexceptional conventional morality with which the whole country is deluged. Against French immorality we are, in some degree, protected by our native puritanism, and where that fails, by conventional hypocrisy; while German sentimality, lacking, as it usually does, the salt of humor, strikes us as insipid, and therefore lays but slight hold upon us. In English works, on the other hand, there is something far more germane to our character, a subtle avatistic poison, which puts to sleep the new man, the free American, in us, and wakes the slumbering servile or overbearing Englishman. Still more frequently it wakes the slumbering Englishwoman. However useful such literature may be in England, which is dominated by the spirit of caste, rendering necessary the cultivation of servility in one class to match the arrogance of another, it is distinctly hurtful in America, where there is no recognized caste, and where nothing is more essential to public and private well-being than the spirit of manly and womanly self-respect, and of contempt for all factitious worth conferred by birth, position, title, or wealth."

Tributes of Respect.

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God to visit us again and take away from our midst our beloved brother William H. Burke, who died at his home in Chatham county, N. C., on Saturday, August 27th, 1892, in his eightieth year; and whereas, the deceased was a worthy and faithful member of May's Chapel Baptist church for quite a number of years, therefore be it

Resolved 1. That in the death of our brother the church has sustained a great loss in his many deeds of kindness, his free liberality, his firm conviction and his devotion to the truth.

2. That we will cherish the memory of our brother, imitating his virtues, forgetting his faults, and try to live so as to be ready when the summons comes.

3. That it behooves us as members of Christ's kingdom to try to live more in harmony with the requirements of God's holy book, to be more united in our efforts to do good, knowing that we too shall go hence to return to the scenes of this life no more.

4. That we do sincerely sympathize with his family and friends, and beseech him who spoke to the wind and sea, to sanctify this affliction to their good.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the church book, and a copy be sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER, by request of this church, for publication.

A Tennessee farmer, the subject of the accompanying portrait, gives the following remarkable statement which our readers are requested to show their friends:

JACKSBORO, TENN., August, 1891.

I was affected with Catarrh for ten years. The principal trouble, the first two years, was the formation of scabs in my nostrils, stopping of one or both sides, a dryness in my throat, a dull, heavy aching in the front part of my head, a tendency to take cold more easily than common, and continual roaring, buzzing and ringing sound in my ears. At times the sound would be like distant bells ringing, or cracking, pricking sensations in my ears, which were a constant and great annoyance to me. After the disease had run on about two years my hearing commenced to fail, and for seven years I was so deaf that I could not hear ordinary conversation, and was all the time growing worse. I had spent a great deal of money for relief and had tried all remedies in my reach, with no effect until I used the Aerial Medication in June, 1888, and the very first application opened out my ears and restored my hearing fully; and a continuation of the treatment for several weeks entirely cured me of the Catarrh, and fully restored my general health, which had become impaired, and for three years I have been entirely free from Catarrh, and my hearing has been and is still perfect.

The Recorder
—IS AN—
Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty-eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

YOU OWE IT
To Yourself,
To Your Family,
And to Your Church
To Take and Read
Your Denominational Paper.

The two dollars you pay for it will bring you during the year ten-fold in information and instruction, and especially will it prove valuable to your children as an educator. It is our constant aim to make the paper worthy of the great denomination it represents.

A Special Offer:

To all new subscribers who will send two dollars for a years subscription between now and the first of January next, we will send the paper free from the time the money is received until January 1st, 1893, and a full year from that date.

Now is the time to subscribe. Remember the sooner you send the money the more you will receive the paper.

"E Profundis."

Beneath thy hammer, Lord! I lie
With contrite spirit prone;
Oh, mould me till to self I die
And live to thee alone.

With frequent disappointments sore
And many a bitter pain,
Thou laborest at my being's core
Till I be formed again.

Smite, Lord! thy hammer's needful wound
My baffled hopes confess,
Thine anvil is the sense profound
Of mine own nothingness.

Smite! till from all its idols free,
And filled with love divine,
My heart shall know no good but thee
And have no will but thine.

What Ted Remembered.

Teddy was out in the back yard playing with Johnny Gibbs. They were playing steamboat, and had just had a dreadful disaster when mamma came to the door.

"I want you to go down the street for me, Teddy," she said. "I must have some baking powder and vanilla before I can finish my baking."

"But I'm all smashed up, mamma," answered Teddy from under a pile of rubbish. "They'll pull me out 'fore long, and find out if I'm killed or not. If I aint p'r'aps I can go bime by."

Mamma laughed. "I don't see how I can wait, my son. Judging from appearances I do not think you are killed, and I can join the rescuing party and help you out. I want my baking powder as soon as possible."

Ted crawled slowly out. "I wish things could be made without things," he said rather vaguely. "Or else I wish papa would keep a store himself right here at home, then I wouldn't always have to stop right in the most intrusting place. Couldn't you anyhow get along without 'em?"

"No, my dear, but if you go right alohg quickly you will soon be back. As a general rule I want my little boy to do errands for me because he loves me, but since you were in such a critical condition I will give you two pennies to spend. Now don't forget, Teddy, baking powder and vanilla. Say it over five times to be sure."

"Bakin' powder, verniler, bakin' powder, verniller, do you care what kind of candy I get?"

"No, just what you like, if it comes within your means. What is it you are to get for me?"

"Bakin' powder and verniller—I won't forget, never."

"Perhaps not, but say it over to yourself on the way, and go as quickly as you can."

Down the road ran Ted. "Bakin' powder—I'll get a candy cigar—verniller—and p'r'aps a chocolate mouse. Bakin' powder,—I don't know but I'd rather have just taffy, it takes longer to eat it, 'cause it sticks to your teeth. What was that other thing mamma wanted?—I should like a whole pound of candy once. Oh, dear! I can't remember what that other thing was, an' I kept saying it like everything! Well, if I get one maybe she can get along without the other. I'll ask Mr. Clark what he supposes it was, maybe he will remember for me. I most think I won't get the cigar, after all. I'd have more fun, I guess, if it was all one kind. When you can't have much of a thing you just git goin' and it's gone. I'm going to get all taffy." Having settled the momentous question in his mind Ted flew over the ground.

"I want—two cents' worth of taffy;" he said rather breathlessly as he bounded into the store.

"All right," answered Mr. Clark, pleasantly; "anything else?"

Ted's face grew blank. "Y-es, sir—my mother she wants—why she wants—something. I kept saying it over and over and I don't anyway see how I forgot. It was something to bake with."

"Sugar, spices, extracts, soda?" questioned Mr. Clark, but Ted shook his head.

"I think you had better run right back and find out. Shall I keep your candy for you until you come back?"

"No, sir, thank you, I think it will kind of—encourage me to have it with me."

"All right," said Mr. Clark, laughing.

So Ted trudged back home, and somehow it seemed much longer to him this time, in spite of his encouragement.

"Hurry," called mamma from the door. "I am waiting for the baking powder."

"There!" exclaimed Ted, "I knew I knew what 'twas, only you see I couldn't think, and Mr. Clark couldn't either. I said it over lots of times, and what was the other?"

"Oh, Ted Arnold, you did not go and forget both, did you?"

"Why, no, I don't think I really forgot 'em. I remembered the candy, but somehow I couldn't think what the names of the other two things were."

"Oh," said mamma, in a funny tone, "I see—a distinction without any difference, wasn't it?

"Well, now, you go right back, and I will keep your candy for you. If you do not remember this time you cannot have it at all. Baking powder and vanilla."

And now wasn't it funny, Ted remembered this time without the least trouble?

"Hereafter," said mamma, "I will not pay you until you get home, I think."—Kate S. Gates, in the Watchman.

By Proxy.

'Mother,' asked Polly, 'what does to do a thing 'by proxy' mean?'

'To do it by employing another person to do it in your place.'

'But that wouldn't be doing it myself,' objected Polly.

'People consider it the same thing,' said mother. 'If I send Arthur on an errand and he asked Harold to go for him because his foot was lame—'

'Arthur hasn't got a lame foot,' cried literal Polly.

'We must suppose he had, or that he had the toothache, perhaps, and so Harold went instead—'

'Harold doesn't like to do errands, either; he always makes mistakes,' said Polly, thoughtfully. Polly had her suspicions of sudden attacks of lameness and toothache.

'Well, it doesn't matter. Perhaps he might hire Harold to go by giving him a piece of candy. If he did that, it would be the same as if he had done the errand himself. He would do it 'by proxy.' Do you understand, Polly?

'Yes um,' answered Polly, as she started up stairs.

'I've got all the candy Aunt Kittie gave me,' said Polly to herself; 'but Arthur hasn't any. Mother didn't know that.'

She pulled open her bureau drawer to taste a bit of the candy. It looked very pink and tasted sweet.

'There's Isabella's dress right under it,' exclaimed Polly. 'I've been wondering where it could be.'

She dragged poor Isabella Angelina by her leg from under the bureau, and proceeded to dress her.

'Polly!' suddenly came mother's voice.

'Yes um.'

'You must go to the store for me. Bridget is busy and I want the fruit for my fruit cake.'

Polly laid down Isabella Angelina with a sigh.

'I just hate errands as much as Harold does!'

Her eyes fell upon the candy.

'Perhaps,' murmured Polly, nodding her head.

She slipped the candy into her pocket, and went down stairs with a demure face.

'Yes um, yes um. Raisins, currents, citron, and allspice. Why don't you say all spices, mother? It's correcter. There's Harold at the gate!'

She ran after him, and mother, busy with her cake, did not hear the little footsteps which presently pattered up stairs again.

Harold brought in the grocer's parcels.

'How's this my boy? It was Polly I sent to Mr. Slote's. You've brought me the wrong kind of raisins; these are very poor. No currants at all! Citron, and one, two, three packages of cloves, cinnamon, and ginger; but no allspice!'

'Dear! dear!' groaned Harold. 'It's always the way.'

He pushed the pink candy further into his pocket. It wasn't nearly so sweet as it had been.

'Polly,' called mother.

'Yes-um!' said Polly's meek voice from behind the kitchen door.

'I sent you on this errand, Polly.'

'Yes-um,' lisped Polly again; 'and I went, mother, just as you explained. I went 'by proxy'!'

Mother kept her face as straight as she could.

'Indeed, Polly; then what am I to do? Here are the wrong articles. If Harold had done the errand it would be his fault, but if it is you who have done so badly, you must be punished for your carelessness. You tell me you did the errand. What shall I do about it?'

Polly considered the situation.

'Well, I did do that errand, mother; I truly did. I did it 'by proxy.' I paid Harold a piece of candy to go for me.'

'And don't you think, mother, that if I did your errand 'by proxy,' and you have to punish me for doing it wrong, you ought to punish me 'by proxy' too?'—Harper's Young People.

Rob's Battle.

'There isn't any use in my trying to do good, mother,' said Rob Winter on Sunday afternoon. 'I've tried this week so hard, but it didn't do any good. I get mad so quick. I think every time I never will again, but the next time anything provokes me, away I go before I know it.'

'You can conquer your enemy if you meet him the right way. Rob, remember how David went out to meet Goliath; who would have thought that he, with only his sling and the little stones he had taken from the brook, could defeat the mighty Philistine? But he did, because he went in the name and strength of the Lord of hosts.

Now your temper is your giant. If you meet him in your own strength, he will defeat you, but if, like David, you go out in God's strength, you will overcome. Try again to morrow, Rob; ask God to go with you and help you, and when your enemy rises up against you, fight him down. Say to him that he shall not overcome you, because you fight with God's help and strength.'

'Well,' promised Rob, 'I'll try; but I can't help being afraid.'

Everything went smoothly the next day until afternoon recess. The boys were playing ball, and one of them accused Rob of cheating. Instantly his face crimsoned, and he turned toward the accusor, but the angry words died on his lips.

His conversation with his mother flashed into his mind. 'I will try if God will help me,' he thought. It was a hard struggle for a minute. He shut his eyes tight together, and all his heart went out in a cry for help, and he conquered.

'David killed Goliath, and that was the end of him,' said Rob that night, 'but my giant isn't dead if I did conquer him once.'

'I know,' said his mother, 'but every victory makes you stronger and him weaker, and when the warfare is over there is a crown of life promised to those who endure to the end.'—Kate T. Gates, in the Sunlight.

How to use the Pen.

Every time you are attempted to say an ungentle word, or write an unkind line, or say a mean, ungracious thing about anybody, just stop; look ahead twenty five years, and think how it may come back to you then. Let me tell you how I write mean letters and bitter editorials, my boy. Sometimes, when a man has pitched into me and 'cut me up rough,' and I want to pulverize him and wear his gory scalp on my girdle, and hang his hide on my fence, I write a letter or editorial that is to do the business. I write something that will drive sleep from his eyes and peace from his soul for six weeks. Oh, I do hold him over a slow fire and roast him! Gall and aqua fortis drip from my blistering pen. Then, I don't mail the letter, and I don't print the editorial. There's always plenty of time to crucify a man. The vilest criminal is entitled to a little reprieve. I put the manuscript away in a drawer. Next day I look at it. The ink is cold; I read it over and say, 'I don't know about this. There's a good deal of bludgeon and bowie knife journalism in that. I'll hold it over a day longer.' The next day I read it again. I laugh, and say, 'Pshaw!' and I can feel my cheeks getting a little hot. The fact is, I am ashamed that I ever wrote it, and I hope that nobody has seen it, and I have half forgotten the article or letter that filled my soul with rage. I havn't hurt anybody, and the world goes right along, making twenty-four hours a day as usual, and I am all the happier. Try it, my boy. Put off your bitter remarks until to-morrow. Then, when you try to say them deliberately, you'll find that you have forgotten them, and ten years later, ah! how glad you will be that you did! Be good natured, my boy. Be loving and gentle with the world, and you'll be amazed to see how dearly and tenderly the worried, tired, vexed, harassed old world loves you.—R. J. Burdette.

Food for Young Chicks.

Fowls have strong digestive organs, and do not need their food ground. Young chicks are no exception to this rule. Because they are too little to eat whole corn grains, the corn is ground, mixed with water and fed. More than likely the gizzard, having nothing to grind, loses its power, just like any other unused organ does. The moistened, mushy mess stays in the crop until it ferments, while a feed of small particles of grain—cracked wheat is best of all—would be ground up and keep the chick in thrifty condition. Cracked wheat is better for chickens than bran or wheat middlings. It has more nourishment and it gives the gizzard something to do.—Boston Cultivator.

Sermon Preached by Rev. F. H. Martin Before the Robeson Association.

Text—"Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people."—Isaiah 55: 4.

This passage evidently refers to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and presents him to us as Witness, Leader and Commander. Let us notice:—

I. CHRIST AS OUR WITNESS.

1. He is a God-appointed witness, to testify to the truthfulness of the Scripture, as he tells us in John 18: 37, "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." The prophet Isaiah had declared—Isaiah 61: 1—that the Son of God should come in power anointed by the Holy Spirit "to preach the gospel to the meek; to heal the broken-hearted; to preach deliverance to the captives; and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." So we find in Luke 6: 16-21, that immediately after his temptation in the wilderness that he returned in the Spirit into Galilee and taught in the synagogue. He then came to Nazareth, where he was reared, and on the Sabbath day he stood up in the synagogue to read, and read that part of the prophecy which referred to himself, witnessing in person that I am he. When John the Baptist came to prepare the way for Christ he declared that "I am not the Christ," the light of the world, but when Christ came he said, "I am the light of the world." John 8: 12. God spoke through the prophets concerning Christ, and Christ came in person to testify as his witness to what had been prophecied.

2. Christ is a faithful witness. He witnesses every act of our lives, whether performed in the darkness or in the light; whether performed in public or private; whether it be a great act or a small one. He goes farther, and witnesses the motive which prompts every act. This should be a source of encouragement to those who are honestly doing all they can for the promotion of his cause, though it be but little. Many of God's precious saints who are poor in this world's goods, but who are rich in faith, have been encouraged as they have read the precious Bible and seen how God took notice of the widow's mite. Christ, our witness, has declared that a saint can be faithful in a little, when that little is all that he can do. "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful in much," &c. Christ looks at the motive more than at the act. This should be a very solemn warning to those who are insincere in what they do. This Witness which God has given us is everywhere present and no where absent. He never sleeps. Psalm 231: 4, "Behold, he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep." He is always pleased to hear a conversation which has much of God in it. Matt. 8: 16, "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name," &c.

3. Christ is an unchangeable witness. His first decision is right, and there can be no subsequent influence brought to bear on him to change him. He is not a creature of circumstance as we are, but "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever." Heb. 13: 8. This is one of the most precious thoughts which ever entered the mind of the christian while passing through this changeable world, but with his faith in God, and his hopes built on Christ, he can say with the poet:

"Let the world despise and leave me,
They have left my Saviour too;
Human hearts and looks deceive me;
Thou art not like man, untrue.
And while thou shalt smile upon me,
God of wisdom, love and might,
Foes may hate and friends may shun me,
Show thy face and all is bright."

His love is the same now as when he shed his blood on calvary.

4. Christ is a competent witness, because he was in the bosom of the Father from all eternity. We hear him speak of the joy which he had with the Father before the world was.

II. CHRIST AS OUR LEADER.

1. He is a kind and gentle leader. We hear him say in Matt. 11: 28-30, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Then we hear David speak of him as leading into green pastures where even the grass beneath his feet was refreshing, and the waters beside which he was lead were still; where no waves were to frighten, nor no storm would molest, but where all was tranquil. His little lambs he carried in his bosom.

"I take my little lambs, said he,
And lay them in my breast;
Protection they shall find in me,
And be forever blest."

2. Christ is a safe leader, because all power is given unto him in heaven and in earth. There is no power in earth or hell that can harm the soul which is trusting in him. Incircled in the arms of his love, we can say with the apostle in Rom. 8: 38,39, "For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." He carries the keys of death and hell swinging from his girdle. Let us therefore place the hand of our faith in the hand of his special providence, and follow our Leader and fear no danger.

"Through floods and flames, if Jesus lead,
I'll follow where he goes;
'Hinder me not,' shall be my cry,
Though earth and hell oppose."

This world has yet to see what God can do with a man wholly given up to his service. Paul is the best illustration we have. He was able to say in Phil. 1: 21, "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." No one can say this who is not thoroughly converted, for there can be no true devotion to Jesus apart from conversion. Let us trust Christ, brethren, and do what he tells us.

3. Christ leads to victory.

"Though the pathway be lonely and dangerous too, Surely Jesus is able to carry me through."

He gives them this sweet promise, Isaiah 35: 10, "And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

III. CHRIST AS OUR COMMANDER.

1. His commands are always given in love. In Acts 17: 30, he commandeth men everywhere to repent, because he loves all men, and repentence is the gate to endless joy. What are the threatenings of his law but the warnings of his love? They are the hoarse voice of his love saying, "Man, do thyself no harm!" They are as fences thrown around the feet of perdition to prevent rash men from rushing into ruin.

2. Christ's commands are authoritative. In that memorable sermon of our Lord's on the mount he taught the people how to live and act towards all mankind. He told them plainly what they should not do. "And it came to pass when Jesus had ended these sayings the people were astonished at his doctrine. For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes." Matt. 7: 28, 29. Christ has the right to command, and it is our duty to obey. Let us then, brethren, in view of this great fact, make up our minds that "Through duties and through trials too,

I'll go at his command,
Hinder me not for I am bound
To my Immanuel's land."

Let us notice a few of his commands. Matt. 5: 16, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Matt. 28: 19, 20, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Will you hear this command and in obedience to it come to the front?

"Stand up, stand up for Jesus,
Ye soldiers of the cross;
Lift high his royal banner,
It must not suffer loss;
From victory unto victory
His army shall be led,
Till every foe is vanquished,
And Christ is Lord indeed."

3. Christ's commands are not only given in love and authority, but they are absolutely right. Oh that we all could regard them in this light! Many of them are unknown to us as to why they were given, but we must remember that God has declared in Isaiah 55: 8, "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord."

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform,
He plants his footsteps on the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

It is not so much lack of courage as lack of earnestness which makes men yield before ridicule. The man who is engaged in an enterprise with his whole heart is not to be dismayed or turned aside by ridicule.—Western Recorder.

Letter from Wake Forest.

In going to my office, it is easy to pass through the Chemical or Biological Laboratory. But if it were more difficult, I should often visit them, for the busy scenes always interest me. Clad in long aprons for the protection of their clothing from acids and alkalies, the students in the former are handling test tubes and mortars and balances, while the professor passes from one to another, dissecting, suggesting, explaining, or questioning. In the latter, young men are bending over their microscopes and making notes of their observations. What strange things they sometimes see, what discoveries they made on a leaf or in a drop of water! And they do not work at random; for the professor is at hand, telling them what to look for, and how to find it, and how best to observe it. And on the blackboard are his general directions for the afternoon. Here is a fragment that happened to be on the board a day or two ago, some hints for the Physiology Class:

"Desk No. 1. Transverse section of small intestine, showing:
1. The Villi projecting into the cavity.
2. The glands of Lieberkuehn.
3. Muscular wall of the intestine. Are the fibres smooth or 'striated'?
Desk No. 4. Tranverse section of the Femur, showing:
1. Haversian canals.
2. Lacunæ.
3. Canaliculi.
Desk No. 5. Longitudinal section of Femur, showing the same as the preceding. In what respects do the two sections differ?
Desk No. 9. Longitudinal section of Molar, showing:
1. Rods of enamel.
2. Tubules of dentine.
3. Lacunæ of cement."

Sometimes I wonder what would be the thoughts of the students of even a few years ago if they should visit the lecture rooms and laboratories of the college and witness the advances and manifold improvements that have been made. Not that the professors are more faithful teachers or abler men than some who are still missed among us; but their work has been more specialized, they have more time for freshening study, and have better facilities with which to teach in their several departments. The work of the College ought to be better, and it is better than when the corps of instructors was smaller and the laboratories and library less well equipped. And yet none of us are ashamed of the record of the College in the past. No one can think of the noble men who did such admirable work under unfavorable conditions without a glow of gratitude and pride. And the widely scattered alumni, by the work they are doing, and the positions they are occupying, bear no uncertain testimony to the sort of training they received at Wake Forest.

But our faces are toward the future. The best and largest work of the College is yet to come. There will, of course, be hindrances and hurtful competitions. There always have been. But they are only temporary impediments. Some will be passed over, some will be made to cease, others will be spurs to wiser planning and greater activity.

That last sentence reminds me of football. Our students play almost daily on their Athletic Grounds, and, strange as it may appear to an outsider, actually enjoy it. My own views about the game have undergone some modification, though I am still not as enthusiastic as our accomplished Director of Physical Culture. But if match games must be played, I want our men to wear the laurels. And they do.

One of my colleagues has called my attention to an article in the current number of the Cosmopolitan Magazine, by George W. Cable, on "Education for the Common People of the South." The article is written in an aggressive rather than a sympathetic spirit, but, if all that the writer says is true, his indictment of the leaders in the South for their neglect of the education of the masses of the people is terrible. One can hardly believe his comparative statement of what the State of South Carolina spends on higher and lower education. The South Carolina State University and the Military Institute have, he says, $872,000 worth, at cash value, of buildings, grounds, apparatus and productive funds. "The two comprise a total outlay of public funds of over twice the cash value of the State's 2,962 schoolhouses. The students of the two institutions in 1888 numbered 306. The children (6–14) numbered 250,000. The tuition fees of the University were $30.00 per student, while the outlay, over and above these fees, was $184.00 per student. In the Military Academy it was $153.00. In the public schools it was per capita of the school population, $1.84." And, omitting the nineteen school buildings in four towns, "the cash value of all the school houses in the State, available to her 230,000 country children, is considerably less than one-fourth of the real property and funds of the University and the Military Institute. The whole plant amounts in the one case to but eighty-four cents per child, and in the other to $3,886 per student."

I shall await with some interest the denial or explanation of these remarkable statements. The lawmakers of South Carolina can hardly afford to allow them to pass unchallenged. CHAS. E. TAYLOR.

It is bad to break good resolutions, but it is worse to refuse to make new ones.

From Globe N. C.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Rev. H. M. Croom has been "troubling the waters" frequently of late. On Sunday, Aug. 28th, he buried with our Lord in baptism, Mrs. Jesse Moore, who was a consecrated member of the Methodist church till she joined us.

As a result of the protracted meeting held in September, he baptized on the 9th ult., a whole family—father, mother and daughter—two young men in their bloom, and two little girls about ten years old, one of them a motherless girl, but bright. Then again on the 23d ult. he baptized a young lady who had professed in the meeting, but could not be baptized with the others on account of ill health. The other, one of the little girls above mentioned, was doubtless the means of his gray-haired father's conversion before she was herself converted. On seeing Bro. F. P. Moore's little son baptized about two years ago, she said: "Pa, when were you baptized?" Sadly he had to reply: "I have never been baptized." "I am going to be baptized before I get so old," replied the little girl. She then persuaded her father to attend Sunday-school. So he did, and was converted and baptized about a year ago. All the family are now members but one.

The two young men mentioned above, Isaac L. Moore and Job F. Cook, are young men of promise. They, together with other young men of the community, have organized a young men's prayer-meeting and are working zealously.

As Brother F. P. Moore wrote about the meeting, I will only say that Rev. J. J. L. Sherwood did most of the preaching, and did it with power, speaking directly to the hearts and consciences of saved and unsaved. He is a faithful and forcible preacher of the gospel.

Rev. H. M. Croom, our beloved pastor, is a faithful sower of the seed and shepherd of the flock, a devoted christian and a safe leader. He is laboring as missionary in the Caldwell Association, under appointment of our Executive Committee, which co-operates with, and reports to, the State Board.

This Associational Mission work is understood by the Executive Committee and many others to be State Mission work, done by direction of the State Board, to be one thing, and State Mission work, done in our bounds by one of our own preachers, to be quite another thing. Will Bro. Durham please explain? It is understood among us that he suggested at the Caldwell Association at Dudley Shoals in 1891, that the Association appoint an Executive Committee, and that said Committee appoint among us a missionary for the Association and pay him a salary out of the State Mission money collected among us, without sending said money to the State Mission Board at Raleigh. Many understood that the amounts pledged by our churches for State Missions were to be paid over to our missionary to the amount of his salary, at least, and that money thus collected and thus disbursed would be considered State Mission work. Is it right for an Association to send money to the State Board while it has crying destitution in its own bounds? Bro. Durham's suggestion was taken. We have a committee and a missionary, Rev. H. M. Croom, and are doing what most of us think is State Mission work. Some money has been sent to Raleigh. Is that correct? Is our work State Mission work, even though we should spend the money among us, and report work done and amounts collected to the Board at Raleigh? We, with other associations doubtless, want information. We want to be and do right. Our missionary has not been paid up.

SERVUS.

P. S. Despite (?) Bro. Croom's good leadership and faithfulness here, the good sisters of the church, got it into their heads that they would delight in "pounding" him a little. They did so by presenting him a handsome suit of clothes. He didn't strike back, but did good for evil (?), and even thanked the good sisters.

Ballast.

I was reading in one of the daily papers the other day of a ship that capsized at sea. As soon as she got outside of the harbor and into the waves of the open ocean, she rocked and rolled until she finally rolled over, was filled with water and went down. They said that she had not ballast enough to steady her. She was chartered to make a quick voyage to a distant port, and bring a return cargo to the port from which she sailed. The captain wanted to take no more dead weight than was absolutely necessary. But in his impatience of delay, and anxiety not to be overburdened, he did not take enough, and hence the catastrophe.

Now, ballast, as my readers can see by consulting the dictionary, means "just load enough." It is a compound of two Saxon words, "bare" and "last"—"a load"; i. e., a bare load, or barely a load. The idea is that a certain amount of loading is indispensable to the steadiness of a ship on the ocean. A ship is made as buoyant as possible in order to carry as much freight as it can safely. But when empty, it is too light to sail well. No ship attempts to cross the ocean without either heavy freight or ballast in its hold. The ship I was reading about was top-heavy—the weight below the water line was not sufficient to balance that above it.

As I read the account of that shipwreck, I thought how like it are many of the human wrecks that we see all around us. A young man is impatient to enter upon his life voyage. He dreams of brilliant success if he can only reach a certain position. He is told to wait, to study, to think, to secure right principles, to take in ballast enough to keep him steady amid all the perils he must encounter. But he calls his advisers old fogies. He doesn't want ballast, but speed. He rushes into society. He rushes into business. He rushes into politics. He shouts, as he spreads his sails, "Hurrah for Young America." But in a few years we find him capsized. He was overcome by temptation. He began with a social glass, and in due time became a drunkard. Or he began by determining to get rich, honestly if he could, but rich at all hazards. He borrowed the trust funds in his hands, to speculate with. He meant to return them. But he lost them. He became a defaulter, an embezzler and finally a convict. Or he attended the primaries, and by activity in politics secured an office. He found that his position gave him opportunities for petty speculation. He improved those opportunities until he became "a boodler." His career of official corruption sent him to State's prison or to Canada.

The great defect in our system of education is the want of thorough moral training. Our young people are smart; they are ambitious; they want to learn what will help them to secure social position or wealth. But they don't realize that all permanent success must be built on character. The first thing in true culture is to fix and settle principles, just as a builder secures a firm foundation before he puts up his palace or his warehouse. And the taller the intended edifice, the deeper must the foundation be laid.

But to return to the illustration of the sea-going ship. What is the ballast for a young man or woman to take on board before leaving the harbor?

IT IS THE BIBLE.

God has given it to us for that purpose. In the thirty-seventh Psalm man is represented, not as a voyager, but as a traveler. He is walking in steep and slippery ways. But David says if "the law of his God is in his heart, none of his steps shall slide." That law gives steadiness, moral equilibrium. It enables us to go safely amid the perils of the land or of the sea. Paul had a great deal of confidence in Timothy. He placed him in charge of the church at Ephesus when he was so young that some people might be tempted to despise his youth. (1 Tim. iv. 12). And he tells us why he trusted him so. He wrote, in his second Epistle: "And that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation." Yes, the Scriptures made Timothy what he was; and they have the same power to day.

When I was a child my mother, like Timothy's mother Eunice, believed in the Scriptures as the best book for the young. She not only had me read to her at least one chapter a day, but she encouraged me to commit to memory passages of special interest. I knew a score of Psalms by heart, and such chapters in the New Testament as 1 Cor. xiii., before I was ten years old. After I was fourteen I was seldom at home. I was a thousand miles away, and among strangers, when my mother died. I lived for years in an atmosphere of temptation. Young-America-like, I rushed into society, into business, into politics. Why was I not ship-wrecked in those stormy waters, as so many of my comrades were? Not because I was by nature or by human culture any better than they, but because I had been ballasted for the voyage in the harbor of home. Oh, if I could reach the ear of every mother in the land I would say to her: "Be sure that the word of God is in the heart of your child before you send it out into the world."

Some of my readers have no doubt seen the story of the cabin boy whom the sailors tried to teach to drink and to swear when he came on board. They wanted him to be like themselves. But he had been brought up by a pious mother, and had promised her that he would be faithful to her teachings. So when the jolly tars teased him or coaxed him or threatened him, he always had a Bible verse ready for them, such as "My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not." At length one of the oldest sailors said to the rest: "Shipmates, you might as well give up. You can't do anything with that boy, for he is

CHOCK FULL OF BIBLE."

When a bottle is chock full of water, you can't pour oil into it. The best way for us to resist temptation is to leave no room for it in our hearts. And the best way for us to fortify our children against the evil that is in the world is to have their memories and their affections pre-occupied with the truth of God and the love of Christ. I wish that we could go back in our homes and our Sunday-schools to the old idea of memorizing the word of God. There never was a time when nobler ships went out from the home harbor than to-day. Oh, that they were all well ballasted for the voyage of life!—Seneca Smith, in Journal and Messenger.

J. C. CADDELL, AGENT AND CORRESPONDENT.

THE SPIRIT OF OBEDIENCE

The Bible abounds in quite a large number of historical incidents which forcibly teach the necessity of obeying God's commands. To enumerate all these incidents would be quite a task. We may mention only a few of the more important and striking, viz: his command to our first parents not to eat of the forbidden fruit; the command to Noah to build the ark; the commands regulating the construction of the Tabernacle; the command not to "take spoil" from the doomed city of Jericho; the command given to Lot and his family to flee from Sodom; the command given to King Saul to exterminate the Amalekites; the command not to touch the ark, &c., &c. These commands are given mostly in connection with historical incidents in the Old Testament, and the unsparing manner in which God punished any violation of them helps us to understand how important it is that we should implicitly obey the positive commands and precepts of the New Testament that are given for the guidance of souls out of darkness into the light of the gospel, and how they should walk before God and men, after they have reached that light.

There is no fact more perceptible to any thoughtful reader than this, that the God whom the Bible reveals to man is, and proposes to remain, the Sovereign Lord of the universe; that he means just what he says when he spoke such words as these: "I am the Lord, and besides me, there is none other." It is equally plain that God regards man as the creature of his handiwork. It follows that it is God's prerogative to command and man's duty to obey, whether he can see the reason for the command or not. There are a good many commands in God's words for the giving of which the reason may be stated; there are many others for which no specific reason may be given. Yet it is the duty of man to obey, assured of the fact that a merciful and just God would give no command which is not for his good. There is a great tendency in our day, however, for people to disregard some of the plain commands of the Bible just because God has not seen proper to mention any specific reason for giving them. Because men cannot "reason out" a command of God as they would a problem in mathematics, there are now many that are disposed to reject it, or, at least, consider it "non-essential."

There is a most remarkable piece of literature reproduced in a recent number of the Religious Herald, published at Richmond, Va., contained in a reply by the Southern Churchman to some statements about the Baptists found in the editorial columns of the Herald. Said reply from the Churchman contained the following startling sentence: "One cannot be wise and have many thoughts about immersion. It is immaterial whether Christ ordered immersion and did not order surplices; immersion is nothing but ritual, no matter who ordered it." There it is, brethren! Have not things come to a pretty pass when a dignified and representative journal can thus reason about one of the plainest commands of the New Testament and a sacred ordinance of the Great Head of the Church? If the command to be baptized may first be tampered with as the Churchman's people have tampered with it and then relegated to the realm of puerile ritualism, what next?

When we study the first command given to our first parents, and notice the suffering, the havoc, the ruin, the death, resulting from its violation, it does seem that the world has an object-lesson which alone ought to teach mankind the awful folly of disobeying God, and the jeopardy in which man places his soul when he knowingly violates and teaches others to violate any plain command of his Lord and Master. One of the most beautiful traits of character exhibited by Abraham of old was his cheerful and ready obedience of God's commands, even when one of them required the sacrifice of the beloved Isaac as a burnt offering. When God spoke to him his usual reply was, "Behold me,"—here I am Lord to do thy bidding, speak Lord, and thy servant heareth, not to question, murmur or complain, but to obey. His faith in God was what gained for him the title of "the father of the faithful;" but his prompt obedience to God's commands not only showed his faith, but caused him in every way to be more acceptable to God. The world is exceedingly slow to believe that "to obey is better than [illegible], and to hearken is better than the [illegible]." And Saul's nice dodge, (as he thought it), when he met Samuel of old is just the program that some modern christians are trying to follow to quiet their consciences and atone for what they know are more or less violations of the plain commands of the Bible.

Some do not deal justly with their fellowmen, and think to atone for it by giving largely to the benevolent work of the church. Some show a want of mercy, and attempt to atone for it by giving largely to orphan asylums, &c. Some notice the commands that teach christians to keep themselves unspotted from the world, and yet they engage in the round dance within the embrace of the veriest libertine, and expect to atone for it by abstaining from meat and uttering stereotyped prayers during Lent. Some so-called christians engage in all the licentious extravagancies of the carnival and expect to atone for it all by confessing to a priest and observing an enforced and hollow penitence. Ah, what a rattling there will be among even religious dry bones when the Master cometh!

Let us return again to first principles. Untold suffering has come to the human race by man's violation in the Garden, and after his banishment from it, of God's commands. When, oh when, will rebellious man learn wisdom? How long shall this farce of the ages go on? We prate about christian union. There can be no real christian union unless God's word is the supreme law. The Bible, the Bible alone, is the basis of all christian union. There can never be organic union among the many christian sects so long as they are unwilling to bow with profound reverence to the authority of the Bible. Whether that time will ever come in the history of this world, of not, we cannot tell; but of one thing we feel sure, "the foundation standeth sure," and "the word of God abideth forever." Of another we are sure, and that is any departure from a plain Scripture command causes one to commence drifting religiously, and when one drifts from Bible moorings it is hard to tell where he shall land or what his end shall be.

JUDGE MERRIMON DEAD.

Judge A. S. Merrimon, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, after severe and protracted illness, died at his home in this city at two o'clock a. m. Nov. 14th. Thus passes away a great and good man, who has been honored by his fellow-countrymen with a United States Senatorship, and subsequently to the position of Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, and finally to that of Chief Justice, which place he filled with distinguished ability till his death.

Judge Merrimon was born in Transylvania county, N. C., Sept. 15, 1830, and was, therefore, within one day of being sixty two years and two months of age. Chief Justice Smith died Nov. 14th, 1889, just three years before Chief Justice Merrimon's death.

The public buildings, by order of the Council of State, were closed Monday and Tuesday, and the Supreme Court building was draped in mourning. The remains of the deceased at nine o'clock Tuesday were escorted to the Supreme Court building, where they lay in state, thence to the Edenton Street Methodist church, where the funeral services were held.

The Council of State on Monday adopted a resolution of respect to the deceased and of sympathy to the bereaved family.

FROM OUR TRAVELLING AGENT.

LITTLE RIVER ASSOCIATION.

This was, so the brethren said, the very best session this body ever held.

The churches are, for the most part, small and comparatively weak financially, yet they all showed progress in their work, and it was evident that pastors and people were making faithful efforts to do more and better work than they have heretofore done.

Bro. H. F. Smith, one of the best laymen in the Association, was elected moderator, and Rev. J. A. Campbell, who has been clerk of the Association since its organization, was again unanimously elected to this position. These two young brethren have done much to encourage and build up the work of the Association, and much now depends on these brethren as to what the Association shall be in the future.

I was much pleased with the spirit I saw among the ministers present. Many of them are men of limited education, yet they are in the heartiest accord with every sign of progress among them. There is none of that contracted envious disposition which we sometimes see on the part of men like these toward men who have had superior educational opportunities.

The Board of Ministerial Education was strongly advocated by a number of the local preachers. Bro. King made a splendid appeal for this interest, and did much good in obtaining a good collection for the immediate needs of the young men now at college.

We had a good discussion by the brethren on periodicals, after which I got a number of subscribers. I want to thank Bro. J. M. Holloman especially for the interest he showed in getting subscribers for the RECORDER.

Bro. W. R. Gwaltney was much pleased with this Association, and besides doing well with his own work, made a speech on State Missions, to which the Association listened with unusual interest.

The matter of general education was not neglected, although we were deprived of the presence of any special representative from any of the colleges usually discussed at our meetings.

Brethren Smith and J. A. Campbell each have preparatory schools in this Association which are doing much to improve the educational interest of our people in this section.

The brethren were just beginning the discussion on Home Missions when my time came to leave, and from the nature of the exercises up to this point we can confidently expect that the meeting was pleasant to the end.

The introductory sermon preached by Rev. J. M. Holloman was most appropriate and in every way worthy of the speaker and of the occasion.

The missionary sermon was preached on Sunday by Rev. J. A. Campbell.

We hope again to be permitted to meet the brethren of this Association on similar occasions hereafter. J. C. C.

The good men of the party were overloaded and the road was very rough. We advise them to raise their own meat, corn, hay and colts; to "demand" less and make more. The Prohibition Party ought to accept defeat and enforce the laws we now have.—Charity and Children.

....Bro. E. E. Blount of Clyde, N. C., writes: "I went to Kentucky last spring hoping to attend the Seminary this winter. I was pleasantly situated and kindly received, but sickness laid me in bed. Two others stand approved. My field embraces three churches. The RECORDER is a welcome visitor. God be with you."

....Bro. J. E. Ray, superintendent of the Colorado school for the deaf and the blind, says: "Give my love to the Baptists of North Carolina. How I wish I could be with them in their Convention next month. I do miss my old friends very much. God give you a pleasant, profitable and successful meeting, and lead you into greater and greater fields of usefulness. You do not know what a comfort the RECORDER is to us in this far-away country. May you live long and prosper in soul and body."

....The Convention in Goldsboro unanimously requested each church to give one collection this year to be expended through our Board in mission and educational work among our colored brethren. The work has been done. Two hundred and fifty dollars are needed from our churches to pay for the same. Rev. N. B. Cobb and his church at Manly are the only brethren, so far as heard from, to remember the request of the Convention and to take a collection for this work. The time is short. How many pastors who voted for the above request will now aid this cause?

....Rev. Josiah Elliott of Hertford, N. C., recently spent a week in Hyde county aiding Bro. Carawan in meetings. Three young ladies were baptized. He says: "The work has started. We hope to have others soon, which will enable us to organize a church in Hyde county. We have a nice site offered us for the church. We want to erect a house within another year. It is a necessity in order to succeed over there. I believe the people will aid us. Bro. Carawan is a good man. All that I heard speak of him gave to him that name. I love to be with him. I would visit and aid him often but for my own work of five churches."

...."The Brewers' Journal for October naturally enough compliments the New York Board of Lady Managers for having given 'quite valuable aid' to the advocates of opening the World's Fair on Sunday by their vote of eleven to one in favor of Sunday opening." It has been urged in favor of female suffrage that women on moral questions could be better trusted than men. If the Lady Managers of the Exposition fairly represent American women, not much can be hoped from their votes in favor of morality in keeping the Sabbath. A few facts like this will settle in many minds on the question of giving the ballot to women.—Inquirer.

....A dispatch from Danville, Va., Nov. 11th, to the State Chronicle says: "To night about 9 o'clock a difficulty occurred between Rev. J. R. Moffett, editor of the Anti-Liquor, the prohibition organ of the State, and J. T. Clarke, a young lawyer. The two men had a difficulty in North Danville on election day and to day an article in the Anti-Liquor reflected on Clarke, which article enraged him. Clarke met Moffett on the street to-night while the latter was on his way to the First Baptist church to attend the session of the General Association of Virginia. Four shots were fired, and one ball took effect in Moffett's abdomen, and he is very seriously and probably fatally wounded." Mr. Moffett has since died from the effect of his wound.

....The Baptist General Association of Virginia met in Danville, Va., last Friday. The introductory sermon was preached by Rev. M. B. Wharton, D. D., Norfolk, Va. Hon. J. Taylor Ellison, mayor of Richmond, Va., was re-elected president, and Revs. W. F. Dunaway and J. B. Turpin, and T. H. Ellett, Esq., and Prof. Charles L. Cocke were elected vice-presidents. Rev. H. C. Smith was elected Secretary. The address of welcome, which is said to be fit and timely, was delivered by Rev. T. B. Thames, pastor of the First Baptist church of Danville, and was responded to by Rev. J. C. Hiden, D. D., of Richmond, Va. The treasurer of the body, Mr. Norvell Ryland, presented his report, of which the following is a summary: State Missions, $12,268.82; Sunday-school and Bible Board, $5,994.76; Education Board, $5,879.50; Foreign Missions, $19,994.89; Home Missions, $10,029.22; Ministers' Relief Fund, $2,866.17; total, $57,031.86.

Letter from Wake Forest College.

Several young men have written to me for information and advice with reference to entering Wake Forest College on the 15th of January, when the Spring Term begins. It may be that there are others to whom a word of suggestion may not be unacceptable.

We do not advise students to enter College at that time unless they are prepared to enter the classes which begun work at the beginning of the session. But in most cases where one is prepared to enter such classes, it is usually wise economy of time for him not to defer matriculating as a student. There are a few cases in which a whole term is gained by entrance in January. No new classes are formed at the beginning of the Spring Term, but several classes enter upon new work, with new text-books. These classes a Freshman can sometimes enter to his very great advantage. In all cases where a student is uncertain as to what will be best, we shall be glad to advise him, if he will give us specific information as to what he has already studied.

Never in the history of our State has there been a time when the value of education has been more apparent than now. Through poverty and innumerable discouragements the young men of this generation should press onward and upward for the very best possible preparation for life's work that they can possibly secure.

It happens that within the last three days I have received long letters from as many recent graduates of the College. If I had ever entertained any doubts as to whether student life at Wake Forest was happy and stimulating, it would be shaken by the enthusiasm which these gentlemen speak of the years spent here. One writing from a great University, says: "Tis true that these universities have superior advantages in many respects, but I should always advise a father to have his son trained in an institution like Wake Forest. Would that the boys could appreciate their advantages while there like they do after they come away. But it seems that to appreciate anything we must lose it. I never expect to find a rival for the Eu. or Phi. Society, and I do hope that their manifold influences will never be usurped by fraternities."

It is also pleasant to get such a stamp of approval upon the kind of work that is done at Wake Forest as is incidentally given in a letter from one of our alumni who has recently entered Harvard University. He writes: "It may possibly not be void of interest to you to know that since I first entered here I have been advanced a year, and now, instead of being a member of the Senior Class, I am rated as a graduate," i. e., of Harvard.

Another letter, from a graduate of last June, which has been more than two months on its way from another continent, contains these words: "At this time, for four years past, I have turned my feet toward Wake Forest College, and I must admit that I have a strong wish that I could be a Wake Forest boy again. Very few have ever left the old College truer devotees that I: none will ever be more ready to work for its prosperity."

The last meeting of the Wake Forest Scientific Society was well attended, not only by most of the members, but by a number of others, including several ladies. Prof. Brewer read a carefully prepared paper on the metal Aluminium, in which he discussed the reduction of Banxite and its other ores, and the many valuable qualities of this, the "coming" metal.

Dr. Powers delivered a most interesting lecture on certain microbes. His careful preparation and pleasing manner as a speaker always insures him the ready attention of an audience.

The prospect now is that the Alumni Association will have during the Convention the most successful banquet that it has ever given. Arrangements have already been made, I am told, with "mine host" of the Yarborough House for the edible part of the feast, and the audible part will not be neglected by the committee appointed in June.

The work of the College moves on smoothly and prosperously—and, I had almost said, noiselessly, but even as I write some of the students are firing off pop-crackers as an expression of their private views in regard to recent public events. My colleagues tell me that a large amount of steady and successful work is being done, and that the percentage of absence is unusually small.

Letter from Bro. Bryan, Shanghai, China.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I appreciated your short, but sweet, personal letter very much. We are glad to hear that you are slowly improving in health. We are praying for you, and hope soon to hear of your entire recovery.

We are living in Shanghai now you see. The Board asked us to take the place left by Bro. Herring and family.

We were sorry to leave Chinkiang and the great work there, but feel that we have been led of the Lord to come here.

I think that we have a broader field of usefulness, because there are more church members to instruct, and just as many heathen to whom we can preach. Dr. and Mrs. Yates have laid the foundation wisely and well. They too built well thereon. Bro. and Sister Herring and Bro. and Sister Tatum by consecrated lives, and faithful work have also done a good work in wisely carrying on what was well begun. I count it a privilege and pleasure to join such a work, and to be associated with such co-laborers as Mrs. Yates and Bro. and Sister Tatum.

Next week we have our annual meeting. I will write you something about it.

Please call attention to the fact that our address is no longer Chinkiang, but Shanghai.

I am thirty pounds below my usual weight, but improving slowly. Hope the cool weather will set me up!

God's Lighthouse in the Moral Darkness.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I have learned that Bro. G. W. Harman has resigned the pastorate of the church at Monroe. I spent a week with Bro. Harman in July, and can testify to the valuable work he has done in Monroe. He is a good preacher and a wise pastor, and any one of the pastorless churches in North Carolina would do well to call him. It pains me to see any of our churches without pastors, while such wise and able preachers as G. W. Harman and J. B. Boone are without fields of labor. No fields should lie uncultivated if it be possible to induce such men to enter them. As I think of these men and the vacant churches, my thoughts turn to churches and their pastors that are doing wonders for their generation and for the generations to come. What a power for good, and everlasting good, is a church of Christ located in any community, supporting the faithful preaching of the gospel, and holding regularly the public worship of God. This is God's lighthouse erected in the midst of moral darkness. Here is where God saves the people of that community. Here during the yearly protracted meeting, sinners are converted and baptized. Here God's people are edified, built upon the most holy faith. Here the work of salvation and the christian's growth in grace continue on through the centuries. Here influences are started which reach the ends of the earth, and will continue to the end of time, and then on through eternity. How I do rejoice when I hear that a church has been organized, and when I see one, however feeble, and yet is blessed with the regular ministrations of the word. I rejoice also when I hear that for such an organization a comfortable house has been built.

And this turns my thoughts to Bro. S. F. Conrad, who has spent the best years, yea, nearly all the years of his life in organizing churches and building for them houses of worship. I know of no one who in this line has done so valuable and so self-denying a work. We should pray for more such men to go into the destitute portions of the State and in all the South. W. R. GWALTNEY.

From Brother Stallings at High Point.

Dear Recorder:—On last Sunday it was my happy privilege to baptize twelve professing believers, who had been approved for the ordinance by Abbott's Creek church.

The Union Meeting of the Liberty Association was held with the church the previous week. It was an excellent session.

On Saturday the Union gave place to a short conference of the church, when Bro. N. B. Orrell, a licensed preacher for some years among the Anti-missionaries, who agreed with us instead of with them in doctrine, was received into our church, and was licensed to exercise his gifts as a minister.

Bro. Henry Sheets remained with me after the close of the Union till Friday night and labored with his usual zeal and earnestness. The church and congregation and the pastor greatly enjoyed his ministrations and were greatly helped.

The Lord abundantly blessed the meeting. Many were left seeking the Lord, while a number of others, besides those baptized, professed conversion. We confidently expect others to unite with the church. The Lord be praised.

I begin a meeting at the new church at Wallburg next Sunday. I will be aided by the same dear brother. May the Lord meet with us and abundantly bless his cause.

The prospects for the College are very encouraging. Five new boarders have entered within the last two weeks. Several others are expected by the 23d, the beginning of our second quarter—a good time to enter. Our local patronage is the best we have had since the first year after we began here. Excellent work is being done, and I am determined that the College shall be kept up to the high standard it has always had. A little effort on the part of its friends to give it patronage will insure its success and permanency. Yours fraternally,

J. N. STALLINGS.

Letter from Rev. E. F. Tatum in China.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—The last letter I received from Bro. D. W. Herring had so much sad news in it—the death of his little girl and wife. This dispensation of Providence comes close to us. Brother and Sister Herring met us at the steamer when we landed in China. They took us in and were so kind and helpful. For three years they were our fellow workers, our next-door neighbors, our friends, and such good ones! We grieve on account of our own loss. We sympathize with our brother in his inexpressible bereavement. She did stand by him so bravely! She believed in him and was ready to go with him to the ends of the earth, or to the center of heathendom.

Three days after this sad news reached Shanghai was the usual weekly meeting for prayer by the missionary circle here led by the oldest member of it. The subject of the entire meeting turned on the life and death of our sister, and in expression of sympathy from every one present for the bereaved ones. We saw, as we never saw before, how they, too, loved and esteemed our friends.

I had heard indirectly that Bro. Herring was sick with typhoid fever in Wilmington, N. C. I mentioned the fact. A brother prayed. In this prayer he showed that he did not believe that Bro. Herring's sickness was unto death. His faith was that the Lord had a work for him in China, and that he would raise him up and bring him back to this land. We wait in hope for farther news. Yours fraternally,

E. F. TATUM.

Letter from the Seminary.

Editor Recorder:—If you will accept, I shall endeavor to give some little account of affairs here at present—Baptist affairs in particular. Quite a number of new students have matriculated since my last letter. Two of this number are from North Carolina—Brother J. S. Corpening, one of the recent graduates of Wake Forest College, and Bro. T. H. Plemmons, from the western part of the State. The latter just got here Saturday, being prevented by sickness from entering nearer the beginning of the session. I have not seen very much of him yet, but from what I have seen have begun to think that the high compliment I heard paid him by a former President of Judson College, not long since, was a befitting one.

This makes sixteen from North Carolina so far, which goes beyond the record of any previous year. So far as I have been able to find, our men are getting on finely with their work in the Seminary. Bro. C. J. Thompson has been from the first quite popular as a preacher among Kentucky Baptists, as is evidenced by the demand for his services. He has had regular work ever since he has been in the Seminary. It will pay some of the pastorless churches in the State to keep on the track of him and see to it that he comes back to the State when he shall have finished his course here. Why should North Carolina, or any other State, allow its ministers that are best trained in mind and heart to wander off to other places? Is it not true that their places in many cases are filled by men inferior to themselves?

Bro. W. E. Crocker was elected by the students that board in the Hall to preside at the organ at our evening devotions' just after supper. It reminds some of us of how acceptably he served the church at Wake Forest in a like capacity while a student at the College. The brethren at Walnut Street Baptist church have shown their appreciation of his services by giving him a similar position in their Sunday-school.

Bro. F. M. Royall is attending a course of lectures at one of the medical colleges in the city in connection with his work in the Seminary, which he thinks will better fit him for the work to which he has given his life. This will be his last year to attend the Seminary.

Bro. Millard's fitness to be one of the editors of the Seminary Magazine has not gone unnoticed by the stockholders of the Magazine, and the result is his name appears among the list of editors. Bro. Millard will probably take charge of a church as pastor in connection with his studies in the Seminary.

Dr. T. T. Eaton favored the Seminary students a few nights ago with a very interesting and instructive account of his trip abroad last summer. It would be useless to attempt to give even its bare outline here. He proposed to deliver the lecture to the students provided they would raise a given amount for the Students' Aid Fund. More than the amount specified was raised, and so we had the lecture. I suppose Dr. Whitsitt would not object to his giving his lecture again on similar conditions.

The first day of each month is devoted here to the study of missions. This has been the case since the founding of the Seminary. And so the first day of each month is familiarly known among us as "missionary day." On this day all recitations and lectures are suspended, and we have a meeting of the "Missionary Society of the Seminary." Last Tuesday, being the first day of November, was the time of our first meeting for the session. The object of the Society, as its name may suggest, is to get information as to missions, with the hope of keeping alive what interest we may already have in this great subject, and if possible of greatly increasing that interest. The Society has under its direction at present three flourishing mission Sunday schools. It is hoped that at least one or two others will be organized at an early day. This may be said to be another object of the Society. It has been my privilege to be connected with one of these mission schools ever since my connection with the Seminary began.

Our meeting last Tuesday was a very interesting one. We were favored on that occasion with an admirable essay by one of the students, Bro. W. B. McGarity of Atlanta, Ga. The task assigned him was to give some account of all the missionaries that have ever been students in the Seminary—their personal history; what influenced them to go into the work; the scene of their missionary operations and the success that attended their labors, and so on. The task was a painstaking one, but it was done to the pleasure and profit of those who heard. Dr. Basil Manly was the honored President of our Society up to the time of his death, but that duty has since devolved upon Dr. Broadus. It will hereafter be made the duty of our new professor, Dr. Dargan.

With best wishes for the success of your excellent paper, I am,

Very respectfully, J. I. K.

Rev. A. T. Denny.

The subject of this sketch was born in Person county, N. C., November 7, 1867.

The years of his earlier boy-hood were spent upon his father's farm, working during the summers and attending the public schools of his district during the winters. While yet quite young, he gave evidence of thirst for knowledge and of that studious disposition which afterwards became characteristic of his life.

When about fifteen years old, he became thoroughly awakened to his sinfulness and helplessness, and was led to accept Jesus Christ as his only Saviour. Soon afterwards, he was baptized into the fellowship of Antioch Baptist church by Elder J. H. Vernon, (I think). His was a genuine conversion, and from that time his life bore testimony to the power of infinite grace.

Soon after his connection with the church he began to feel that it was his duty to preach the gospel. Being as yet very young and naturally of an unassuming and retiring disposition, he struggled for awhile against these impressions, but at length being thoroughly convinced that the Master had called him to that work, he consecrated his life to the preaching of the gospel.

In the meantime he spent two years at Moravian Falls Academy under the tutorship of Rev. G. W. Greene.

Having been licensed by his church, and feeling deeply the need of a better preparation for his life work, he entered Wake Forest College in September, 1889, remaining a student of that institution until his death. Had he lived, he expected to graduate in June, '93.

Here, as in all other relations of life, he won the confidence and esteem of his teachers and fellow-students by his quiet, persevering devotion to duty. Equally faithful in the performance of all his duties both as a member of his Society and of the College, his life proved the candor and honesty of his heart. So honorable and praiseworthy was he in all his relations at College, that, to use the words of a fellow-student, "No one could know him and doubt his christianity."

His vacations were spent, for the most part, in preaching the gospel—a work which he loved with all his heart.

For one year before his death he served very acceptably, Cool Springs church, his labors being blessed in the addition of a number to the church and the general upbuilding of the Lord's cause in the community.

On the second Sunday in June, last, he was ordained to the full work of the ministry by Elders Beam, Lamberth, Watkins and Landsdell.

During the summer he had an attack of malarial fever, and returning to College before he had fully regained his strength, he relapsed, the relapse taking a typhoid form. He was carried home where every attention possible was shown him by devoted parents, brothers, friends, and the best medical counsel available, but after four weeks' illness he gently fell asleep, October 17, 1892.

During his sickness he was exceedingly patient, never murmuring nor complaining, but often speaking of the brighter future before him. He sang "Rock of Ages," "Jesus, lover of my soul," and "Sweet bye and bye," when so weak as to have to rest between every stanza.

For some time before his death, he was unable to speak, but fifteen minutes previous to his dissolution a smile crept over his face which remained even after he was cold in death. Who could doubt but that in this hour of trial he realized that the eternal was his refuge and the Everlasting Arms were about him?

On the evening of the 18th of October, after appropriate services conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. G. T. Watkins, his remains were gently laid to rest in the cemetery at Antioch church—a fitting place, for there he learned to trust the Saviour, there he was baptized, there he was ordained, and there now he sleeps until the resurrection morn.

A very large concourse of people were present signifying by their presence and tear-stained faces how much he was loved in his own community.

Thus closed a life that seemed to possess large possibilities of usefulness in the Master's vineyard. Bro. Denny was known to the writer for two years before his death, one year as room-mate at college and hence he writes this sketch with a feeling of unspeakable sadness—and yet not so much sadness as disappointment. For why should we grieve for one whose life was so pure and good? He has only gone from us to his reward and we too shall follow soon. And so let us not grieve for him, but rather rejoice because our lives have been made better by his example—rejoice because the power of sovereign grace enabled him to live well and die so triumphantly—rejoice because it is our privilege to live in the service of the Master and to be ready for him when he calls for us. "Be ye also ready for in an hour when ye think not the Son of man cometh." R. R. DAY.

Board of Missions.

The Board of Missions will hold an important meeting in the Mission Rooms on Thursday, Dec. 1st, 1892, at 7 o'clock p. m. It is important that all the members should attend. According to a resolution, passed by the Convention at Goldsboro, all applications for aid in mission work for next year should be sent to the Board by Dec. 1st. The Executive Committee of each Association should send a full report of its arrangements in missions for next year, with all the applications for aid to come from the Association to the Board.

State Missions.

You may see from the Treasurer's report in this paper that he has received for State Missions this Conventional year, $11,829.43. There is, we think, about $1,000 more in sight to come to the Treasurer in the next ten days—then $3,000 more will be needed; but from whom it will come we know not. Will not every pastor and every church and every Sunday school and every mission society in the State aid us in this work just now? We expect to pay every dollar, if possible, on our State Mission work before the Convention meets in this city Dec. 8th, 1892. This can be done if all will help. We must not carry a debt on State Missions to the Convention this year, and will not, if all will help. Help us at once, please.

First Baptist Church, Wilmington, N. C.

WHEREAS, Our beloved pastor, Thos. H. Pritchard, D. D., has thought it his duty to offer his resignation, to take effect Jan. 1st, proximo. Whereas, the church has accepted his resignation, in deference to his wishes, being emphasized by his determination, after it had been once declined almost unanimously. Therefore be it resolved:

That in severing this intimate, cordial and affectionate relationship, which has existed with so much profit to our church for nine years, we feel deeply conscious of the loss which we will sustain, both as to a spiritual adviser, and a strong and sympathetic friend.

That we feel grateful to our Heavenly Father that he has permitted us to sit under his teaching for so long a time, and for the sweet influences of a life, which has preached to us not only the "unsearchable riches of Christ," but has impressed us with "the beauty of holiness" as exemplified in his every day life of patience, forbearance, and "the greatest of all," charity.

That while in the history of our church during this period there has been an occasional disturbance, marring the symmetry of the whole; yet our pastor has been the ever bold, faithful, and fearless advocate of the right, with his people as his trusted allies.

That we point with humble gratitude to God, to the substantial and steady growth of our cause in this community, as evidenced by the establishment of a church, almost as large as our own, in another part of our city, a Chapel and Home for the aged and infirm; the placing of a handsome, large organ in our church; the addition of a lecture room, nearly completed, and above all the pervading conviction that we are in a better condition to do effectual work for the Master than ever before in our history.

We commend him to the love of the brethren at Charlotte, who are fortunate in the prospect of his future labors, and ask their consideration of Hebrews 13: 17—"Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves: for they watch for your souls, as they that must give an account; that they may do it with joy, and not with grief; for that is unprofitable for you."

That we offer as our farewell to our pastor, Josh. 1: 9—"Have I not commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest."

That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the church, and a copy each be sent to the pastor and the church at Charlotte.

Work Among the Chinese in America.

An item in the personals of the RECORDER of last week to the effect that the "Baptist Chinese Mission in New York has a congregation of 250 Chinamen with a native preacher, Jue Hawk," has a point of deep interest.

While pastor of the "Central Christian church," St. Louis, Mo., in 1885, I formed the acquaintance of a Chinese laundry boy aged seventeen. Aided by his Sunday-school teacher, Miss Robinson, who died a missionary in India a few months ago, I directed the mind of the bright young Oriental to the Lord Jesus. After months of careful instructions, during which time I had him often in my home, I found that he was born of the Spirit, and I baptized him in the presence of a large audience. The event created something of a sensation at the time, as he was the first of the Chinese ever immersed in that city. I began immediately to prepare for his education in which I was heartily helped by twelve gentlemen and ladies from eight different States and one from England. The youth entered Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, in March, 1886. He is now fairly educated, and most devotedly consecrated to Christ. His heart has ever burned to preach the gospel. He attended the great convention of the Christian Endeavor societies in New York last summer, and made a speech that captured that great throng. I wrote a brief history of the boy, which appeared with his picture in one of the monthlies in 1886.

When I entered the Baptist ministry eighteen months ago, I made no personal effort to induce Jue Hawk to follow me, but I am now heartily glad that he is in our work, and in such an important field. For it is in harmony with my theory of missions that we must evangelize the foreigners here at home if we would follow God's "methods of missions," and thus through them convert the heathen abroad.

Encouraged.

I have been recently greatly encouraged, by noticing the sympathy for, and the interest in, the work of our Ministers' Relief Board, manifested by pastors, churches and associations in different parts of the State. I have visited several associations this fall in the interest of our Board work, and would have visited more, but for my appointments with my churches at home. At these associations I have been kindly received as a representative of the Board, allowed a good opportunity to present the claims of our work, and received cash collections at each for our aged ministers. Other associations have done the handsome thing by hearing other representatives of the Board, and by sending us funds for our work. Thanks, brethren and sisters.

In giving to these aged men and their wives, or their widows, you are certainly doing the Lord's work. Paul gave much time in collecting for the "poor saints at Jerusalem." Christ will say to his people on that day, "I was ahungered, and ye gave me no meat," and James says, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction," &c. Brethren, please remember that we have both Scripture command and precedent for this work, and let us hear from you soon. The winter is near at hand, and let us see to it that the aged men and women that we have promised to aid, are not neglected during the season when they specially need help. We have now ten aged preachers and three widows on our list of beneficiaries. It is to be remembered that nearly all of these aged brethren have wives still living; so in giving to the aged preachers, you are not only cheering them in their humble homes, but also their aged companions, the sharers of their joys and their sorrows. You can readily see that counting the wives of these aged men, our list of beneficiaries is largely increased. In thinking of the aged preachers, I fear we have, to some extent, overlooked the noble women, who, through all these long years, have stood by their husbands, and by their faithfulness at home made it more possible for them to be useful from home. When the "crowning day" comes, we are verily persuaded that some of the brightest crowns will be placed upon the brows of these "uncrowned heroines," now among us. Ah, my brethren and sisters, why should not those so dear to the Lord be dear to us while they linger with us, waiting for their summons from the King of that country to which they go? When I think of these aged women, and the widows we are aiding, I am a little puzzled to know why our good Baptist sisters are not more deeply interested in our work; but they are coming; the largest single cash contribution so far was from a godly woman.

Again, let me say that our work is heartily endorsed by our State Convention. We have seen the tokens of the Lord's presence with us; the work is enlarging; our way is brightening before us. Let our churches and pastors come to our help. It will afford me great pleasure to visit any church that I can reach through the week without neglecting my home churches.

Any one needing information about our plan of work, &c., can obtain it promptly by addressing a postal to me at Durham, N. C. Contributions can be sent direct to our Treasurer, T. E. Cheek, Durham, N. C., or to the Convention Treasurer, J. D. Boushall, Raleigh, N. C.

The South Fork Association.

The meeting of this body for 1892 was the most lively and interesting we have had for years. The churches were all represented, and the reports showed an advance of twenty-five per cent. in contributions over any previous year.

The Executive Committee, which had charge of all the work during the year, closed the year without debt. They had worked independent of the State Mission Board, and there was raised during the year for State and Associational Missions within a few dollars of double the amount raised in any previous year.

State Missions was ably represented by Bro. C. B. Justice, and the Association determined to go on as they had been doing, co-operating with the State Convention in mission work in our bounds. There was a strong difference of opinion among the brethren as to the wisest course to pursue, but the Spirit of the Lord was present, and the brethren "got together" on the question.

The Association resolved to try to raise $300 as her part of the Centennial fund, and went to work to do it. She also resolved to support Bro. J. J. Payson at Wake Forest, and give Bro. D. P. Bridges $50 at Louisville.

The discussions were spirited and showed a lively interest in every department of the Convention work.

The Association meets next year at Stanly Creek, on the C. C. R. R.

Yours in the work,
M. P. MATHENEY.

S. S. Teacher's Bible.

"The Holman Self-pronouncing Sunday-school Teacher's Bible" is the realization of the wish of many a Bible reader. We are glad to see such a work published, and by an American house. It has all the excellencies of the best Oxford edition, with the almost invaluable addition of the proper name being so marked as to show correct pronunciation. The general make-up of the book is unsurpassed, while its price is not above the ordinary teacher's Bibles.

Kindness.

Editor Recorder:—Though not a subscriber, I am a reader and great lover of the BIBLICAL RECORDER, and have just been reading and was deeply impressed with the little sketch of "How two humble strangers were made to feel at home." Oh, the power and holy influence of kindness, and that kindness so often withheld!

It is a sad fact that people who are graciously permitted by an Alwise Creator to own a goodly supply of this world's goods, seldom, if ever, condescend to visit and show loving kindness to those in humble circumstances. But it is more sad and more sinful to teach the innocent little children that they must not, under any circumstances, associate with their poor and ignorant, though respectable, neighbors. Is it Christ-like to shun the poor? Did Jesus Christ when here upon earth lift a high head and pass them by unnoticed, uncared for? My christian friends, when you go to church and see a poor woman or child thinly clad, in a faded calico it may be, do you see them as they look beseechingly into your face for a kind word of encouragement or a friendly recognition? Or do you pass them without a friendly handclasp, or even courteous "good evening?" Oh, that christian people would act what they profess. If you profess to be a christian, then act it. Let's not have so many big "I's" and little "U's." Kindness, like charity, should begin at home. How often we see a man tired and overworked, and perhaps cross, go home to his loved ones, where he should receive the kindest words and most gentle treatment, but instead, is so often repelled by an ill-tempered wife who has not thought fit to brush her hair all morning for the benefit of her husband. I am a wife myself, and do not profess to be perfect, (and I suppose I must confess to a very naughty temper too,) but I am trying to apply the healing balm of kindness to all I come in contact with who are in need of its excellent healing powers. Sister, if your husband leaves you in the morning cross and all out of sorts, you just cook something real nice for his dinner, and when he comes home meet him with a bright and cheerful smile upon your face, (don't forget to have your hair neatly brushed and your collar clean and on straight), have something pleasant to say in place of reminding him of his short-comings, and if he is not a "sure enough bear" you will soon find that his bearishness will vanish before your loving kindness like clouds before a summer sun.

And husband, if you are tired and overworked, don't forget that your wife also has trials and troubles too numerous to mention; that her work is never done, but is the same thing over and over each day. I say, don't forget that she is only human, and if you, by your harsh words and ill temper provoke her to unkindness, don't study and wonder all day, "what made Mary speak so unkindly to me?" but be a man, acknowledge your faults, and ask her forgiveness for your bearishness, and ten to one you will see the loving eyes fill with tears of penitence, the dear loving arms will creep around your neck, and while she hides her tear-wet face upon your breast, a trembling, contrite voice will whisper, "I am so sorry; let's kiss and begin all over again."

Oh, let us all be more patient and forbearing, and always kind to each other. "And be ye kind to one another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." Eph. 4: 32.

The Fear of Death.

The panic which has reigned for the past few weeks in plague-stricken Hamburg, and the anxiety felt in this country over the presence of pest ships in New York harbor, together with the appearance of the dread disease in the city itself, remind us anew of the power of death to fill the human heart with alarm, if not, indeed, as is so often the case, with wild, unreasoning terror. What Satan says in the Book of Job holds true of the average mortal: "Skin for skin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life." Different as it may be with many, in the great majority of cases men cling to their lives as tenaciously as they do to nothing else, and it only needs a destructive epidemic, or, it may be, the threat of one, to arouse the fears of a community to a fever heat.

That the fear of death plays its part in the divine economy will not be denied by any christian thinker. Not only is it needed to sober men, and, if they believe in future rewards and punishment, to make them bestow some thought upon the consequences of deeds done in the flesh, but it is needed as a help to keep them in a state of existence where, for the time being, they belong. If there were no fear of death, from what cause soever it may spring, men would not take such good care of themselves physically, they would violate the laws of health with far more recklessness, and, through disgust and grief and pain, great numbers of them would lay hands upon themselves and rush madly out of the world. But the fear of death prompts the vast majority of them to take some heed to what they do, and, even when conscientious scruples are wanting, to tremble at the slightest temptation to commit suicide. Thus the fear of death plays its necessary part in the divine economy, and may be regarded one of the warders that God has stationed in the Castle of Life.

But now to the christian comes the uplifting thought that, through Jesus Christ, the fear of death may be overcome and trampled under foot. The true disciple of Christ may have good reasons for desiring to abide longer on earth; to him, as to any man, the hideousness of the forms of death may be repellant, and he may without any disloyalty to his Lord shield [illegible] disease, and [illegible] the public lines so often rank the [illegible] with fear and dread. But for him, the fear of death in its darkest and most forbidding sense has been conquered, and, while he may not be in haste to bid farewell to earth, he enjoys a serenity of mind to which the natural man is a stranger. Now and then the body may partially gain the upper hand, and he may seem to be on the eve of flatly contradicting the profession of his faith; but before long his soul resumes its equipoise, and once more he shows to all who watch his motions what it is to be able to believe, as did the gentle bard of Amesbury,

> "That Life is ever lord of Death,
> And Love can never lose its own."

For the true disciple of Jesus Christ, it is needless to say, believes in another life. Aside from the various natural arguments in support of the doctrine of immortality, he has a crowning argument in favor of that doctrine upon which to plant his feet,—the life, teachings and resurrection of his Divine Master. The Chief Character in the gospels is to him no phantom, but an eternal reality. Not only did Jesus Christ once walk this earth and go about "doing good," but he still lives and loves, having reappeared from the dead and ascended up on high, and taken the seat that belongs to him as the "Prince of Life" and the Lord of Souls. "Because I live, thou shalt live also," this Jesus has said to him, and accordingly the fear of death that is born of unbelief in a future existence has no place in his heart, since he believes, if he believes anything, that the Incarnate Son of God has "brought life and immortality to light."

Nor must we overlook the fact that that fear of death which springs from a realization of the sinfulness of sin has been conquered for the true christian. He repeats with unutterable gladness the words of St. Paul: "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ," as well as those other words of the same apostle: "The sting of death is sin: and the strength of sin is law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Hence death means to him the prelude, not merely to another life, but to a life that shines the fairer the more that it is contemplated by the glowing eye of faith. He is to live again, but, what is vastly more inspiring, he is to be freed from the bondage of sin, and taste the blessedness of a life that will have no alloy. Consequently he can hold his head erect and possess himself in patience amid the most trying experiences. The God who made him will not forsake him; the Living Saviour in whom he has put his trust will fulfill all his promises to him; and with the great apostle he proudly cries: "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him."

In these days, then, when pestilence is working such awful havoc in certain quarters of the globe, and we remember that it has crossed the seas and found a lodgment, however slight it may happily prove to be, on our own soil, they who call themselves christians have a sovereign opportunity to show in their bearing and conversation the power of gospel faith to make men calm and courageous in times of great alarm, and thus dispensers of strength and confidence to all who turn to them for help.—Watchman, Sept. 29.

Don't.

Don't, of course, is simply a contraction for do not. Don't is a very good thing in its proper place, as when one is tempted to do wrong. But there is danger of overdoing the don't business. We have heard a mother whose only way of managing her child was by continually saying to it, Don't do this, don't do that, don't do the other thing. At nearly every turn it made, the child was met by a grim visaged don't, until we imagine it almost came to the conclusion that the whole of this world into which it had come was one great big don't. There was no telling the child to do this, or do that; no showing it the right way in which to walk; nothing positive in its training. The whole system of training was negative, telling it what not to do, discouraging it from the evil, but neither pointing out the good nor encouraging the child to try to follow it. Ruskin says somewhere, if you want a child to do right, don't be always condemning its little vices, but when you see it doing wrong praise the opposite virtue. For instance, if the child comes in with a dirty dress on don't scold it for getting the dress dirty, but talk about the beauties of cleanliness, and the next time the child will want to keep its dress clean.

It may require, perhaps, a little judicious mixing of the don't with the do, of the negative with the positive, of blame with praise. But certainly it should not be all blame and no praise, all negative and no positive, all don't and no do; and if either is to predominate let it rather be the praise than the blame.

The same thing, also, is true of a pastor and his church. Often the only preaching he does is of a negative kind, finding fault with them either in regard to their individual christian life or their church life, and continually exhorting them not to do so and so. Sometimes he even goes so far as to scold those who are present on account of those who are absent. We believe, however, that instead of exercising this scolding, fault-finding disposition, the pastor should preach the gospel, he should set before the people a positive standard by which to govern their lives. Instead of telling them continually of the ugliness of sin, let him show the beauty that there is in the religion of Jesus Christ. In this way he will be more apt to win them to a higher christian life.

A don't is a very good thing, we repeat, to a certain extent, but if one—a mother, a pastor, an editor, or any one else—is disposed to become a chronic grumbler and quarrel with everything around him, the best advice we can give him is, don't.—Baptist and Reflector.

A Parable for To-Day.

What christianity needs to day is not a statement, but men and churches who will live up to it just as it is. Why does the world listen to the story of the cross? The reason is, that God has so builded man that there is a place in his heart which nothing but the cross of Christ can fill. The author of christianity is the author of the human heart; they must fit each other. A voyage around the world is planned. Two ships are in the offings of the harbor. Each one is recommended by those who have a personal interest in them and a personal interest in us. We are invited on board to examine, inquire and decide for ourselves. The first ship is under the command of an advanced theologian. He believes in progressiveness, in the Apostle John rather than in Paul, and in the preaching of smooth things. His greetings are cordial and polite. His ship appears to be in the completest trim, and it appears to be unnecessary to visit the other ship in the harbor. Still, for some reason, unaccountable perhaps, you decide to go on board the second ship. You find her under the command of an old-school christian. He believes in an inspired Bible, salvation through the blood of Christ, in life and death everlasting. As you reach the deck he is pleased to greet you, but has no succession of smiles like those on the face of the liberal captain. Often he seems sober, sometimes depressed. This second ship is less inviting than the first. Outside there is no varnish; the cordage and canvas look as though they had been more than one voyage and had encountered more than one storm. The men on board have no gloves on their hands or rings on their fingers, and their faces look as though they were made of copper. There is no tapestry and no lace. You look down into the forecastle. It is not over and above inviting, for there are in it the poor, the sick, the lame, the blind, the immigrant. You look down into the hold and you miss the odor of lavender which you breathed on board the other ship, and you say, "This is rough," and back to the other ship you go—the lavender and chloroform ship. You are on the point of saying to the captain, "I will take passage with you, sir, but for some reason you hesitate. During this hesitation the wind is freshening from the east. Soon there comes in a swell from the sea. It strikes the ship quartering, and she appears to have faulty joints, with nothing firm about her.

The seams open; the pumps are set to work. You say to the captain:

"What does this mean?"

"Ah!" he replies, "this is nothing."

"But ought a seaworthy ship like this to shake under such seas?"

"O, yes; we're all right."

"Captain, how many times did you say this ship had been round the world?"

"Round the world! O, she's never been around the world. She's hardly finished yet."

"Well, then, are you perfectly sure she can double Cape Horn in a gale of wind?"

"O, yes; there's no trouble. The stories about doubling Cape Horn are all exaggerated; the difficulties are imaginary."

And when the captain has said this you think there is some danger in doubling Cape Horn. And there is, not far off, a rough, cold cape which we must all double some day or some night.

At the risk of being thought fickle you ask to be rowed back to the orthodox ship. The wind has increased meanwhile, and quite a sea is rolling into the harbor. You are on board. A swell strikes her; another and another strike her, but they seem under her stalwart bows to be nothing but gentle thuds. With that heavy anchor and that big, rough, rusty iron cable reaching down into the heart of the sea, the staunch ship does not seem to mind at all the thump and the thump of the sea swell. The thoughtful captain, as if by force of habit, has his eye meanwhile upon the rigging and the sky. At length you venture to say:

"Captain, this vessel seems well built."

"Yes, sir."

"Has she ever been round the world?"

"Yes, sir; this is her tenth voyage."

"Is there any danger in doubling Cape Horn?"

"Danger! You will find out when you double it."

And then the captain is tender and gentle, and says:

"My friend, we always dread to double that cape. The seas are often heavy and angry and dark, but you need have no fear, for every plank and every yard of canvas and every inch of cordage in the ship is made to meet the storms encountered while doubling that cape."

You are to take passage to morrow for a voyage around the world. Which shall be the ship?—Prof. L. T. Townsend.

It is no easy thing to dress harsh, coarse hair so as to make it look graceful or becoming. By the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor, this difficulty is removed, and the hair made to assume any style or arrangement that may be desired. Give the Vigor a trial.

The Blessing of the Ideal.

There is a homely old proverb which says: "You will never hit the weather cock if you aim at the barn door," meaning simply that one's success is measured by one's aspirations. When a man is satisfied with himself, or his attainments, you may rest assured that he will never be anything better than he is at present. There is no success without effort, and no successful effort without system and object.

We cannot steer through life by general direction, a fixed definite object is indispensable. Let a man have a high ideal, no matter how impracticable, and he cannot fail to be better for having it; for even if he does not succeed as he hopes, his very hope is a stimulus to greater effort.

He loses his life to find it again in his ideal. He forgets the toil and care, in the thought of what he hopes to accomplish, and in that thought finds a panacea for weariness and discouragement.

Is the artist thinking of the long years of study which his art requires, or the lack of appreciation on the part of the critics and buyers, as he stands before his easel, brush in hand? Oh, no! he thinks only of the masterpiece which is going to make his name immortal.

The mother, whose prime object in life is the worldly success of her children, dreams and plans for them till she forgets poverty and care in visions where her daughter is the center of a brilliant, social throng, or her son is taking his place among the great men of the nation.

The author who is dreaming of the days when his works will become popular is content to ascend Parnassus by very easy stages.

Thus each is privileged to build of its hopes, its joys, its longing, a lofty pleasure-house wherein to revel happier than kings or princes. And so it is that all successful lives are lived, not in the daily toil, but in looking forward to the final result. Christ himself had a purpose in life. "My work is to do the will of him who send me"—not the feeding of the five thousand, nor the raising of Lazarus, or the healing of the lepers; these were but means to the great end for which he came into the world. And Christ has set a high ideal before all his followers: "Be ye also perfect, as your Father in heaven is perfect."

Impossible, you say. In amount, but not in kind. Learn another lesson from the artist. He stands for hours copying the work of one of the old masters. He knows that he cannot equal the work of the hand long, long ago turned to dust, but as he stands and gazes, something of the inspiration of the picture comes to him, and he paints his copy, rejoicing if the faintest shadow of the life and meaning of the great painter can be seen in it. So we, in beholding him, are changed more and more into his image, not by dogma, or striving, but simply by first contemplating, then copying.—Christian Observer.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

Baltimore has enjoyed the privilege of entertaining the general convention of the Protestant Episcopal church during the past week or ten days.

A visiting delegate from Canada, in addressing the convention, congratulated himself upon the privilege of speaking before the body which constitutes "the backbone of the United States," and above all, "to the body constituting that which is always attached to the backbone, viz., the brains of the United States." We confess that up to the date of the above declaration, we were so ignorant of our national physiology, that we did not know the exact location of the spinal column. It is a pleasure to have so important an item added to our knowledge on this subject. No doubt our Canadian brother's advantage in being able to study our national organism at arm's length, so to speak, accounts for his so outstripping us in pointing out its various parts. His theory as to the location of the "brains" of the nation must as yet, however, be regarded as not established. For up to the present writing the questions which the convention have wrestled with, for the most part, are such as the following: Shall the prayer in the prayer-book be revised so as to return thanks for safe return from a voyage in general or a voyage in particular, such as a sea voyage? Shall the formula for administering baptism to infants be lengthened, or abbreviated, one delegate suggesting that the squealing of the candidate sometimes rendered a short formula exceedingly appropriate? Shall the adoration of the Virgin Mary be encouraged in "the church" or not? We do not dispute the claim of the brother that the Episcopal convention constitutes the "brains of the nation." We are only waiting for further evidence, a wider induction of facts. For the present, however, his theory will have to be held merely as a "working hypothesis."

Of course "Christian Union" must come in for a large share of attention in the meeting of the Episcopal convention. In various sermons and addresses this subject has been treated. Light is beginning to dawn on the Episcopal mind here. They begin to see and admit the indifference and ridicule with which others receive their proposition for union on the basis of the "historic episcopate." Here a point may be scored in favor of the theory as to the "brains of the nation" as set forth above. But at the same time they express their utter amazement that the value of the "historic episcopate" is not more generally recognized. Here a point may be scored against the "brains" theory. It may be remarked here that it is a strange thing under the sun that the denomination which has most to say about Christian Union, is also the denomination which practically takes the least stock in it. If our dear Episcopal brethren would cease their patronizing overtures to the rest of the christian world about union and exhibit a little more of the spirit of union in practical ways their sincerity would become more manifest.—Baltimore Baptist.

Letter from Japan.

We have had this year, since January 1st, one hundred and ninety-eight open air meetings, at which about twenty thousand persons have heard the gospel. The last Sunday in January I baptized four more, and there are others who have been accepted and will be baptized soon. When the weather is good, we have open air meetings every night, excepting Friday and Saturday nights, our helpers dividing up and preaching at the different stations.

We have, as usual, the regular Sunday morning service in our house, and this meeting is well attended. Our little church is dwelling in harmony, and growing in grace and a knowledge of the truth. The Friday night prayer meeting for the members is also kept up, and inquirers often drop in, some from seeing the sign on our gate. My Monday night Bible class is now carried on by Mrs. Brand, so that I can have another night for a gospel meeting. Mrs. Brand has also daily Bible classes, and often goes with me to the evening meetings to meet the inquirers.

On Sunday afternoons we go out distributing tracts from house to house in one of our districts. We like this work very much, and in this way become acquainted with many whose interest increases. The first day we went out, one house at which we stopped was a shoemaker's shop, all open in front, and several men inside working away, though it was Sunday. We gave a tract to one of the men, and then Mrs. Brand talked to him a little while. A few days after I received a postal from him, thanking us for the "God-given book," which he said was doing him good. He said he was a christian, but that his faith had become very weak, and he had not been resting on Sunday. Afterwards I called again at his place with my interpreter, and then he came to our house and had a long talk with me, and said he was determined to give up drinking sake (rice wine), and to rest on Sunday. He is now coming to our Sunday morning service, and last Sunday told Mrs. Brand that though he was a christian he had been "asleep," but was now going to come to the meetings.

There is much that is very trying in the work, especially in training the believers, but there is nothing discouraging, and we have cause always to rejoice and be glad. This is a very attractive field, but then what heathen field is not, from our standpoint? All the world for Christ! I am very thankful that I have been permitted to work for the Lord Jesus among the heathen, and we look for more and more blessing.—Rev. J. C. Brand, Tokyo, in Baptist Missionary Magazine.

Persecution in Japan.

The spirit of persecution is not yet dead in Japan, though not manifested in a high-handed way. It is laid at the door of the Buddhists that they seek the discharge of the christian teachers in the public schools, and in one instance they sought to drive from his home the one from whom a preaching place was rented. The success of christianity is rousing to great efforts these teachers of a false religion. The result of these oppositions can be nothing other than salutary to the christianity of Japan, for it will thus receive a sturdiness it would not otherwise attain. As Baptists we have much for which to be thankful, for we are being blessed in the baptism of many converts; but the very increase of our numbers lays upon us the greater responsibility. The reception of a convert into the church is the beginning of that training in christian doctrine and living which is necessary to a sound and stable work.

In all directions is the work opening up to us and calling for increased effort on our part. Increased facilities, great wisdom and consecration, and above all the constant presence of the Holy Spirit in great measure, are needed would we do that which is laid upon us to do. Let those in the home-land continue to pray with us that Japan may be especially remembered by the God of nations.—Rev. S. W. Hamblen, in Missionary Magazine.

Farewell Missionary Service.

A beautiful and impressive service was held on Tuesday evening, Oct. 11th, at the First Baptist church, Chicago. It was a farewell missionary occasion in honor of Miss Florence Duffield, who is going to Japan as a missionary of the W. B. F. M. S. W. The Y. P. S. C. E. of the South Side was largely represented, and the meeting was held in the large audience-room of the church. The music and addresses were excellent. The young people's society of the First church surprised Miss Duffield by the presentation to her of a gold watch. The address of Dr. Henson was most suitable and impressive—his references to the late Dr. Everts who baptized Miss Duffield when she was fourteen years old, and also to Deacon Charles Duffield, her father, called up many sacred remembrances. Mrs. Partridge, returned missionary from China, gave words of welcome to Miss Duffield to the foreign field, and Miss Duffield in responding showed the reasons of her consecration to the work. Dr. Henson offered a consecration prayer, and "God be with you till we meet again," was the closing song.—Standard.

Two young girls from Japan are now enrolled among the nurses in training at the National Temperance Hospital in Chicago. Both are graduates of a Japanese college, and desire to perfect themselves in the knowledge of nursing and non-alcoholic remedies.

Letters from D. S. Williams and Matthew T. Yates.

While with Brother Gwaltney of Wake Forest during the last session of the Atlantic Association, held in Newbern, I was telling him about the above named letters, when he requested that I should send them, or a portion of them, to the RECORDER for republication. I send, therefore, the entire letter of Bro. Williams to the RECORDER, and a part of Bro. Yates' letter to Bro. Williams. They were published in the RECORDER of Mrch 8th, 1851:

BROTHER WILLIAMS' LETTER.

"It will be recollected that at the session of the Raleigh Association of 1849, the undersigned, as the Moderator of the Association, was directed to respond to the report of Brother M. T. Yates, our missionary in China. In that response, I took occasion to inform our brother of the dissatisfaction that was manifested on the part of certain brethren relative to his expenditures, &c.; that they wished him to render a strict account of the way and manner that he spent the money sent him, and fears were likewise entertained that he did not get all that was sent him. Hence our brother, in the following letter in answer to my response, speaks freely on that subject. The inquisitiveness spoken of was manifested by only a few of the members of the Association who did but little in his support.

"Yours, &c., D. S. WILLIAMS."

BROTHER YATES' LETTER.

"SHANGHAI, Aug. 12, 1850.

"My Dear Bro. Williams:—Your thrice welcome letter of Sept. 29, 1849, in reply to my report to the Raleigh Association of the same year, was received here July 29th, 1850. This is the first letter I have received from any member of the Association (my father excepted, also Bro. L. C. Hinton), since I met with them at old 'Spring Branch.'

* * * * *

"From what you say, I am inclined to infer that the state of feeling towards me, in the bounds of the Raleigh Association, is not what it might be. I am sure of one thing,—i. e., that I have some strong friends in the Association—brethren and sisters who love the cause of missions and who love to give of their substance to promote the glory of God among the heathen. I am sorry to find there are some among the brethren of the Association who are beginning to tire, and are ready to conclude that it is time China herself should support us, &c. This, my dear brethren, is something we shall never see in our time. And suppose the heathen at Shanghai were to support us. Would that absolve these brethren from their obligation to give or send the gospel to every creature? Shanghai bears about the proportion to China that Raleigh does to America. Some of the brethren seem to be anxious to know if I have received the full amount contributed by the Raleigh Association. In reply to this I would say I have received, each year, the full amount reported in the minutes. In 1849, I received $524.55. The minutes for 1848 and '7 I cannot now find, but I remember that the amount received was just what was reported by the Yates Committee. The Association need not fear that their money will stick to somebody's fingers; it goes through but one hand after it leaves the Association. I will report in full on this in my next to the Association.

"I am not sure that I can satisfy the brethren as to how I spend their money. I will say this much, however, that it is all expended for something to eat and to wear. And so expensive is everything of this kind that the contribution of the Association is not sufficient for our support. The balance necessary is furnished by the Board at Richmond. On this point I will report fully in my next to the Association—the cost of articles, &c., &c. Till then believe me as ever your fellow-laborer in the cause of Christ.

"MATTHEW T. YATES."

COMMENTS.

1. Dr. Yates went to Shanghai September, 1847. In less than three years he was compelled to look to the Board at Richmond for support. What would have become of Dr. Yates and his mission if he had gone out to China as the missionary of the Raleigh Association, independently of the Foreign Mission Board.

2. It is not safe to rely upon the enthusiasm engendered by the popularity or name of any human being. In other words, if the name and popularity of Matthew T. Yates failed to secure to him the continued support of his brethren, it is vain for any man to go to the foreign field, expecting continued support from those who give from personal regard or spasmodic enthusiasm. The evangelization of the world rests upon those who give from principle and give in the name of JESUS, the name above every name.

3. Every church or association that confines its missionary contributions to any one man or field, instead of aiding in the world's evangelization, will become more and more contracted in its views and efforts to spread the gospel.

4. Experience has demonstrated the wisdom of our forefathers in organizing first the Baptists of Great Britain and afterwards the Baptists of America into great bodies that entrusted the details of the vast work of foreign evangelization to committees or boards, the servants of the denomination. This plan of working through boards is [illegible] as scriptural as any other that I know [illegible] for the most practicable that [illegible].

[illegible] the so-called Antioch plan, the New [illegible] does not show that the Antioch [illegible] ever sent any man out to preach the [illegible] the heathen, or that they ever [illegible] plan for his support, or that they ever paid as much as a groat for the evangelization of the heathen.

God has commanded us to preach the gospel to every creature. As to plans, these are to be determined by the wisdom, piety, experience and common sense of his people.

The independent, local church, and church group plans have worked badly in the majority of cases that have come within my knowledge. The lamented Powell failed. Baldwin failed. Clark failed in 1859, and Yates would have failed had he not gone out under the appointment of the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention. JOHN T. ALBRITTON.

The Gadarenes—Luke 8: 26-37.

First, as a people; Second, their prayers; Third, its answer; Fourth, the similarity; Fifth, delusion; Sixth, Great sin.

1. These people were honest, and lovers in common of their country. They did not want the peace of their country disturbed, for they were a sort of patriots. No doubt they abhorred witches and false prophets, for doubtless there had been cranks in their land before. A due regard for property was manifested by them. In their own judgments, they were a splendid set of folks, in a cantonized section, and moving up in civil and legal splendor. They were not deceivers, but spoke right out from the contents of their hearts. But, for all this their words were the sure sounds of depravity, and their actions the most prominent signals of sin's delusive power.

2. All at once the city was in an uproar. People running here and there, bearing strange news. The many swine of a Mr. —— on the coast were scared by wicked spirits and ran into the waters and were choked! The demoniac of the tombs is clothed and in his right mind! A stranger who did all this had just landed among us. What shall we do? Let us go out to see for ourselves; and so went out all that city. Behold it is as we heard! The man of the tombs is healed and the two thousand swine are drowned. And that fellow who claims to be the great one is here. We can not afford to have our property thus destroyed and the country so distracted. O Christ! we beseach you, do get out from among us. Let us alone.

3. This was their earnest request. This was very needful, in the way they looked at things. The Devil had them to believe that this fellow, the Christ, is a bad man; dangerous both to property and society. They had lost sight of the goodness of the miracles, and could see nothing but the value of a few dollars lost, and the uncalled-for excitement of the people. So, with many unbelievers of to day, they see all the faults of professing ones, and charge it against religion. Such are but living Gadarenes of the present. Deluded creatures, blind and deaf by reason of transgression. Praying Christ not to distract them, or remain on the coasts of their consciences, the Saviour will hear.

4. He granted the petition of the people of Gadara, and he will grant yours, I'm afraid. He bid them adieu, not to bother them any more. Left in sin and darkness, without one hope for the rays of the sun of righteousness ever to illuminate their souls. His soothing voice and healing power banished forever. The sick must remain without the physician.

What a doleful state was theirs. The only Saviour of sinners, driven from the dying in sin. The only King of Peace spurned from the realm, and the one who spake never as man spake, silenced in all the coasts. The dumb, blind, palsied and lepers, crowding every street, and no Doctor there, nor balm of grace in all the city of Gadara to be found.

5. Were these sinners above thousands who lived in the days gone by? Were they more deluded, worse blinded than those in our homes and times who reject the Master? How many people of America look on the goodness of God with contempt. How many people have we who think much more of a little bunch of hogs or cattle than they do of the Lord. How many hearts, when the Holy Spirit knocks at the door to do the work of healing, reject them. I tell you, that the Gadarene sinners were not greater than those of our country.

6. How great is that sin which they thought was no sin. The dangerousness of sin is not most public and disgusting, but seemingly right and quite plausible. Eve would never have taken the forbidden fruit had the Devil not shown her the wrong side of the question.

While we think a thing no sin, nevertheless it is sin, despite what we want it to be. Yet it is devastating to everything good. Go as said the poet, "To Afric's sunny fountain and to India's coral strand," and there's naught but degradation. Superstition, debauchery, robbery and murder is found there in the most diabolical forms. Virtue, honesty, truth and kindness are verily strangers in those lands. Go to China, Turkey and all the heathen regions, observe their destitution and hundreds of avenues to misery and hell. Then ask why all this? The answer is found in the simple fact that they acted the Gadarene, and drove the wonderful Councilor from their coasts. They said, like these people of Gadara, "Thou art a disturber, a destroyer of property. Go, let us alone, we beseech you get hence." And the Master heard their cries and granted their request. My sinner friend, what means those churches, those sermons, those prayers and tears? What is that gentle wooing of the spirit, which tells you to be a better person, but the stately steppings of the Messiah? And yet, you beseech him to let you alone. To leave your country, and thereby lose the best blessings of life, miss the sweets of religion, the joys of security and the glories of heaven.

A Conjurer's Memory.

The history of the celebrated conjurer, Robert Houdin, furnishes a remarkable example of the power of memory acquired by practice. He and his brother, while yet boys, invented a game which they played in this wise. They would pass a shop window and glance into it without stopping, and then at the next corner they used to compare notes and see which one could remember the greatest number of things in the window, and in what position they stood. Having tested the accuracy of their observations, they would go and repeat the experiment elsewhere. By this means they acquired incredible powers of observation and memory; so that, after running by a shop window once and glancing as they passed, they would enumerate every article in it.

When Robert became a professional conjurer this habit enabled him to achieve feats apparantly miraculous. It is told of him that, visiting a friend's house where he had never been before, he caught a glimpse of the book-case as he passed the half-open library door. In the course of the evening, when some of the company expressed their anxiety to witness some specimens of his power, he said to his host, "Well, sir, I will tell you, without stirring from this place, what books you have in your library."

"Come, come," said he "that is too good."

"We shall see," replied Houdin. "Let some of the company go into the library and look, and I will call out the names from this room."

They did so; and Houdin began,—"Top shelf, left hand, two volumes in red morocco, Gibbon's Decline and Fall; next to these, four volumes in half calf, Boswell's Johnson; Rasselas, in cloth; Hume's History of England, in calf, two volumes, but the second one wanting," and so on, shelf after shelf, to the wonder of the whole company.

More than once a gentleman stole into the drawing room, certain that he would catch Houdin reading a catalogue; but there sat the conjurer, with his hands in his pockets, looking into the fire.—Sunshine.

The Merchants and Farmers' Peanut Company's warehouse together with 30,000 bags of peanuts were destroyed, and the Ætna Iron Works Company, also. The storage warehouse of Mayer & Co., and other buildings, were badly damaged. Loss estimated at $320,000.

THE BAPTIST TEACHER.

It is confidently believed that Volume XXIV of THE BAPTIST TEACHER will be far ahead of any of its predecessors in all that is required to furnish A Complete Help to Sunday-school workers. The best writers that can be secured have been engaged as contributors to its several departments. Attention is therefore directed with pleasure to the features of value in the BAPTIST TEACHER FOR 1893.

I. Enlargement. In order to make room for the new department upon Inductive Teaching, to run parallel with the new Inductive Quarterly, the Rev. W. G. Fennell will have at command an additional four pages each month, which will make each issue fifty-two pages, instead of forty-eight, as heretofore.

II. Colored maps, and several diagrams in preparation, will form frontispieces of great value.

III. The editorial articles will discuss live topics of the day in the same style that has made THE BAPTIST TEACHER noted for its brightness and pungency.

IV. The Lesson Expositions will be by two of the best writers in Baptist ranks: Prof. B. C. Taylor, D. D., of Crozer Theological Seminary, and Prof. H. H. Harris, D. D., LL. D., of Richmond College. This department is enriched by other writers, as follows: Rev. P. S. Henson, D. D., gives Lesson Topics; Mr. W. Taylor Smith, B. A., of Manchester, England, treats of Orientalisms in each lesson; Mrs. M. G. Kennedy gives suggestions for teaching the lesson to Intermediate, and also to Primary classes; Drs. Taylor and Harris add hints to teachers of advanced classes, and the Rev. W. G. Fennell gives notes applying to the Inductive studies. The Analyses, the Questions, the Bible Dictionary, and the Review Hints complete the means of help to the teacher, so far as one publication can do this.

V. A summary of doctrines in the lessons of each quarter will be furnished by Pres. Charles Manly, D. D., of Furman University; Pres. H. G. Weston, D. D., LL. D., of Crozer Theological Seminary; Prof. Howard Osgood, D. D., of Rochester Theological Seminary; Pres. John A. Broadus, D. D., LL. D., of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary.

VI. Character sketches of persons named in the lessons will include:

CYRUS, by Prof. A. E. Waffle, D. D.
MORDECAI, by John Humpstone, D. D.
THE MAN OF UZ, by W. Taylor Smith, B. A.

All the issues of the American Baptist Publication Society are sent out in abundant time to reach the schools before they are actually needed, and the utmost care is taken to avoid errors in direction, so that superintendents may feel sure of having them early.

John, the little son of Mr. Z. W. Haines, was instantly killed early Tuesday morning, the 15th, by an electric wire charged with the current, which lay on the ground. The lad picked up the wire, unsuspecting danger, and fell dead from the current. This is the news to us just as we go to press.

The man who was found dead with a bullet hole in his head, in a barn near Winston, was named C. F. Bevan, and not Brown, as previously stated. He was a son of a Winston jeweler.

The barn of Mr. W. S. Turner, who lives in Panther Branch township, Wake county, was destroyed by fire last Wednesday, together with its entire contents. The fire is thought to have been incendiary in its origin.

Jas. Johnson, a drunken negro, assaulted Sheriff Reynolds on the street in Asheville last Monday a week ago. The sheriff was stabbed several times but was not seriously injured. The negro was shot in the leg and lodged in jail.

The State Chronicle says the widely known and long law-suit of Josiah Turner against the late W. W. Holden has come to an end. At Hillsboro Mr. Turner took a non suit. The case was against Mr. W. G. Rosenthal, receiver, and was for $8,000 damages for imprisonment in 1870.

Two of the main business blocks of Winston is in ashes. The fire broke out at 12 o'clock Sunday night in Brown & Brown's drug store, which was suppressed; but afterwards it broke out again, and raged on Monday till the two blocks were consumed. The estimated loss is $300,000, on which there was an insurance of $200,000.

The Wilson Short Cut has been regularly opened for passenger traffic for the South this winter. By the completion of the "Short Cut" from Wilson, N. C., to Florence, S. C., via Fayetteville, the distance between Eastern cities and Charleston, Savannah and Florida points has been reduced sixty-five miles.—Wilmington Messenger.

Mr. Claude F. Wilson, who had been editor of The Wilson Advance for some time, left Wilson on Sunday morning October 30, without telling any one where he was going, but went to Weldon. Since that time nothing has been heard from him. It is not known why he should have left so mysteriously. His family are greatly distressed over the mysterious affair. The publication of the Advance will be continued.

The State election last week resulted in a great and overwhelming victory for Democracy. The entire State ticket headed by Elias Carr, was elected. The Democrats have elected all the congressmen except Capt. A. H. A. Williams, of the Fifth district, and he was counted in. It is estimated that the Democrats will control the legislature by at least a four-fifths majority.

The Charlotte Observer gives, in a special, the details of a bloody battle which took place election day at Big Rock Creek in Mitchell county. The fight was the result of a long standing feud between the Harrell and Garland families. One of the Harrells did something which angered a Garland, and instantly the fight began, sympathizers of both taking sides in the struggle. Rocks, knives and clubs were freely used. Both parties fought to exhaustion. Monroe Garland and Brownlow Stanley stabbed each other, as report said, and both lay dying. Clingman Harrell and two sons were so badly cut and bruised as to render death almost certain. Louis Garland and two others were not expected to live. A number of others were painfully injured.

DIED.

BLANCHARD—Sister Sarah Blanchard was born Sept. 7, 1866, and died Oct. 19, 1892. She professed faith in Christ at Center Hill in a meeting held by the writer in the schoolhouse. She with thirty others was baptized in Chowan river, after which she became a member of Ballard's Bridge church, and lived a consistent christian to the day of her death. For eight weeks her sufferings were indescribable. I heard not from her a word of complaint, but with christian resignation she endured all, and for days before her departure she could not see, and though all earthly comforts and hopes had fled, still faith in God supported her amid the struggle through which she was passing. Just before her departure, she spoke to her dear husband, who was not a christian, saying, "Meet me in heaven." God bless the dear husband, and save him. She leaves a father, mother, two sisters, two brothers, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. She is not dead but gone before. Let us strive to meet her in heaven. God bless the loved ones that are left, and make them ready to go when the summons shall come to you. "Be ye also ready." Are you ready! and am I ready? is the question.

JOS. ELLIOTT.

ELLIS—Dr. Willie A. Ellis son of S. F. Ellis, and grandson of A. D. Ellis, died at his father's home in Louisburg, Oct. 28, 1892. He was born Aug. 7, 1869, and at the age of sixteen years he was baptized into the fellowship of Corinth Baptist church in Franklin county. When seventeen years old he left home to enter the service of the Western Union Telegraph Company. While stationed at Atlanta, Ga., in addition to his regular duties, he took the course of Dental Surgery in the Southern Medical College of Atlanta receiving his diploma as a full graduate Feb. 29, 1892, but before entering upon the practice of his profession he was forced to return home on account of failing health. He reached Louisburg about the 15th of May, where he remained until the time of his death. He was a member of the Second Baptist church of Atlanta, Ga. The writer has rarely ever seen such patience, christian fortitude and resignation. As a young man full of hope and zeal, he desired to live that he might do more for the cause of Christ, yet he was perfectly submissive to the will of God. His faith was strong, his hope bright, his patient submission was beautiful. On Friday morning he gently passed away, and on Saturday evening after suitably services at the Baptist church his body was laid at rest in the cemetery. "Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life, or by death, for me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." M.

CREECH—Standford Creech was born July 20th, 1820, and died in Clayton, Johnston county, N. C., Oct. 31st, 1892, aged about seventy-two years. Bro. Creech professed faith in Christ and was baptised into the fellowship of "Old Johnston Liberty" (now Clayton) church, the second Sunday in September, 1854, and lived a consistent christian life thirty-eight years. He served as deacon about twenty years and was held in high esteem as an officer in his church. The last years of his life were spent in feebleness, both of body and mind, caused by paralysis, but he loved his church and faithfully attended her services as long as possible. The writer made his last visit to him one week before his death, and could not get a recognition from the one who had formerly been so glad to see him. "Do you know me?" was put to Bro. Creech twice by his pastor. "No," he replied, "I don't know who you are." "I am sorry," said the writer, "but I suppose you know Christ, your Saviour?" The question seemed to thrill his feeble frame, and he replied, "Yes, I know him." He did not know his pastor, had forgotten him, but he knew the name of his Saviour when it was mentioned. His funeral was preached Nov. 1st, 1892, text Ps. 91: 16, "With long life will I satisfy him, and show him my salvation," after which his remains were interred in the cemetery to await the resurrection at the last day. He leaves a widow and nine children to mourn their loss, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope.

To Pastors—Help Needing.

On Sunday, Oct. 30th, 1892, Bro. S. H. Mitchell, who is a good and working member of Mars Hill Baptist church in Bertie county, N. C., lost his house and kitchen and everything therein by fire. Brother Mitchell is a young but poor man, just commencing in life, and is not able to build again without help. And he takes this method of asking his Baptist brethren to help him. Will not each pastor in the State ask their churches to help Bro. Mitchell just a little, say one dollar each?

Please do not neglect this matter, brethren. Send all contributions to Brother A. Nowell, Rosemead, Bertie county, N. C.

The Recorder
—IS AN—
Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty-eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

The Love of God.

Like a cradle rocking, rocking,
Silent, peaceful, to and fro,
Like a mother's sweet looks dropping
On the little face below—
Hangs the green earth, swinging, turning,
Jarless, noiseless, safe and slow;
Falls the light of God's face bending
Down and watching us below.

And as feeble babes that suffer,
Toss and cry, and will not rest,
Are the ones the tender mother
Holds the closest, loves the best—
So when we are weak and wretched,
By our sins weighed down, distressed,
Then it is that God's great patience
Holds us closest, loves us best.

Faulty Memory.

A retentive memory is certainly a valuable possession for any one to have, and the parents of a bright fifteen year old Boston boy are, naturally enough, pleased and proud to find that he possesses mnemonic faculties of a remarkable order.

It seems as easy for him to learn a long poem as it is for his younger sister to commit to memory one short verse. His lessons are quickly learned. His examination papers are models for his class.

The family delight to test Ned's powers in this direction by asking him to memorize numbers and signs as he passes along the street, and his success is really surprising. Consequently his father and mother looked at the boy's grandfather in mingled amazement and dismay when the old gentleman remarked one day that Elsie had a much better memory than her brother Ned, the family prodigy.

"Why, Father Morse!" exclaimed his astonished daughter-in-law. "What in the world do you mean? Elsie has a dreadful time in her examinations in everything but arithmetic. It seems as if she couldn't possibly fix a date in history, or an outline map, or a rule in grammar in her mind so that it will remain there five minutes. But Ned—why, he remembers everything!"

"No, he doesn't," remarked Mr. Morse, senior, dryly. "There's quite a number of things he's always forgetting."

"What, for instance?" inquired the proud mother anxiously.

"Well," said the old gentleman, "those children have been with us by the month at a time in the summer, as you know, and they've had a pretty fair chance to learn the ways of the house. But if you'll believe me that boy of yours is just as likely to come down stairs in the morning and plant himself in my arm-chair, that's been my seat for forty years and more, as he is to sit anywhere else! And I've seen Elsie rout him out of it again and again, and he looks just as much surprised every time as if it had never occurred before!"

"Why but that's only thoughtlessness," said Mrs. Morse, somewhat disconcerted.

"I call it a lack of memory," rejoined the old gentleman, testily. "It's all very well for Ned to be able to get ahead of all the other scholars, and keep enough figures and dates in his head to drive anybody crazy; but there's another part of his memorizing faculty that need's cultivating—and needs it badly."

Trivial as one may think the old gentleman's instance, the principle which underlies it is one well worth consideration.—Youth's Companion.

The Art of Sweeping.

In sweeping, take long, light strokes, and do not use too heavy a broom.

"Alice," said Lois, "do you honestly think sweeping is harder exercise than playing tennis?"

I hesitated. "I really don't know. One never thinks of hard or easy in tennis, the game is so interesting; and then, it's outdoor exercise, and there's no danger of inhaling dust."

"Well, for my part," said Marjorie, "I like doing work that tells. There is so much satisfaction in seeing the figures in the carpet come out brightly under my broom! Alice, what did you do to make your reception room so perfectly splendiferous? Girls, look here! You'd think this carpet had just come out of the warehouse."

"Mother often tells Aunt Hetty," said I, "to dip the end of the broom in a pail of water, in which she poured a little ammonia—a teaspoonful to a gallon. The ammonia takes off the dust, and refreshes the colors wonderfully. We couldn't keep house without it," I finished rather proudly.

"Did you bring some from home?" asked Marjorie, looking hurt.

"Why, of course not! I asked your mother, and she gave me a bottle, and told me to take what I wanted."

"A little coarse salt or some damp tea leaves strewed over the carpet before sweeping, adds ease to the cleansing process," said Mrs. Downing, appearing on the scene and praising us for our thoroughness. "The reason is that both the salt and the tea leaves, being moist, keep down the light floating dust, which gives more trouble than the heavy dirt. But now you will all be better for a short rest; so come into my little snuggery and have a gossip and a lunch, and then you may attack the enemy again."

A Young Lady's Rules.

The following rules of conduct fell out of the pocket-book of a young lady and an unscrupulous newspaper reporter picked them up, says the Paducah Standard.

1. I don't let a man smoke when he walks or drives with me. If he knows no better than to do it, I promptly tell him what I think of it.

2. I don't give my photograph to men. I used to, occasionally, but I am wiser now. I should hate, by and by, to know that my face might be hanging up in Tom, Dick or Harry's room.

3. I don't let a man take my arm when he walks with me. If he does, I tell him I perfer him to give me his arm.

4. I don't go out with a man friend just because he asks me. I like it better if he asks another lady to go too—his sister, for instance.

5. I don't let any man "see me home" from church. If he hasn't gumption enough to take me there and sit through the services with me, he may stay away altogether.

6. I don't let a man friend give me presents unless it is something of a trifling cost, like fruit or flowers. And I always gauge a man by his taste in this respect.

7. I don't encourage any young man who is not perfectly polite and agreeable to my mother. Whoever calls upon me sees a great deal of her.

8. I don't allow a caller to stay later than ten o'clock. If he does not go at that time, I politely tell him my custom.

Courtship and Marriage.

With an honorable girl, with an honorable man, an engagement carries with it something more than a few sunny months of courtship. After courtship comes marriage. After marriage comes the home. To describe the reasons which to some young people seem sufficient to justify them first in "flirting" and then in getting "engaged," would answer no good purpose. But, putting aside the indirect manner in which writers address their readers, let me speak frankly to you as a friend to a friend. Let me ask you to consider what you are to have in your future husband, in your future wife, to make it even tolerable to spend twenty, or thirty, or forty, years together. I will not insist on the elements which are necessary to the romantic perfection of married life, for most of us are commonplace people and a life of romance is beyond our reach. There are some very commonplace things which you ought to make sure of.

Good sound health is one thing. There are twenty grave reasons for insisting on it. Next to this I should put perfect truthfulness. The man who will lie to other people will lie to his wife; the girl who will lie to other people will lie to her husband. Next to truthfulness, temperance, industry and courage. Then fortitude, that is, the power to bear pain and trouble without whining. Then unselfishness, for the selfish man, the selfish girl, though drawn out of selfishness in the early weeks of courtship, will settle back into it again when the wear and worry of life come on.

I said just now that most of us are commonplace people, and that a life of romance is out of our reach; but I believe in "falling in love." The imagination should be kindled, and the heart touched. There should be enthusiasm and even romance in the happy months that precede marriage, and something of the romance to the very end of life, or else the home is wanting in its perfect happiness and grace. The wonderful charm which makes the wife more to the husband than all other women, and the husband more to the wife than all other men—this is necessary to a happy marriage. But take my word for it, those plain, solid virtues of which I have spoken are indispensable to the security and happiness of a home, and it is a home you are drifting to when you are drifting into love.—R. W. Dale.

Visiting Days.

There are some city customs that might with great advantage be used by residents in the country. Among these is that of notifying one's friends when one will be at home to visitors. Not infrequently the rural-house mother has an avalanche of company, not only when she least expects it, but when she is least prepared for it. Is the last loaf of bread on the point of vanishing, the last pie or cake gone, is one's house in disorder? that is the chosen time for unexpected company to put in an appearance.

Or has one set apart a day for a certain purpose—to write an article for the papers, to paint a picture, to do something that requires uninterrupted attention—company is almost sure to come, and the precious time goes, pleasantly, perhaps, and not unprofitably, but the task appointed is undone, and another day must be found for it.

There may be certain people so commodiously situated that they are always ready for company, but certainly, to the majority of housekeepers, an announcement beforehand that their friends are coming is very agreeable, and saves annoyance and trouble.

In the city, when a lady calls on her friend, she is relieved of all apprehension that her visit will be unwelcome or will subject her hostess to inconvenience, for she knows visitors are expected; and the hostess on her day at home is glad to see her friends, not in speech alone, but in her heart, for she is prepared to give them welcome.—Ex.

Making Manure.

The crops of the past year are about matured and the farmer now has but little more than the housing on his hands. After the labor to produce them has been expended, we cannot afford to be remiss in caring for their final storage and marketing. This done the next step is to make arrangements for the coming year.

The first thing to look after, in my judgment, is the proper means of fertilization and the recovery of the land. This, of course, includes such provision as will protect the soil from waste and washing and leaching by the winters rains, and, again, such application of renewing forces as will return the elements exhausted and give such additional vital forces as we may be able to supply.

Fall is about the only season that the southern farmer can have to accumulate manures. Every available day should be used for the accumulation of manurial matter. One reason why the heavier manures are rejected by our people will be found in their objectionable bulk and weight. This can be overcome, to great advantage, in the use of a manure cart or spreader. A good machine of this kind will pay for itself in one season.

With such an arrangement for handling, reducing so greatly the cost, rich earth mixed with vegetable matter and lime will make a good compost that will more than pay for the handling.

We have not learned to put the proper estimate upon vegetable matter for manure. When we learn that such matter contains in itself the elements that went to make its development and growth, we have only then to understand that the way to make them avail for another plant is to make them pass through a method of disintegration and proposed in the compost suggested above.

It is of course to be remembered that the value of such heaps can be greatly enhanced by the addition of richer materials as are found in barnyard manures. It is really true that almost enough manure and fertilized matter is lost about our farms to grow an average crop. Begin at once to gather manure for the next crop.—Southern Cultivator.

For Little Ones.

Our Little Ones is one of the children's papers published by the American Baptist Publication Society. It is bright and beautiful and attractive—just the paper to place in the hands of our children. It shows careful preparation. Its pictures and poems and stories and Sunday lessons are among the very choicest. We plead for our little ones that parents and Sunday schools place Our Little Ones in their hands.

Relations of the State to Higher Education in Colleges.

The following paragraphs are from a paper read before the Southern Educational Association in July, 1891. The views expressed by the writer, Prof. Edward S. Joynes, are the more valuable because he is recognized as one of the foremost of Southern educators, and because he is himself a professor in a State institution. He, at any rate, cannot be suspected of taking a partial view of the very important subject which he discusses. Speaking of "Denominational Colleges", he says:

"Their existence may be accepted as one of the necessary and permanent factors of our social organization. Hence we contend that the State in its provision for higher education, should take account of these colleges as proper auxiliary to its own work, and should not seek to come—should rather aim not to come—into injurious competition with them. Though these colleges are not under State control, they do in fact form part of a general system of education of which the State gets the benefit, and without which its resources would be overtaxed. Hence the State should recognize their position and foster their work. As their resources, resting in each case upon only a section of the community, must usually be limited, it should be the aim of the State, taxing the whole people, including those who contribute to such colleges, rather to add what these cannot supply than merely to repeat the work already done by them. That the denominational colleges and the State college or university may and would adjust themselves as harmonious and mutually supporting parts of a common system, each profiting by the work of each. On the other hand, a State college, which merely seeks to duplicate the work of the former, can never have the whole-hearted support of all the people. On one pretext or another, it will forever suffer from political or religious antagonism; exciting the jealousy of every sect, it will find cordial support from none; and, too often, will itself become the prey of denominational conflict, without the allegiance of any church. Does not the history of Southern education present examples of such disaster, sometimes realized, more often—and still worse, if possible—constantly threatened?

"It seems, therefore, that the proper domain of the State in higher education, under the conditions prevailing in most of our Southern States, should be to supplement and extend the work of the local or denominational colleges. And this extension should be in two directions: First, by offering larger and more varied courses of study, corresponding to the larger resources of the State. Here is competition, it is true, but it is competition which is not invidious, and which simply offers to all alike larger privileges and opportunities, without interference with narrower fields of work. Second, and especially, by enforcing higher standards of admission and graduation, for the sake, not only of other colleges, but also of the schools of the State. Thus the State college would occupy a larger and a higher sphere, and so it would find its natural and proper position in relation to other colleges—not competitive, but supplementary—and they would become not its rivals, but its adjuncts. Their best graduates would seek the State college for larger and higher fields of study; their alumni would become its alumni also; they would rejoice in its highest development, as it would profit by their utmost efficiency; and so all would become mutually helpful and sustaining, instead of mutually jealous and destructive. It is only thus that, without the power of direct legislation, the State can secure the co-operation and mutual adjustment of all her educational energies into a complete and harmonious system, or that, short of munificent private endowments, any hope can be found for the highest educational development in the South. That high standards do not, in the long run, repel students or weaken the usefulness of a college, may be shown by conspicuous examples in the South and elsewhere. With its naturally large influence, a State college must be a most important factor, either to lift up or to keep down the standards of education throughout a State. I fear that all of our State colleges have not always been found on the right side of this question.

"There is another respect also in which some of our Southern States have attempted a short-sighted and injurious policy, that is, in the offer of free tuition in the State colleges. This is not defensible in principle or in policy. The expenses of college education are so great, and the individuals enjoying it are so highly favored, that under no principle of equity or of public policy should such privileges be accorded without personal contribution. It is true that no fees of tuition can fully meet the cost of collegiate education; but only the more, for this reason, should individuals enjoying such costly privileges be made to bear a part of the expense of instruction. The wholesale remission of tuition fees is a form of State charity that has no defence and is most widely abused—its chief result being to underbid other institutions and, under low standards to tempt into college a great body of young men, many of whom would be better off elsewhere. It may be safely assumed that any young man worthy of a college education can either earn the means to secure it, or will have gained friends who will secure it for him. If not, he will have the manliness to undertake obligations which shall guarantee the necessary indebtedness to the college in money or in service to the State. The policy of free tuition, if general, is on principle indefensible. If adopted under conditions, it is wholly unreliable; no safeguards can be provided which will not be evaded, a premium is put on prevarication; and, too often, tuition is purchased at the sacrifice of self respect or the respect of fellow-students. The most that is here desirable, is, that there should be provided a fund under the control of the Faculty for the aid of students of approved merit, and scholarships for special excellence. But to apply the principle of free tuition in State colleges so as to underbid private or denominational institutions, or simply to cheapen the expense of a college course, is wrong in principle and injurious in practice. Nothing is more calculated to embitter opposition, and to lower not only the standards of scholarship, but the whole tone of student-life in our State colleges. True merit can be discovered and aided without such wholesale violation alike of sound principle and of sound policy."

Prof. Joynes' views are certainly worthy of consideration, if not of adoption, in every State in the Union.

A FRIEND OF EDUCATION.

Short and Long Pastorates.

SHOULD PASTORS HASTILY RESIGN BECAUSE OF A MINORITY OPPOSITION?

It must be manifest to the readers of our religious journals that there is a prevalence of short pastorates. Every paper that reaches our homes, and every breeze that blows, bears sad tidings of resignations and pastoral changes. The number and the prominence, both of churches and pastors suffering from frequent changes, is appalling indeed. They indicate that we are approaching a state of things which will greatly militate against the growth of ministers, and the spirituality and the material prosperity of the churches. To thoughtful and devout christians this aspect of things is cause for great alarm. It seems there should be such a general awakening as shall lead us to inquire into the cause, the evil and the remedy for short pastorates.

Now, as to the cause, or causes of these frequent changes. Truth compels me to declare that the cause of these changes is not infrequently with the pastors themselves. They have not a sufficiently exalted view of the sacredness of the pastoral relationship and of the permanency that should characterize it. They regard each pastorate as the stepping stone to something better, and they work with an eye on some more prominent and conspicuous field. Hence they do not give to the place which they occupy the best of heart, mind and strength of which they are capable. They show ambitions that are not lawful, egotisms that are offensive, criticisms that are not promotive of peace, and a laziness that is unpardonable in a christian minister. So soon as discouragements in a hard field cross their path and they find they cannot have everything their own way, they develop a carelessness and indifference that becomes manifest to their best supporters. Or, if a little unusual success attends their work, in contrast to the seeming failure of their predecessor, they take undue credit to themselves, and fancy they could fill any place in the gift of the churches and that they are not duly appreciated. And so a spirit of restlessness and morbid ambition for change begins to sway them. As another has said, "It is a sad misfortune that such men do not see that a big toad in a little puddle is far more sightly than a little toad in a big puddle." If such brethren would open their eyes wide and get a healthy view of themselves they would abide more contented and useful in the field to which God's providence has assigned them, and endeavor to work out the best results for him where they are. This portraiture is not overdrawn. We can all think of some men whom it faithfully describes, and we do not wonder that such men cannot tarry long with a church that is worthy of a faithful minister of Jesus Christ. But, while we think of this as applicable to some others, let us be critically honest concerning our own heart and life, and see if the man described herein does not live in intimate and daily association with ourselves.

I think it can be fairly asserted that the causes of these short pastorates do not lie mainly with the pastor. They as a rule are not the culpable party. In a wide observation during twenty years with hundreds of churches and pastors, I can truly say, that, usually, it is not the pastors who desire or are the cause of these frequent changes. From whence then come the influences that disrupt the pastorate? Truth and sincerity impel me to say that the source of these disturbances that break up pastorates is a disobedient, captious and factious minority. They infest nearly all our churches. They dominate the faithful and defeat the success and prevent the continuance of the pastorate. Any one who takes the pains to go into an extended investigation will be thoroughly convinced that it is rarely a majority who desire change in the pastorate. This disobedient minority demand it; and though the majority outnumber them ten, or fifty to one, they yield for peace sake and suffer a good and faithful pastor to be driven off. This is to-day one of the great crimes of the churches. They harbor, condone and retain in their midst "a clique of gaunt gourmands and grieved delinquents who organize around ambitions and enmities to unsettle the pastor and hinder the church." It does not matter that the pastor is faithful, that he is consecrated, that he is loving, that he is patient, that he is considerate, that he is eloquent, studious, learned and commands the respect of the community. It does not matter that he has built up the congregation and increased the membership. This faction have determined that he shall go if they can bring it about. They have determined to take off his pastoral head, and so with pious tone and in the name of religion and in the interest of the church, they begin and prosecute the work of decapitation. They undermine, back bite, slander and obstruct the pastor till by and by in disheartenment he hands in his resignation.

Thus after we have analyzed all other causes we must come back to this and say that a disobedient and factious minority is the chief cause of short pastorates. Indeed, one of the most hopeless and discouraging things connected with church life is the widespread extent with which the churches are afflicted by this minority disease. The church in which there can be found no minority, opposing, undermining and working against the pastor's influence, is one in many. It seems useless for the average pastor to leave one church because of such minority with any hope of being delivered from it in the next church to which he shall go. He will almost certainly, sooner or later, discover a similar state of things in his next charge. The unwisdom, the wrong, the guilt and the wickedness of this thing cannot be too severely condemned, and we must believe that the divine Lord will hold the churches accountable for the mischief they are permitting to be wrought out by this process.

As another has said: "Look at the diluted, discouraged, and impoverished ministry that comes from this process. Look at the distracted, weak and hindered churches; look at the divided christian households; look at the world of non-christians who distrust the honesty and the sincerity of those who profess to be guided by the Holy Spirit in their conduct." One does not wonder that they, not having a personal experience of saving grace, should lose faith in the churches. And, more than this, not a few of God's loving and faithful and gifted ministers have by reason of the suffering they have experienced at the hands of the churches been taken from the ministry in hopeless despair. Some have been driven to the insane asylum, and some have died of broken hearts.

Does the resignation and retirement of the pastor heal this disease and pronounce harmony and prosperity in the church? Manifestly not. In nine cases out of ten, verily not. It is almost the unanimous experience of the majority in a church that, when for peace sake, they have allowed the factious minority to drive out the faithful pastor, the peace purchased thereby is only temporary. Only a symptom of the disease has been reached by the pastor's resignation, while the disease itself has deepened in violence and multiplied symptoms. The hasty resignation of the pastor because of the factious minority and the consent of the church thereto is not the way to remedy the difficulty, and is not the way God would have it be, and for manifest reasons.

First, the settlement of a pastor, over a Baptist church at least, has always been regarded as an event that has been consummated in answer to prayer. Our churches believe, and our ministers believe, in divine providence in the case; hence the chief Shepherd was consulted and it was expected that he would direct in the settlement of the under-shepherd. Yet, judging from the history of some pastoral settlements and unsettlements it seems as though Cecil was right when he said, "The christian often thinks, and schemes and talks like a practical atheist." If there has been this attitude of reliance on divine providence, how dare the church, after she has asked God in faith to send a man after his own heart—how dare she go to work and size him up after her own heart? Upon what principle has she a right to sum up his points, add up his graces, and substract his blemishes, instead of trying to supplement by extra prayer and co-operation and love his weak points, and thus enable him to succeed with God's work? They begin to decide that God made a mistake, and they assume that now they understand the situation better than he who created it, and therefore without really and seriously consulting God they determine that a change is necessary, and they let the minority hastily bring it about.

It is my earnest conviction, and one that is confirmed with each year's observation, that, in nine cases out of ten, neither the church nor the pastor has any right to allow a factious minority to dissolve the relationship that was begun and consummated in prayer, and that had the approval of God upon it. But it will be asked, "Has the minority no rights in such matters?" I answer yes; they have the right to retire and leave the church in peace to work out the will of God with the church and pastor, or they have a right to acquiesce in God's plan for themselves and for the church, and to abide in peace. But there is a minority which the church and pastor alike are bound to respect, and are bound to listen to concerning the severance of the pastoral relation, namely: the spiritual, praying, co-operating, faithful, prayer meeting attending minority. In every church there is this minority. If they come to feel the conviction that God will be honored, and his cause promoted in the pastoral relations—pastor and church had better listen to them.

Now and then, as we see that, both on account of the divine providence in the case, and because of the fact that hasty changes on account of the factious minority do not promote the welfare and peace of the church, what is the remedy? I answer:

First, both church and pastor should cultivate a deeper insight into, and a better understanding of, the pastoral relation. The design for their union should be more clearly comprehended. It should be well understood that it is not merely to attract a congregation, but to teach the word, to win souls to Christ, to build them up in Christ's own character and lead them into his service. There must be real acceptance on the part of the church of the fact that God's ministers are earthen vessels, and that God has never had any perfect men to do his work. Hence, instead of dismissing the pastor on account of defects in his personality, they should by loving efforts seek to improve him.

Second, the church should look well after the disobedient and factious minority and take position solidly against them and their doings. It will be found that the very heart of their opposition is in the spirit of disobedience to pastoral and church authority. They seem to think that when the church has decided upon a thing, or the pastor has set in operation his plans for the welfare of they church, they are at liberty to kick, to thwart, to complain, to criticise at pleasure and obstruct. A firm, loving, courageous and prompt dealing with such would often dissipate the minority entirely, or would so disarm them, and so alarm them that they would be brought to respectful obedience. An illustration of this in point: A church recently called a pastor. There was one family which very decidedly opposed the call. They said, If you call him we will leave the church. But the spiritual, working people of the church believed God approved the call, so they extended it, and by an almost unanimous vote. They sought to make the vote unanimous, but this family refused to acquiesce in the decision of the church. This church solidly, lovingly and promptly said, "Very well, we shall count you out." This discipline was healthy. It brought this family to serious thought and to reconciliation. However, instead of this it is common for churches to allow a factious minority to do their dirty work unmolested. It is commonly the same that the deacons and pastor, and some influential members know that such faction is working harm to the welfare of the church and pastor. But they are all so lacking in gift and grace that for the sake of a false peace they left this minority to work unhindered. The time has come for the church to insist that a pastor shall do his duty as a christian and as a minister to a minority opposition. And when he has so done, if they fail to accept his loving service in obedience to the law of God, they should speak in terms to that factious minority that they cannot fail to understand. This, and not hasty resignations, seems to me to be the only remedy for the destruction of these minorities that infest our churches with their blighting influence.

May God give our churches and pastors wisdom to see this truth, and grit and grace to put it into execution.—Rev. A. W. Lamar, in Baptist Courier.

Ante-Convention Thoughts and Suggestions.

Dear Recorder:—It is only a few weeks before the Convention, and that body is to hear the report of the Board of Ministerial Education and offer any suggestions thereto. And as the time allotted to this report is always brief and all remarks thereon, and suggestions thereto, are by necessity hurriedly made and passed over, therefore I hope I may be pardoned for offering a few thoughts along this line for the brethren to be thinking on before the Convention assembles.

Now if I understand the operations of the Board, it takes a beneficiary, defrays his expenses at College, and after educating him, turns him loose without any further obligation resting either upon the student or the Board.

Now as to the class of students accepted, I am fully persuaded that the Board, under the supervision of Bro. Gwaltney, is competent and efficient, and if there is ever a mistake made, I am satisfied that it is an error of the head and not of the heart.

This work is done admirably, but does it go far enough? It is true, it is as far as the Convention has authorized them to go, and hence my suggestion—should not the Convention go a step further? viz., authorize the Board to bind them under obligation to let their services be subject to the State Mission Board for a number of years equal to that of which they were beneficiaries at the College. In other words, if they are beneficiaries two years, when they leave College, let the State Mission Board take charge of them and send them for two years to the destitute fields in the State now under the supervision of this Board.

Perhaps some one will say that this is making the student pay for his education; but whom is he paying? Is he not working in the destitute fields for the Master? Does the Board realize anything therefrom? Of course the Board will pay them a reasonable salary during these years.

Where then, I am asked, is the advantage if they must be paid a salary? There is a decided advantage, for this student can live upon a much smaller salary than a man can with a large family. These fields need strong and efficient men, and it borders upon folly to send any other than strong men to meet the erroneous isms prevalent; and yet these weak churches aided by the Mission Board cannot pay strong salaries—hence the well equipped beneficiary direct from College ought to be equal to the emergency, keep the good work going on, and at the same time live on much smaller salary and "within his income."

Pardon a personal illustration, which will bring the question directly to an issue. In the eastern portion of the Tar River Association there are four or five fields thus situated, either of which can support a young man (and his wife if necessary), but the present occupants of those fields, after practicing economy even bordering on penury, cannot meet their obligations and live within their income.

For the action of the State Board in withdrawing their former aid and leaving them entirely dependent upon weak churches with Associational aid, has about forced some of them to leave the field, while others have been forced to draw from their private funds to meet expenses, or leave, too.

Now think not that this is attributable to a penurious membership of the churches, no, for few churches in the State have contributed more per capita, to their means than these churches, and few sections have made greater progress, and in fewer still can a more consecrated membership be found.

Now send these beneficiaries to these fields, and avoid the sacrifice of large families. While nothing should be lost in the efficiency of the work but much gained financially. Do I hear some ambitious student say that might take me down there on a $500 salary, when I could command a $1000 salary. To such, should there be one, let me say if salary and not the love of souls is the only motive in answering your call, perhaps it might be well for you to tarry in this Jerusalem until properly endued or the "ruling motive" be brought into subjection.

And has such a brother or his friends ever thought that it was the contributions from these weak churches, often made a great sacrifice, that has helped to enable them to command this $1000 salary? Then should not a sense of gratitude prompt a recompense, for this friendship rendered in an hour of adversity when by recompensing he can still be working for the Master? This would encourage liberality in the church towards ministerial education: and would also act as a check upon any hypocrite who might be tempted to enter the ministry for securing an education. For until the establishment of this Board the Baptist ministry offered no inducement for any one to enter it, save the inducements in the call of the Master.

The Convention does not guarantee a field and living, like the Conference, or a supplement to the small salary like the Presbytery, and now the only inducement is an education, but if the hypocrite or impostor knew that he would be subject to the State Board of Missions in these destitute fields for as long a time as he was in procuring his education, it would act as a check and safeguard to the Baptist ministry, a thing by no means to be despised.

But some one may say it might keep some one out: if their call is that feeble, I for one say let them stay out, for the good of the Master's cause, until properly called; than they will submissively answer.

Brethren, think over this matter, and if there are objections, let's have them, turn on all the light, and if these suggestions will not bear the light of investigation and thorough ventilation, I, too, desire to [illegible] them. But until I am convinced by [illegible] and argument drawn from the Scripture, I must think that [illegible] spiritual food for reflection [illegible] C. D. [illegible] If not brethren, [illegible] in these columns and save [illegible] the Convention. Fraternally,

THE SOCIETY PLAN.

The passion for the organization of all kinds of "societies" has become so marked, and new societies are organized so rapidly for such a variety of purposes, that the movement almost amounts to a craze. This disposition is not only marked among people of the world, but is also quite noticeable among church members. So far as our churches and those of other denominations are concerned, it might be well to enquire into the cause, or causes, of this state of things. We believe that a certain amount of denominational machinery is necessary. Our fathers long since learned that such organizations as associations, State and general conventions were quite useful in unifying our people, and in giving shape and direction to their work. These associations and conventions long since learned that committees, boards, &c., were useful in systematizing and pushing their work, and hence, such naturally sprang into existence. Baptist polity, however, does not admit of any great multiplication of agencies and societies, especially such societies as claim to be better adapted to do church work than the local church itself.

The passion to organize societies is especially noticeable among the young people of the different denominations of the day. This tendency among the young people of our own churches needs watching, and if there are any causes why this tendency is now marked among us, that can be removed, it would be well to look into them and set them aside, if they are of such a nature as to impede rather than promote the success of our churches. Pastors and the leading members of our churches should study their Sunday schools, prayer meetings, and other regular church work to find if possible why many of the young do not enjoy them, and why they take hold of such so reluctantly. Some of our Sunday-schools, prayer-meetings, etc., are, we fear, rather dull, prosaic affairs, because those who run them do not study how to make them reasonably fresh and attractive, especially to the younger members of our churches. But even this idea can be carried too far. It does not speak well for the spirituality of even young church members that the pastor, deacons, Sunday school superintendents and leaders of prayer-meetings should be on an everlasting strain to find something fresh and entertaining to draw our older or younger members to church.

We believe that if the Lord's work, the services of the sanctuary, and other ordinary means of christian grace and growth, have not sufficient drawing power to retain our hold upon our younger members especially, that it does not speak well for the training they have received, and may be indicative of the fact that a genuine work of grace has not been wrought in their hearts and consciences. We assert what we believe to be a truth, that a church prayer meeting, for instance, that might appear quite dull, and even stupid, to a worldly-minded person, is often exceedingly comforting and strengthening to all regenerated people who participate in it. The secret of this state of things, as applied not only to the prayer-meeting but to other religious work and service, is found in Paul's words, (1 Cor. 2: 14), "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

We are not opposed to the organization of all societies, especially if they are denominational in their nature and directly under the control of the churches. Now and then it may be wise to organize one rather distinctly adapted to our young people, but care is needed here. These large union organizations, composed of the younger members of different churches, are of questionable wisdom and expediency. The position is now taken by some of our well-informed pastors that we must organize our young people into societies of our own, or else our Pedobaptist friends will organize them for us, or at least draw them into societies of their own. There may be some force in this reasoning, and the tendency to drift into organizations or societies not distinctly [illegible] needs that watching that its importance demands. Still we claim that it [illegible] speak well for one's stability as a [illegible] or his attachment to the faith and [illegible] of his fathers, if pastors and churches [illegible] the necessity of continually cod[illegible] and encouraging him to keep [illegible] drifting to organizations in which the "society" almost takes the place of the church.

So far as other denominations are concerned, there is, we think, one evident and very strong reason why their young people are so fond of societies, which they claim meet wants that their churches do not supply. It is a well-known fact that children are gathered in large numbers into some Pedobaptist churches; that they are encouraged to "join the church" before they are converted, and often with quite dim ideas of what a change of heart means. We are somewhat fearful that even Baptist churches are not as careful as they should be in this particular thing. The result of this system is that hundreds and thousands are inducted into the churches, especially those that practice infant baptism and believe in juvenile piety, who have, we fear, experienced no change of heart at the time they joined the church or afterward. When these grow older, and become ashamed that they do so little for their churches, they are anxious to join some society that affords them more amusement, entertainment, variety, &c., than the dull prosaic church meetings, prayer meetings, and other regular work of the church. Not being spiritually-minded themselves, it is rather a matter of impossibility for them to enjoy such meetings of the church, and perfectly natural for them to join and prefer the society, at the meetings of which light hearted conversation, social culture, games, music, suppers, &c., form quite prominent features.

At such gatherings the devotional feature is often at a minimum, a "word of prayer" is called for which is often, we fear, rather stereotyped and heartless. Singing may be an important feature, but is it Bible singing, with the spirit and the understanding? If others persist in getting large numbers of unconverted young people into their churches, and have to resort to the society plan to entertain or interest them, does it follow that we are compelled to adopt the same policy? Let us use proper care in receiving them, and then rely more upon the church, God's institution for training and developing them into useful and active workers among the saved and the unsaved.

DEATH OF STATE TREASURER BAIN.

State Treasurer Donald W. Bain died at his residence in this city at half past five o'clock on the evening of November 16th.

His death resulted from heart disease, and other complications, which had prevented him from being in his office for the past four months.

Mr. Bain was born in this city in 1841, and was educated at the academy here, from which he left to accept a clerkship in the Treasurer's office in 1857. He continued in the office of Treasurer under several administrations, and in 1884 he was elected to the office he had so thoroughly familiarized himself with as clerk.

As a State officer he has been faithful and untiring in his labors. His record has been spotless, and the fact that in June last he for a third time received the nomination for Treasurer shows how his labors in the interest of the tax payers of North Carolina have been appreciated.

Mr. Bain was an active member of the Edenton Street Methodist church of this city, and was held in high esteem by his brethren.

His remains were interred in Oakwood cemetery on Friday evening.

He leaves a wife, two sons and a daughter who, with thousands of others throughout the State, mourn his loss.

THE report on obituaries read before the General Association of Virginia showed that an unusual number of useful and distinguished preachers had died during the past year. The same is true in our own State. Quite a number of our best and most efficient preachers have gone to their reward during the year now about to close. Let this remind us that we ought to pray earnestly that the Lord will call other men to stand in the places of those brethren who are gone. Let it also remind us that after the Lord has called these men into the ministry, that it is our high privilege, as well as our duty, to assist in educating and fitting these men for the great responsibilities which await them in their life's work.

THURSDAY, the 24th, is the day set apart by the Chief Executive of the Nation for rest and thanksgiving. Let us all realize that we have an abundance for which to be thankful, and laying aside work and business, let us render thanks to the Giver of all good, and remember especially the poor, the widow, and the orphan.

WE have waited a long time for the subscription of some of our readers. It is now time for them to pay. Send it to us by mail, or by your delegate to the Convention.

THE GENERAL ASSOCIATION OF VIRGINIA.

I am very glad to have had an opportunity to see the Virginia brethren in their annual meeting. Glad for the pleasure it afforded me personally; glad too if perchance I saw in the proceedings of the Association a progress and improvement not attained in our own Convention.

To me the Association was a continual feast from the day I reached Danville until I left on the morning of the close.

Brother Thames, the pastor, could have done no better than he did in sending me to the elegant home of Bro. C. G. Holland. From door step to garret it looks for all the world like some eastern mansion. If it had been after the fourth of March, 1893, I should have had some suspicion that I had been "sent abroad," especially too when I found that I was to be associated with the venerable Dr. Cocke, President of Hollins Institute, whose genial presence and striking words of wisdom were a continual cause of joy and an inspiration to us all. He not only opened the store house of his knowledge and gave us the advantage of his forty-six years of experience as an educator of girls in Virginia, and of his early and continuous efforts to promote the Baptist cause in his State, but even during the still hours of the night he made music continuously. True, I have heard noises more joyful and strains more inspiring, but for its awakening power I have seldom heard it equaled and never excelled. Just over on the other side of the room from where I slept, or rather where I was entitled to sleep, was the sweet spirited Dr. J. B. Taylor, who has thoroughly learned to be patient, even amid suffering. He possesses a deep and abiding interest in the good "Old North State," where he spent some of the best years of his life, and where he is now much loved by the brethren with whom he lived and labored so acceptably. It would be difficult to be with such a model of a christian gentleman even for a few days without feeling stronger and thinking more of the world we live in.

Bro. Holland's delegation was completed by the admission of Dr. Felix, the bishop from Lynchburg, Va. He is a little short on length for a Kentuckian, yet his elegant figure, and his honest face, always overflowing with good humor, never fail to incite the hope that you may meet him at the next General Association. How glad we would be to welcome these brethren to our Convention which meets December 8th.

Sister Holland's dining room was just as complete as any other apartment on the premises, and I am certain was as highly appreciated. There is, however, a little incident connected with this part of my sojourn with the family and the brethren which I relate not so much because I was a party to the affair, but with the hope at least that it may be worth something to my brethren hereafter. The custom at Bro. Holland's table is for every one to recite a verse of Scripture of his own selection. This custom was as new to me as it is beautiful and appropriate. Still, I thought I would have no trouble even on short notice, and about the time I began to remember with gratitude that long years ago my mother taught me the twenty-third Psalm, my left hand neighbor with due reverence and appropriate emphasis repeated, "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want." So far as I was concerned I felt a void that for the life of me I could not supply. Pages of the Old and New Testament flashed into my mind, yet not a single verse could I repeat. I could have said, "Jesus wept," but rather than do this I stubbornly and persistently opened not my mouth. You brethren who read this, put yourselves to the test, and see how many verses of Scripture, without any previous notice, you can repeat, literally correct. I was somewhat encouraged when I detected one of our oldest and most learned brethren repeating the same text from time to time. And others I noticed refreshing their memories before breakfast by referring to their Testaments. I went and did likewise, and afterwards I had no trouble.

The personnel of the Association was very good, but the absence of pastors from the "rural districts" was much more striking than is seen in our own Convention.

The annual sermon preached by Dr. E. C. Dargan was very fine. Some of the brethren said the effort was equal to Dr. Broadus even at his best. In saying this, however, these brethren were careful to speak it very low.

The Orphanage was discussed by Drs. Landrum and Battle. Their speeches were well and elaborately prepared, and left no doubt that these brethren are finished speakers. Dr. A. E. Owen followed in a short but very direct and stirring appeal which at once found its way to the hearts of the vast audience to which he spoke. When a collection is to be taken the eyes of a Virginian audience are at once turned to one and the same man. A large number of our North Carolina brethren know to whom I allude even before I call his name. At Old Fort, at the foot of the Blue Ridge, there stands an engine the sole business of which is to help other engines climb to the top of the mountain. This over, it comes back to the foot of the mountain and waits to be called into service when needed. Dr. W. E. Hatcher seemed to me to serve the Virginia Association in some such way. Eleven hundred dollars was the result of one of the finest efforts I ever saw on the part of any body in taking a collection. An amount which was not at all equal to the tact and enthusiasm of Dr. Hatcher, nor to the needs of the cause, he presented. After what was said by the speakers, and the needs of the Orphanage put clearly to the people, I expected to see the collection amount to twice what it did.

Rev. W. L. Wright made one of the best speeches I heard in the Association when he spoke on ministerial education. Dr. Cocke has for years championed this interest, and on this occasion spoke with much feeling and interest.

On reviewing my notes, I see that Dr. Wharton of Norfolk, Va., preached the annual sermon and that Dr. Dargan preached by appointment in the First Baptist church on Sunday morning.

I shall remember with real pleasure the meeting I had with our Virginia brethren. I found quite a number of brethren who read the BIBLICAL RECORDER and a larger number still who asked after the well being of Dr. Bailey its editor.

I am indebted to Dr. Hatcher especially whose kind offices made me many friends, and added much to the pleasure of my visit to Virginia. J. C. C.

....Rev. W. L. Wright, pastor of Leigh Street Baptist church, Richmond, Va., who has been attending the Virginia Baptist Convention at Danville, spent last night and to day in town with friends. He was looking well, and it is needless to say that he did a lot of old-fashioned handshaking. We hope Mr. Wright will find time to pay Reidsville a long visit soon.—Webster's Weekly.

....The BIBLICAL RECORDER will be just enough, we trust, to do Rev. F. M. Jordan the credit for using several qualifying statements relative to praying to God to kill the whiskey dealers. The fault might have been with us, and if so we now rise to make correction. Bro. Jordan is a man of strong convictions and often uses strong language, but he has a warm heart, and generally knows what he is talking about.—Asheville Baptist.

....Miss Amanda Cheek, a good Baptist sister in the First church at Durham, has cut out during the present year with her own hands more than three hundred slat bonnets to be made and sold by the Ladies' Missionary Society. She has contributed, so I was informed (not by her pastor, but by a representative citizen of the town) more to the cause of missions than any other member of her church. It is always certain that her contribution to her pastor and her subscription to her paper is ready when the time comes to pay them.—J. C. C.

....It is my purpose to attend the North Carolina State Convention in the interest of the Centennial Fund. I have long been anxious to know more intimately the brethren who have sent to the foreign field such noble workers. Then my ancestors were from North Carolina, and I am anxious to meet my relatives. Kentucky Baptists have cheered my heart by their christian liberality. They give us unto the Lord. His Spirit has been upon us in all her meetings. The indications now seem to show that Kentucky will give more than her quota of the $250,000. I am sure that the Old North State will acquit herself nobly.—W. D. Powell, Lexington, Ky., Nov. 13.

....The North Carolina Baptist Almanac for 1893 will contain biographical sketches of Col. L. L. Polk, Hon. George W. Thompson, Dr. A. R. Vann, Prof. E. G. Beckwith, Col. R McBrayer, Mrs. Maggie Nutt Herring, and the following well-known ministers who have passed away during the present year, viz: Revs. Joshua J. James, T. Butler Justice, W. J. Wilkie, James Brumfield, Jacob A. Hill, A. W. Price, J. L. Cottingham and A. T. Denny. It will also contain engravings of Wake Forest College and the Agricultural and Mechanical College. It will also contain some very valuable Baptist history copied from the manuscript of Morgan Edwards, and much statistical information, besides lists of all the newly elected State officers, members of the Legislature and Congressmen from North Carolina. Every family ought to have one. See advertisement on seventh page.

....To our usual abundant causes for thanksgiving, growing out of our wealth of crops, our general prosperity, our freedom from disease, the prevalence of intelligence, and of liberty guarded by law, there is added this year yet another. In many nations, a change in government has been attended with violence and peril and often with blood shed; once in our own history such a change was followed by four years of devastating war. Within the past few days in America, the government has passed from one party to another, without, so far as we know, the shedding of a drop of blood, without danger to life or property. Business pursues its tranquil way. Those to whom power has passed will enter without dispute upon office, and those who are defeated will submit to the will of the majority, reserving their right, by argument and appeal, to change a minority into a majority.—National Baptist.

From Mexico.

LETTER OF SISTER CHASTAIN TO THE MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF CHOWAN INSTITUTE.

My Dear Girls:—I have been thinking about you a great deal recently, and, although it is getting late, have decided to write to you to night.

We are now in our new home in Doctor Arroyo, and, as the Mexicans say, "it is at your orders." I shall be glad to welcome all of you here to spend the day with me on your first holiday. When I was a very little girl I used to say, "I do wish I could live in a house with a dirt floor, so that I needn't have to sweep it so often." Well, that wish has been gratified. The floor, roof, and walls of our present dwelling-house are of dirt. We are, for the present, living in one room while the workmen are repairing the rest of the house.

On the corner of the street we live on, opposite the Catholic church, and diagonally opposite the main plaza of the town, is our preaching hall. It joins our house and is ours. The twenty five dollars given by your Society a year ago last April was a part of the purchase money, so it is yours, too. And while I am on this subject, I will say that, if you want more of it to be yours, there is still room for investment. We mean to put in four windows and paint it, outside and inside, and further improve our church, and that will cost some $300. The lot with the building, as it stands, cost us $550 00, and, after it is repaired, it will be worth fully a $1,000. We expect to donate our share in it to the Centennial Fund, making it the property of the Southern Baptist Convention.

We are much pleased with our new home here, because we feel that the Lord is going to bless us more abundantly in our work for him. True, there are many inconveniences; for instance, lack of good water, a drug-store and a doctor, but we "considered the cost" before we moved, and know that God can "make it all up to us." As if to test our faith, we had not well moved before our little Effie was taken sick with intermittent fever, and we for three weeks knew that her life was in danger. But God heard our prayers and blessed the means used for her recovery. Our nearest doctor and drug-store are in Matehuala, eighteen leagues off, and the heavens supply us with pure rain water.

I wish I could take you with me to the school where I teach a class in English, and have the privilege of reading to the girls a chapter of the Bible after recitation. A little maid of three summers, with large blue eyes and curly hair, always accompanies me. Once she took a piece of chalk and scribbling on the corner of the blackboard, said, "Mamma, tell the girls I say, 'what I write'!" A chubby baby with dimpled hands and cheeks generally is in his purse's arms in the door to give his mother a welcome kiss on her return. But these little ones are not always left alone. They have their part, too, in the mission work, and often serve as open doors to homes otherwise inaccessible. Before leaving Matehuala, because of her great love for my girlie, the Mayor's wife invited me to visit her. At her house one night, at a social gathering, I was invited to sing. I sang some of our Gospel Hymns to the crowd of people. A few months ago in the same city I visited a lady of rank, who has been especially kind to us. She is unusually well educated for a Mexican; is indeed a poetess of considerable merit, and a constant student. We were soon engaged in a religious conversation, which lasted for more than an hour. She expressed herself as being dissatisfied with many of the teachings of the church of Rome, and questioned me minutely as to the belief of the Baptists. She said that she had asked the priest to whom she confessed if immersion was the scriptural mode of baptism. He replied that he had no fault to find with our baptism, that the church of Rome employed immersion up to the 13th century, when, by permission of the Pope, sprinkling was substituted, but that even now, in some parts of the world, as for instance in Greece the Catholics still baptized solely by immersion. She then asked him if baptism in itself possessed any saving merits to which he replied that it did, that no unbaptized soul could enter heaven. We "searched the Scriptures," and I marked some places for her careful study. Asked her if the priest did not forbid her having a Bible to which she replied that he knew nothing about it. She said that the next time she went to confession she intended to ask the priest why Catholics should worship the Virgin and saints, since God is the only possessor of the attributes of omnipresence, omnipotence and omniscience. She further remarked that, if Mary were busy attending to the wants of some person in Italy, or even in some other part of Matehuala, she did not see how she could be benefitted by praying to her, and thought it a safer and surer way to address herself directly to God. She said that her Bible taught her that God was a loving father willing to forgive sin, and, if that was true, she did not see why the intervention of Mary or the saints was necessary.

I tried to lead her, as best I could, to Jesus, and left her house with a silent prayer, that God would bless even my imperfect teaching to the salvation of her soul. Upon telling me good-bye, she thanked me for my visit, and that, although she was still more Catholic than Baptist, she was earnestly and prayerfully seeking more light. Will you not, dear girls, pray especially for her?

A few days ago I visited an old woman here who is a regular attendant of all our services. She invited me out into her yard to sit where I could see her flowers, and at the same time converse with her husband at work there. I asked her if she could read the Bible, for I had seen a copy of the New Testament in her house. She said she could not read, but that her husband read to her. She took the book lovingly up and bringing it to me said: "I will tell you its story. Husband and I have always been poor, but once in our lives poorer than at present. At that time we lived in a ranch, and with great difficulty I saved up enough money to buy me a shawl, and gave it to my husband on his first trip to town to purchase the much needed article. On his return, I eagerly asked him for the shawl. 'Gently, gently, old woman,' said he. 'Go, look in the right hand corner of your trunk, and you will find a shawl large enough to shelter us both from all harm.' I looked, but found no shawl, and coming back to him said: 'Now you have joked enough; tell me what color the shawl is, for I find none.' Slowly crossing the room, he lifted the lid of the trunk and took from it this New Testament. I was, at first, very angry that he had spent my shawl money for a book, but when he had read me some of its sweet messages, I was more than glad that we had it at any price." In the shelter of the Rock there mentioned, many have found refuge, and I hope many more are still to find it.

In a few weeks we are expecting a native minister and his family to move here to help us in the work. He or Mr. Chastain will then travel by turns, one or the other being here all the time. His wife is a graduate of Madero Institute, Saltillo, and she and I will probably open a school for girls here upon her arrival. The Quakers opened a girls' school here and then abandoned it for lack of means to continue it. We can begin with at least ten or twelve day pupils, and hope to bring in more.

Last Friday week I organized a woman's Bible class. Twenty two were present. At our first meeting we decided to study first about the women of the Bible. I have an interesting class of girls in the Sunday-school, too, and feel altogether much encouraged in the work.

Mexico is turning to the light, but she is still in great darkness and needs your earnest and constant prayers that the Sun of Righteousness may soon shine in full brilliancy upon her.

Do not let the missionary spirit die out among you. The dear old Institute has sent liberally of her best to pagan lands and may God move many more of you to give your lives to the spread of the gospel in heathen and Catholic lands. In return for our offerings God has richly compensated, and will continue to compensate Chowan Institute. Not yet has she reached the zenith of her glory. Each coming session is better than the preceding. She lives in the hearts of her Alumnæ, many of whom learned there not only a knowledge of worldly but also of heavenly science. Her daughters rise up and call her blessed.

The 28th of this month is set apart in the missionary calendar as a day of prayer for us and our mission field. Will you all try to remember us at that time at the Throne of Grace? How glad that we are that this is the month of prayer for Mexico! May God richly bless the Missionary Society of Chowan Institute! Sincerely yours,

LILLIAN WRIGHT CHASTAIN.

Some Good Meetings.

Dear Recorder:—It has been my privilege to be in some good meetings this fall. The first meeting held was at White's Schoolhouse in Davie county, where I aided Bro. C. S. Cashwell. The Lord gave us a good meeting here, resulting in sixteen accessions to the Baptist churches in the vicinity by baptism. This point is made a feeder to four churches—Eatons, Bear Creek, Cross Roads, and Farmington. The brethren in the community have erected a nice board arbor under which a Sunday school is held during the summer. From the work here quite a large number of persons have been added to the above churches. Bro. Monroe Hendricks has been the superintendent of the work here during the year. The ordinance of baptism was administered in the presence of a large number of persons, and made a deep impression upon the hearts and minds of those who witnessed it.

My next meeting was held at Ruffin—a great success. Bro. O. L. Stringfield aided me. We did not have many conversions and only four accessions by baptism and one by letter, but the meeting was a great harmonizer of the elements in the community. We have been under a great struggle here as our work has been in a formative state. Our membership are united and hopeful, and I think there is a fine prospect for a good work in the future. We still owe eight hundred dollars on our house. I do hope those who have subscribed will help me now, since times are becoming better.

My next meeting was at Walnut Cove. This point, like Ruffin, is a mission point, and our work is just beginning to be fairly established. We received eight by baptism and four by letter. Rev. Thomas Carrick of Lexington aided me. The meeting lasted one week. Bro. Carrick is unassuming, but preaches the gospel with directness and power. We are gradually gaining here. Death has made sad inroads in our work here, but our membership is being increased by baptism and letter. We still owe on our house here seven hundred dollars. The times have been so close and hard that my collections have only about kept the interest paid. The church here and at Ruffin are about equal in cost, costing each about $2,200 and built after the same order. They are the best church houses in all this part of the State, and put us in the front rank for neat and attractive places of worship. It has been a heavy load for me to carry, but I am hoping to come out all right in the end. I am going to work hard to pay out this during the next year.

The next meeting was at Piny church in the Liberty Association. This was a remarkably good meeting. I have many warm friends at Piny. Bro. Bennett is pastor here, is a dear good brother, and is doing a good work. As a result of the meeting twenty-one were baptized, and quite a number of others made a profession of faith. The baptism was beautiful, and was administered in the dear old Yadkin river by Bro. Bennett in the presence of eight hundred or a thousand people. Baptists thrive in this country. I have seen hundreds buried with Christ in baptism in the waters of the old Yadkin. I was born on this dear old river, baptized in its waters, and to me it is the prettiest river in the world. Its beautiful green willows, clear blue waters, lovely landscapes, and overshadowing hills, give it an attractiveness of rare beauty. This old river is lined with Baptist churches from its rise to where it plunges into the Atlantic ocean. May many thousands more put on Christ in its lovely waters!

Our work at Broad Street, Winston, under Doctor Broughton, is a marvel of success. Nearly one hundred have been added since he became our pastor.

I hope to be with you all at the Convention. Fraternally yours,

S. F. CONRAD.

The John Gibson Institute.

Bro. Bailey:—As I know you are interested in every thing that pertains to Baptist progress, I think you and your readers may enjoy some account of the school, whose name stands at the head of this article.

Northeast Georgia, like Western North Carolina, is filled with bright-eyed, rosy-cheeked boys and girls, who are too poor to obtain higher culture in our colleges. Our Association, the Hebron, deploring this fact, determined to make an attempt to remedy it. With this view they have established this institution, and named it after our grand, old mission secretary, Rev. John G. Gibson, D. D., who was reared in this section, and has done more for it religiously than any man in it. Bowman in Elbert county, near the foot of the mountains and near the South Carolina line, on the Elberton Air Line Railroad, was selected, because with its fine climate and pure, freestone water, the most salubrious locality in this part of Georgia. The town of Bowman, though small, and having no rich men in it, is erecting for the school a two-story brick building, consisting of eight large rooms, and a chapel that will seat one thousand. It is now under roof and will be completed by January 1. It will be seated in the recitation rooms with the most approved modern furniture, and the audience room with opera chairs. It will have all modern facilities for teaching, including elegant new pianos, organ, &c.

The first session of the school opened with the writer as President, aided by six able professors and teachers, on Oct. 5, 1892. It has now four States represented among its students—Georgia, South Carolina, Tennessee and Alabama. The school is on the plan of Hiawassee school. Tuition in all literary branches is $1.50 per month. Board in best families from $7 to $9 per month. So that the entire expenses of a student will be from $10 to $11 per month.

As Elbert is a prohibition county, we feel safe in inviting poor young men and girls to this school.

Our curriculum is high—up to Calculus in Mathematics, and through Latin and Greek courses, usual in colleges, South. We aim at the lowest possible expense to the student to fit him for the Junior Class, half advanced, or the Senior Class of our best colleges. If we succeed in our aim, it will be a great boon to our mountain boys and girls, and future generations will rise up and call the projectors and fosterers of this school, blessed.

I came here from Tennessee to give the brethren what aid I could in this laudable undertaking. If you have any boys or girls in North Carolina too poor to go to Wake Forest, and who can raise ten or eleven dollars per month, send them over, and we will educate them for you.

God bless you and the RECORDER. You are doing a mighty work for the grand "Old North State." W. A. MONTGOMERY.

New Advertisements

We ask attention to the advertisement of Mr. J. C. S. Lumden, which appears in another column. Mr. Lumsden is among the oldest and best business men in the city, and his success in business is a guarantee of the merits of his goods and of fair dealing to the public. We most cheerfully recommend him to the trade generally.

Also, of the travelling public to the dining hall of Bro. A. E. Jordan, which he has just opened on Fayetteville street. The proprietor is one of our best brethren, and is well deserving of all the patronage he receives.

Miss Maggie Reese gives notice of first-class millinery goods, and ladies can always find the very best and latest styles in this establishment. We commend these goods to the trade generally.

Miss R. C. Q. desires a situation as a teacher. Address, care of Editor of the RECORDER.

Great Injustice Done Me.

Bro. Bailey:—The Asheville Baptist did me and the brethren of the Western Convention great injustice in reference to the report on Temperance read by Bro. Glenn. I was very particular to qualify what I said about praying to God to kill the whisky men. I said that God knew whether they would repent and be saved or not, and that if he knew they never would be saved, but continue their corrupting, God-dishonoring, soul-destroying business, that it would be best for them and all concerned, for God to take them out of the world; that if they must go to hell, that it would only augment their pain if those whom they had corrupted and ruined in this world, should crowd them in hell, and charge them with their damnation. And then I illustrated my point by the rich man who lifted up his eyes in hell and prayed Abraham to send Lazarus to his father's house to warn them not to come to where he was, for if they should come to him and charge him with their damnation, it would only augment his pain.

I appeal to my brethren if this is not just about what I said verbatim. Now, the Editor of the Asheville Baptist should have said nothing, or qualified what I said about my prayer. If I have sinned, I beg God's forgiveness and the pardon of my brethren.

F. M. JORDAN.

Murfreesboro Notes.

Mr. Editor:—The Institute is moving along very nicely. The attendance is up to the standard. The pupils as a class are unusually studious, and very fine work is being done. The Senior Class numbers fourteen.

The church is weak but always settles every debt against it at the end of the year, carrying no balances on the wrong side over to the new year.

Pastor Wood has recently received a flattering call to Colorado. He is one of the pillars in the West Chowan, and his place would be no easy one to fill. We are hoping that he will not accept the call.

Pastor Scarboro has had several calls to town churches since he located here, but he does not believe the Lord has called every preacher to go to town, and prefers his country pastorate. He visits his flock, and they all love him.

The Wesleyan Female College is now presided over by Rev. R. P. Troy of the North Carolina Conference. He is a scholarly christian man, and will make a success of the school, if energy and perseverance can make it so.

Sometimes you hear of clashing between the different denominations. It is not so here. Rev. J. W. Lee of the Methodist church is a whole-souled brother, and believes that all christians should dwell together in peace and harmony.

Last Sunday was Temperance Sunday. The different congregations met together in the morning at the Baptist church, and at night in the Methodist church. Addresses were made by Revs. Lee, Ivey, Wood, Scarboro, and Dr. J. T. Eldridge.

Friday night the Dorcas Society of the Baptist church gave a supper to raise money to finish paying for the parsonage. Before the supper, the following programme was rendered in the Institute chapel:

Processional March—Miss Sallie Salsbury, Hamilton, N. C.

Vocal Duett, "Two Merry Gipsies"—Misses Mamie and Jessie Brewer, Murfreesboro, N. C.

Instrumental Solo, "A Bird from o'er the Sea"—Miss Laura Johnson, Richmond county, N. C.

Instrumental Solo, "Mendelsohn's Songs without Words, No. 28"—Miss Jennie Daughtrey, Suffolk, Va.

Instrumental Solo, "Spinning Song"—Miss Gertie Norfleet, Franklin, Va.

Vocal Solo, "Oh, Promise Me"—Miss Rosa Speight, Bertie county, N. C.

Instrumental Solo, Sonata in F by Mozart—Miss Bruce Brewer, Murfreesboro, N. C.

Vocal Solo, "The Three Little Pigs"—Miss Mamie Brewer.

Recitation, "Young America"—Miss Rosa Speight.

Vocal Solo, "Waiting"—Miss Gertie Norfleet.

Reading, "Awfully Lovely Philosophy"—Miss Maggie Bass, Warsaw, N. C.

Murfreesboro, Nov. 16, 1892.

Rev. J. B. Brewer, President of the Chowan Baptist Female Institute, in a private letter, says: "The Institute is moving along nicely, with as large a patronage as we had last year."

One Hundred Missionaries.

When the Southern Baptist Convention first began seriously to consider the subject of observing the Centennial of Missions, the idea most prominently before the minds of the brethren was a large increase of the number of workers in our foreign fields. This was brought out very clearly in the report of the Centennial Committee, made in 1890. That report says: "That, as a suitable and wise memorial, the Baptists of the South, among other objects of religious effort, should, during the Centennial year, strive to put one hundred missionaries in the foreign field—one missionary for each year of this missionary era—and to increase correspondingly any [every] department of missionary work." And surely in no other way can we more appropriately celebrate this Centennial of the organization of the first really Foreign Mission Society of modern times than by the sending out of one preacher of the gospel for each year of the century. First and foremost in all the Centennial effort ought this idea to have stood: "One hundred missionaries in the foreign field—one missionary for each year of this missionary era."

We have noticed, however, with something of regret, that this idea has come to have a secondary place in the thought of many of the people, as is evidenced by the place given to it in nearly all the addresses made on the Centennial. Foremost in the thought of most of us stands the money to be raised, while an incidental place only is given to the subject of the men and women whom we ought to be praying for and talking for and seeking out.

Possibly our faith has not been strong enough to grasp firmly the possibility of God's giving us so many men and women in one or even two years, and so we have let the idea of equipping and sending forth so many gradually take a back place in our thought. And verily God has tried our faith on this line this year. While we had at first been thinking about a large increase of force, by what has seemed to us a strange providence, or series of providences, our force during this year has been rather decreasing than increasing. Some of our workers have died, some have come home, others have left our connection, and amid all these discouragements we have not until recently been encouraged by seeing others coming forward to take the places of those who have gone out of service. And so, many of us have concluded that the increase of force was probably not to be expected, and have considered the advisability of turning our gifts to other objects, seemingly more likely to be accomplished.

But God has not been unmindful of the prayers that have ascended to him for workers, nor has he failed to regard the purpose that was in the minds and hearts of his people to obey his Son's last and great commission to "go" and "preach." Quietly God's Spirit has been and is working, and the hearts of men and women are being moved by his voice to say, "Here am I, send me." As a first fruits of the Centennial season, God gave us Bro. Ginsburg, a worker ready prepared for work in Brazil, who has recently been reinforced by a most excellent help meet from England, a lady trained in the Grattan-Guinness College in London. Then came Bro. E. N. Walne and wife, now now probably arrived in Japan, and Miss Anna B. Hartwell, now on her way to Canton, China. Next comes Brother E. Pendleton Jones, now under appointment and to sail, not alone, for his field, in the spring. Dr. E. E. Mansfield of Columbus, Ga., highly recommended by a number of brethren as not only an excellent physician but an active christian worker as well, was, at the last meeting of the Board, accepted as a missionary physician for China. A number of applications are coming to the Board from seemingly first-class young men and women, applying for work in Mexico, Brazil, Japan and Africa. The indications now are growing better and better for the increase, and large increase, of our mission forces during the next few months.

What is to be done with these applicants? What answer is to be returned to them when they ask to be sent? Shall they be accepted, equipped and sent forth promptly? The answer to all these questions will depend in large measure on the way in which the churches and individual brethren of the churches feel and act with regard to that great purpose so aptly expressed by the Centennial Committee in 1890—"One hundred missionaries in the foreign field—one missionary for each year of this missionary era."

The Southern Baptist Convention, at its last session instructed the Boards "to press the enlargement of the regular contributions" to their work. And in accordance with those instructions, we earnestly appeal to our brethren everywhere to provide the Board with the means of meeting the call which God is making on them how to appoint and send forth laborers into his harvest. We have prayed the Lord of the harvest for more laborers. He is giving them in answer to our prayers. But how shall they go into the field except they be sent by us?

In all the Centennial giving, as we consider how much we can give and to what object our gifts shall go, let none of us forget the "one hundred missionaries to the foreign field." Let gifts for this specific purpose come in freely, that the Board may know how to act. And let them be sent clearly designated for this purpose.

Mistake Corrected.

Dear Recorder:—I notice in my acknowledgments for Pine Level Baptist church in the RECORDER of Nov. 9th, the collection at prayer meeting of the First Baptist church, Raleigh, was $1.20. It should have been $7.20.

Allow me to endorse your editorial on "Ministerial Love." We need more ministerial co operation in the work of our Master's cause. The minister leaving a field can be of great service to the one that is to follow him. If there should be any difficulties that would hinder the progress of our Lord's cause, he should impart the nature of the same to his brother minister that succeeds him. Why is the present the most progressive age of this world's history? It is not only because we have the advantage of our fathers' successes, but also of their mistakes. Should there not be that confidential brotherly love in the ministerial brotherhood to make known any of their mistakes or difficult experiences, when they would be the means of promoting our Lord's kingdom. Yours fraternally,

J. W. ROSE.

The Picture Lesson Cards.

The Picture Lesson Cards for 1893, issued by the American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia, are by all odds the finest in the market, and will no doubt lead all competitors. The designs are entirely new, and the chromo-lithographic effects make them exceedingly attractive. The pictorial illustrations are larger than heretofore and beautifully printed in colors. The card for the thirteenth Sunday forms a neat certificate, to be filled out by the teacher, commending the good behavior and attention to the lesson, and recording the attendance of the pupil during the quarter. The circulation of these cards has become so large that the present improvement has been made possible. Every card is a gem, and will delight the heart of the child who receives it. No school should be without a supply of these Picture Cards. The price remains the same—five copies or more, three cents each per quarter, or twelve cents a year each. Samples will be sent upon application to the Society, or either of its branches.

...r Centennial Memorial of Modern Missions.

We use the term "our" because we refer ...the action taken by the Southern Baptist ...vention to appropriately observe the one ...ndredth anniversary of founding of mod... missions by William Carey and his asso...ates. It is of what the Convention con...uded to do as an appropriate memorial of ...is great event, and which it referred to a ...pecial committee, that I wish to say a ...ord or two in the columns of the BIBLICAL ...ECORDER. Definiteness and clearness are ...dispensable to a right understanding of ...y matter. We must understand any ...hing to be interested in it.

What kind of a memorial does the South...rn Baptist Convention propose to build to ...e memory of the first century of modern ...issions?

Our Convention's plan was in one respect ...nlike that adopted by our Baptist brethren ...n England and Canada, and even in the ...orth, as they confined their Centennial ef...orts to Foreign Missions, whereas the Con...ention concluded to include Home and For...gn Missions in our Centennial undertaking. ...ence our Home and Foreign Boards share ...qually. Now what do we propose to do as ...Convention memorial?

(1). It is proposed to enlarge the regular ...ork of the Foreign and Home Boards. ...his important movement ought to com...end itself to every friend of missions, ...ome and Foreign, and, of course, does do ...o. The necessity for such an enlargement ...s apparent to all. The time is a most op...portune one. What could be more appro...riate at the opening of the second century ...f missions, as a memorial of the beginning ...f missions, than a general enlargement and ...eal advance along the whole line at home ...nd abroad? The enlargement of the an...ual contributions for our Boards is impera...ively necessary, because the demands of ...he work upon the resources of the treasu...ies of our Boards are far beyond these re...ources, and hence the borrowing of money ...uring the year and the accumulation of ...ebt at the close of the year. To meet this ...mergency enlargement is clearly a neces...ity. But besides this, there are important ...ields at home (e. g., the Germans) and ...broad (e. g., Hong Kong and large terri...ories) that we should possess for Christ. ...o do this, men and means are necessary. ...ut we do not have them. If, therefore, ...e meet the manifest demands of God's ...eadings we must enlarge the regular work ...f our Home and Foreign Boards. When ...ould we take this necessary advance step ...etter than now? It may require self-denial. ...es, of course it will. God's work will al...ays demand self-denial. God intends it ...hall. This is the part of this work with ...od that brings the blessing of this co-ope...ation to us. The benevolence that pleases ...od most, and blesses us the fullest, is not ...he waste of our cup of mercies which God ...lls to the overflow. Giving for God is not ...he bestowing on his cause of what we can ...pare as well as not. Our gifts are the ves...els in which we carry our love to him who ...oved us and gave himself for us. Hence it ...s that every man's gift to God shows one ...f two things—either his consecration or his ...overtousness.

The first thing, then, in our Centennial ...emorial of Missions is the enlargement of ...he regular work of our Boards, Home and ...oreign. This should not, by any means, ...e neglected.

(2). The sending out of one hundred new ...issionaries (one for each year of the cen...ury) to the foreign field, and the corre...ponding enlargement of our home field ...orce, is the second purpose of the Conven...ion in its Centennial Memorial.

This is an idea that appeals to us with more than the force of a sentiment. It is an act worthy a great denomination such as ours. These one hundred new missionaries are needed at once if our mission work abroad is enlarged as it should be. Yes, twice one hundred men and women are needed to-day on the foreign field. Is the demand at home one that can be met by one hundred additional workmen? The Convention has not graded its call for mission...aries by the requirements of our work. Far from it. It has asked for the least that seemed reasonable. These calls are not pre...posterous—they are easily within the limits of our ability did we but think so, and in the love of God and in faith in Christ address ourselves as a million and a quarter Baptists to them in downright earnestness.

But suppose the Baptists of the South found the one hundred men and women, and then insisted that the Board should send them out. They must be sustained. Of course they must be sustained. The Board can hardly sustain the number now abroad. This is sadly humiliatingly true. How, then, is it possible to send out and sustain a hundred more men and women? This question deserves a fair answer. That our missions and missionaries ought to be brought into closer contact, and into more vital sympathy with our churches here at home, every one knows. To the question, how this can be done, there may be a variety of answers. It seems to me, if I may suggest, that in this proposition of the Convention to send out these one hundred new missionaries is, at least in part, an answer to the above question. Suppose this new force of missionaries to be represented by sixty men and forty women. On an average support of $800 (to make it fully sufficient), this would require $80,000. Can the 16,000 white churches of the S. B. C. safely add this to the $100,000 they now give for foreign missions? If this $80,000 was put into 16,000 shares, it would be only $5 a share. Could not our churches undertake this additional offering of $5 with perfect safety? Why, we have numbers of churches that could easily add to their regular contributions the support of one missionary. There are many more who could by uniting with another church support a missionary. There are still more churches that could be one of four, or eight, or twenty or fifty churches who could assume a missionary's support in addition to what they are now doing, and safely agree to do so for a term of years. In this way the Board would be relieved from a deal of anxiety; the support of our missionaries would be secured, and the brethren and sisters on the foreign field brought into intimate, sympathetic, personal relation with the churches at home. Thus the one hundred new missionaries would be secured without any burden to the Board or to the churches, and the work on the foreign field materially and permanently enlarged.

(3). The securing of a Centennial Memorial Fund for chapel building and for printing translations of the Scriptures, of $250,000 to be divided between the Home and Foreign Boards, is another thing aimed at by our Convention in this Centennial Memorial of Modern Missions. Should this be done? Are chapels needed in Brazil, Africa, Italy, Mexico, and elsewhere on the foreign fields? Do our one thousand houseless churches here on our home field need meeting houses? What can a feeble church do without a house? What could your own church do without a place to meet?

Can this $250,000 be raised? No! of course not if the churches, Sunday-schools and mission societies do not give it. Can they give it? Can't they? Can they afford not to give it? What is $250,000 for a million and a quarter Baptists and a million Sunday-school scholars, to say nothing of the thousands of persons in our congregations (not members of our churches) who, if asked, would gladly give from one dollar to one hundred dollars? Two and a quarter millions of church members and Sunday-school children to raise $250,000! a fraction over one cent each. But suppose that only one person in ten of our people can give anything. Would that reduction of givers leave the burden a heavy one to the rest? Are we so poor that not one person in ten of our people could give on an average for such an object a fraction over $1.10, when there are individuals who have given five and ten thousand dollars each, and will give as much and more before this Centennial year closes on May 1st, 1893? It seems to me every pastor, every Sabbath-school superintendent, every editor in the South ought to throw themselves heart and soul into this grand movement.

(1). To enlarge the regular work of our mission Boards, home and abroad.

(2). To send out one hundred new missionaries and enlarge the work at home proportionately.

(3). And to raise for permanent work $250,000 to be divided between the Home and Foreign Boards, and thus complete the magnificent memorial which the Southern Baptist Convention proposes to build as their tribute to the founding of modern missions.

Notice by Hickory Mountain Church.

To the readers of the Biblical Recorder:—Notice is hereby given that Brother Jim Dan Dorsett, wife Fannie Dorsett, and son Rufus Dorsett, have been excluded from this church (located in Chatham county).

Notice is given to all Baptist churches that they are unorthodox as to the faith and doctrines of the Baptist church, as we believe the Bible teaches. They were excluded from this church for advocating women preaching to the detriment of their own church. Said brethren and sister have letters from this church that have been called to by the church, which they refuse to return. Therefore we ask that this notice be published as a warning to sister churches against them.

Done by order of this church in regular conference meeting.

Not Dead as Reported.

As it is reported in different parts of the country that I am dead, I take this method of informing my friends and acquaintances that I am not, but am dying, and I hope especially to the world, more evidently for the last three months than heretofore in my short experience of about four years. I think I have seen more of the Lord's providence in that time than in all the time before; or perhaps more plainly to say nothing of the year previous to Sept. 17th up to Oct. 20th in four meetings in which I have been engaged—two of them my own—I have witnessed seventy-five conversions or more.

I have had in the whole time mentioned above many happy experiences and many hard trials, but have kept it to myself, or at any rate I have not made them public through our paper, for fear some one might think I was seeking publicity.

But I desire to be more like my Master, and to seek seclusion. To the Lord belongeth all the glory, honor and praise.

Has to Retire from the Seminary.

Editor of Recorder:—I have been sick from a chronic disease of the kidneys and nervous affection for some time, so much so that my health will necessitate my leaving the Seminary and engaging in work that is more active. Confinement is sadly against me. I have not been able to get to the class-room for over a week. Have been confined to my room. I very much regret that I am thus hindered in my work, but the Lord knows best. It is my will to be well and able to attend to my Seminary duties, but God in his providence has seen fit to afflict me, and we must acquiesce in this will.

I write this so that the readers of the RECORDER may know for what cause I left the Seminary. Yours fraternally,

From Japan.

Dr. Rhees writes in a private letter to his sister:

I had a hot trip into the country 18–23d inst. Went from Kobe to Himeji by railroad, thirty-five miles. Held service that (Saturday) night; examined and received for baptism two. On Sunday morning baptized them and administered the Lord's Supper; preached at night.

Monday, attended to business in connection with the building of a home and schoolhouse for Miss Church, our earnest and efficient teacher. Tuesday, at five in the morning, took a jin-rike-sha for Fukumoto, twenty miles up in the hills. Examined, received and baptized and administered the Lord's Supper.

Wednesday morning started at four o'clock towards the west coast, forty-five miles further, to Toyo-oka, a very hot ride over a very rough road. Preached there in the afternoon. On Thursday examined and received for baptism eight. Early on Friday morning, on account of the great heat later in the day, baptized them. Friday night held a prayer-meeting.

On Saturday examined and received four. Early on Sunday morning baptized them. Later preached and in the afternoon administered the Lord's Supper.

In the evening heard two young men preach; made up my mind that one was called to preach; the other to "keep silence in the churches."

Monday afternoon, at four, started back towards home; reached Fukumoto in the afternoon; rested till Tuesday a. m.; left there at four o'clock and reached here at five in the afternoon, tired and hungry for civilized beds and food.

My trip is only a specimen of those frequently taken, only not often so many baptisms and generally more preaching. I am thankful that, though no longer young and never robust, I am able to do so much.

Mrs. Rhees is busy, as always, with her schools and other mission work. We are both thankful for the strength given us to labor.—National Baptist, Nov. 10.

Growth of Foreign Industries in Japan.

Inquiries have recently been made by the British consuls in Japan as to the various native industries that have sprung up for the production of articles which have hitherto been imported into that country from abroad. A summary of the information thus obtained shows that in the case of some of the industries introduced into Japan, the country is now self-supporting, foreign competition being no longer possible; in others, so much has been accomplished as to render it certain that the time is not far off when importation will altogether cease. The future of other industries, again—such as that of cotton spinning—though not assumed, is still hopeful; while even in those branches in which the least results have been obtained, she possesses a constant advantage in the great cheapness of labor. This progress has not been made at the sacrifice of any of the various industries which are more peculiarly her own.—So. Cult. and Dixie Farmer.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

The Century Magazine in 1893.

It would be hard for a person who cares for good reading to make a better investment than a year's subscription to The Century Magazine. No region is too remote, no expense too great, if it will only produce what the Century's readers want. This is the policy that has made it, as the Pall Mall Budget, of London, says: "By far the best of the magazines, English or American."

The November number begins a new volume and contains the first chapters of a powerful novel of New York society, called "Sweet Bells Out of Tune," written by Mrs. Burton Harrison, the author of "The Anglomaniacs." In this story the fashionable wedding, the occupants of the boxes in the Metropolitan Opera House, the "smart set" in the country house, are faithfully reflected, and the illustrations by Charles Danna Gibson, Life's well known cartoonist, are as brilliant as the novel.

In this November number begins also a great series of papers on "The Bible and Science," opening with "Does the Bible contain Scientific Errors?" by Prof. Shields, of Princeton, who takes decided ground that the Bible does not contain scientific errors of any moment, and who most interestingly states the case from his point of view. Other articles in this series will include one in the December (Christmas) number, "The Effect of Scientific Study upon Religious Beliefs."

An important series of letters that passed between General Sherman and his brother Senator John Sherham is also printed in November, which number contains also contributions from the most distinguished writers, including an article by James Russell Lowell, which was not quite completed at the time of his death. The suggestion which Bishop Potter makes in the November Century as to what could be done with the World's Fair if it were opened on Sunday, is one which seems the most practical solution of the problem yet offered.

The December Century is to be a great Christmas number—full of Christmas stories, Christmas poems, and Christmas pictures, and in it will begin the first chapters of a striking novel of life in Colorado, "Benefits Forgot," by Wolcott Balestier, who wrote "The Naulahka" with Rudyard Kipling.

Papers on good roads, the new educational methods, and city government are soon to come.

Four dollars will bring you this splendid magazine for one year, and certainly no cultivated home can afford to be without it. Subscribers can remit directly to the publishers, The Century Co., 33 East 17th St., New York. They should begin with November, and so get first chapters of all the serials, including "Sweet Bells Out of Tune."

A Word from the West.

We are hardly disposed to place so high a value on education as that of the little boy who stated in his composition, "education is a good thing, and hence the immortality of the soul." But no one can deny that thoroughly equipped schools are a most potent factor in denominational prosperity. It is, therefore, with pleasure that we note great interest which seems to exist in educational matters among the Baptists of Western North Carolina. This interest is manifested in the large number of institutions which during the last two years have opened their doors and which are now doing efficient service in the work of training the young. And though it may excite the disapproval of many learned critics, the Baptists of the West are going forward in the work of establishing

COLLEGES.

We are aware that there is a strong spirit of opposition to the founding and maintainance of small colleges within what seems to be a territory of very limited extent. Men of eminence, in large educational gatherings, have discanted on this subject. In the abstract, they are doubtless correct. But unfortunately in the region where we are at present sojourning, we have to deal with the concrete.

Here the work of education is in its infancy. There is no need and, consequently, no field for the amply endowed college and university. Were Rocket might profitably remove its corps of professors to some point on this side of the Blue Ridge and there would be no work for it to do in the place where it might be situated. Its patronage would necessarily come largely from other sections where the work of education is in a more advanced stage. There is promise of wonderful growth, among the Baptists of the West, toward the attainment of a high plane of intellectual culture. The march of progress has already begun. The ranks are swelled with new recruits every day and hour. We look for great things in the not distant future. But because there are few students within our bounds who are prepared to enter the great institutions of the State shall we fail to give the multitude, those college advantages which they are able to receive? Shall we refuse to teach the boy algebra, because he is unprepared to study calculus? Shall we deny him the privilege of reading Caesar, because he is unfamiliar with the Satires of Juvenal? For many, the small college is the only opportunity for preparation. A large number, pressed by the weight of poverty, can spend only a limited amount of time and money at school. The man who would exclude collegiate studies from the schools which are near the doors of such students, would rob them of advantages which they can and ought to receive. What would be said of the mother who refused to give nourishment to her child, because he was too small and weak to eat the food of a man? Would she allow him to abstain from milk because he could not eat meat? But it might be urged, "why give your institution the name of college? Teach all you can, but confer no degrees, grant no diplomas." We have but one argument with which to answer that—the argement of precedent. With us it is a matter of what is not of what ought to be. If every school which does not carry its students through the whole course of higher mathematics, biology, &c., would agree to discontinue the practice of granting diplomas, then perhaps the idyllic dreams of the critics would be realized. But of two institutions offering the same facilities for mental improvement, by far the larger patronage would go to the one which sent forth graduates, after they had completed the course prescribed. The great evil of the small college consists not in its smallness, but in its arrogant boasts and vulgar pretensions, when it is controlled by a parvenu, who essays with a show of words to establish claims which its condition does not support.

We endorse without qualification—the

in his recent article in the RECORDER. By preparing the General Catalogue of Wake Forest College, he has enabled the public to gather some dim conception of the good which this institution has accomplished through all the years of its history. As Baptists we view with pride the long roll of the sons of Wake Forest who have honored God and honored themselves, who have lived the lives of christian heroes and who have stood for great principles at home and abroad, in war and in peace, in the tents of savages and the haunts of civilization. Wake Forest can have no rival among the Baptists of North Carolina. Toward her all our energies must be directed.

And now a word as to

MARS HILL,

The present session has shown renewed zeal on the part of the friends and patrons of this institution. During the last three months our boarding patronage has more than doubled. We have enrolled one hundred and eighty three students, among whom are representatives from Georgia, Tennessee and Eastern North Carolina. A music department has been added and many facilities for work in the class room have been provided. Mars Hill will do her full part in the intellectual redemption of the State. We realize that, whether our work is great or small in its scope, we are concerned with things of immortality.

Rev. R. D. Carroll Ordained.

At Antioch church in Pitt county on Nov. 13th, after a due examination, our Bro. R. D. Carroll was solemnly set apart to the full work of the gospel ministry.

The sermon was preached by Rev. A. L. Stough of Kinston and much enjoyed. The ordaining prayer was led by the writer, who also presented the Bible. The charge was given by Bro. Stough.

Bro. Carroll is to be my successor at this his own mother church. It has been my pleasure to serve this church for two years. My leaving Greenville necessitates my resigning. I have never served a church with more pleasure. The church has greatly prospered, and it is with deep regrets I part with them. One of the young men I have baptized is now superintendent of the Sunday-school at the church. I hope and believe that others will rise up of this noble band of workers, to tell the story of the Cross. From this church goes out an arm which is beginning work at Ayden. In all, there are about four Sunday-schools connected with this church.

RATES ON RAILROADS TO THE BAPTIST STATE CONVENTION IN RALEIGH.

I hope cheap rates can be had. Fairs—small and great—can get cheap rates, while usually of late years our religious bodies get very little reduction. Why is this? I hope as our Convention meets in Raleigh, and it is our centennial year, we can have a great session.

THE BAPTIST TEACHER.

It is confidently believed that Volume XXIV of THE BAPTIST TEACHER will be far ahead of any of its predecessors in all that is required to furnish A Complete Help to Sunday-school workers. The best writers that can be secured have been engaged as contributors to its several departments. Attention is therefore directed with pleasure to the features of value in the BAPTIST TEACHER FOR 1893.

I. Enlargement. In order to make room for the new department upon Inductive Teaching, to run parallel with the new Inductive Quarterly, the Rev. W. G. Fennell will have at command an additional four pages each month, which will make each issue fifty-two pages, instead of forty eight, as heretofore.

II. Colored maps, and several diagrams in preparation, will form frontispieces of great value.

III. The editorial articles will discuss live topics of the day in the same style that has made THE BAPTIST TEACHER noted for its brightness and pungency.

IV. The Lesson Expositions will be by two of the best writers in Baptist ranks: Prof. B. C. Taylor, D. D., of Crozer Theological Seminary, and Prof. H. H. Harris, D. D., LL. D., of Richmond College. This department is enriched by other writers, as follows: Rev. P. S. Henson, D. D., gives Lesson Topics; Mr. W. Taylor Smith, B. A., of Manchester, England, treats of Orientalisms in each lesson; Mrs. M. G. Kennedy gives suggestions for teaching the lesson to Intermediate, and also to Primary classes; Drs. Taylor and Harris add hints to teachers of advanced classes, and the Rev. W. G. Fennell gives notes applying to the Inductive studies. The Analyses, the Questions, the Bible Dictionary, and the Review Hints complete the means of help to the teacher, so far as one publication can do this.

V. A summary of doctrines in the lessons of each quarter will be furnished by Pres. Charles Manly, D. D., of Furman University; Pres. H. G. Weston, D. D., LL. D., Crozer Theological Seminary; Prof. Howard Osgood, D. D., of Rochester Theological Seminary; Pres. John A. Broadus, D. D., LL. D., of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary.

VI. Character sketches of persons named in the lessons will include:

CYRUS, by Prof. A. E. Waffle, D. D.
MORDECAI, by John Humpstone, D. D.
THE MAN OF UZ, by W. Taylor Smith, B. A.
JOB AND HIS THREE FRIENDS, by Lansing Burrows, D. D.

PAUL, THE CHRISTIAN, by L. A. Crandall, D. D.
PAUL, THE ROMAN CITIZEN, by J. T. Christian, D. D.

☞ The production of THE BAPTIST TEACHER for 1893 will require more than fifty writers and editors.

All the issues of the American Baptist Publication Society are sent out in abundant time to reach the schools before they are actually needed, and the utmost care is taken to avoid errors in direction, so that superintendents may feel sure of having it in early.

Anarchists attempted to blow up the offices of the Carmaux mining company in Paris one day last week, by placing an explosive machine in front of the building. A police officer passing, saw the machine and took it to the police station for investigation, while he and others were examining same it exploded, killing two policemen and fatally injuring others. The whole interior of the building was badly wrecked.

The Populists or Third Party people of Kansas now propose to elect Mrs. Mary E. Lease to the United States Senate. Some "eminent lawyers" are giving an opinion that there is nothing in the constitution of the United States forbidding a woman from becoming a Senator. These "eminent lawyers" must be wrong. The constitution says, "No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained the age of thirty years." The framers of that instrument would never have put that clause in if they had supposed that women would have applied for admission.

T. G. W.

GRIFFIN—Miss Annie J. Griffin was born April 1st, 1878, and departed this life October 29th, 1892. She was a member of Chappel's Hill church and as faithful to every department of its work as any young christian I know. The Sunday-school was her favorite place to work. In the protracted meeting she seemed to be more interested in soul-saving than usual. She prayed and shed tears for her friends that she wanted saved. No one thought that she was doing her last work at Chappel's Hill. Alas! disease seized her on Monday following, and she remained very ill until death came. She was patient, gentle and meek. Notwithstanding her sufferings were severe, not a word of complaint escaped her lips. Just before death, she asked for her parched lips to be wet. She then gave the farewell look, and said, "I must go; can't some one go with me?" Then leaning her head upon Jesus, she fell asleep. Home will miss her. Her place is vacant. The church and Sunday-school will miss her labors of love. How sad to part with one whose life was so pure and helpful to all with whom she was associated. But, thank God, that heavenly influence will never die while memory holds its place. This is the ninth year the writer has been serving the church of which she was a member, and can say that if all the young members would follow Christ as closely as this sister did, our churches would never be bothered with disorderly conduct. This is our loss but her eternal gain. She leaves a widowed mother, one sister, five brothers, many relatives, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. God bless the dear mother who has been so faithful to her dear orphans. Annie is not dead, but has gone before. She will not come to us, but we can go her.

—IS AN—

Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty-eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

A Song of Thanksgiving.

Thanksgiving! Thanksgiving! Of yore,
In the youth of the nation,
When the harvest had yielded its store
There was feast and oblation.
Or when danger had lifted its hand,
From the lips of the living
There rang through the length of the land
A Thanksgiving! Thanksgiving!

Our home was a wilderness then
With the floods to enfold it;
To day with its millions of men,
We rejoice to behold it.
From the sea to the surge of the sea,
We have all for a treasure;
We are blest in the promised to be
In a manifold measure.

War flaunts not a red pennon now,
For the olive is regal;
Like birds that are twin, on one bough
Sit the dove and the eagle.
The clash of the conflict that cleft
We in sorrow remember.
But the fire of the great feud has left
In the ash scarce an ember.

For the fruit of the time of our toil;
For whate're we have fought for;
Whether born of the brain or the soil
Be the meed we have sought for;
For the gifts we have had from his hand
Who is Lord of all living,
Let there ring through the length of the land
A Thanksgiving! Thanksgiving!

—Clinton Scollard in The Ladies' Home Journal.

The Thanksgiving Festival.

Under the sombre skies and in the midst of the out door cheerlessness of bleak November, blooms one of the brightest and best holidays of our New England life. The naked branches of the trees may creak and sway mournfully in the biting wind; the dry leaves may swirl drearily about the garden walks and across the frost-nipped grass; the few withered chrysanthemums may droop sorrowfully upon their stalks; the stubble and the reaped fields may lie bare and brown in the pale sunlight; the cattle may huddle together in the keen northerly gusts; nature indeed may wear her most unattractive garb—yet what matters it at this season of good cheer and of thankfulness to our Heavenly Father, whose promises for the harvest have never yet been unfulfilled? Within our homes abide happiness and joy. From far and near the sons and daughters, with their families, gather once again under the homestead roof. The aged father and mother have failed perceptibly in the year past, but their welcome is as hearty as ever; some of the children have migrated to the West, and cannot join the group—perhaps will never be able to return to the old home; others are weary sufferers on beds of pain; and still others have been called away to that land immortal, where

"By guardian angels led,
Safe from temptation, safe from sin's pollution,
They live, whom we call dead."

Ah! how these vacant chairs in our Thanksgiving reunions make the heart ache and cause the tears to overflow, while instinctively the narrow circle draws together a little closer in renewed affection and appreciation of what remains to love and live for.

But in whatever state the day may find you—bountifully dealt with, or denied your coveted blessing; old and lonely, with only memories for company; friendless and solitary in a boarding-house; poverty pressing close at your heels in life's race, almost denying to you its bare necessaries, much less affording the luxury of a Thanksgiving dinner; fettered by disease within the four walls of your sick room; young and happy, with husband or wife and little ones; serenely content in middle age, the children scattered, and you two left as you began; the treasures God lent you for a little, taken back, like his own—the keepers, or the one gone who made your life here a heaven of delight, and only the empty place left to confront you—— Oh! however it may be with you at this autumn festival, however crushed and bleeding your heart, however bitter your portion, you are not wholly bereft; some mercies must remain for which to be thankful; some one must be in even sorrer straits than you, and needing your help. O be thankful—even amid blinding tears! Lift up your eyes and hearts to the Lord whence cometh your help! Add to your thanksgiving, thanks-doing, and Thanksgiving Day will indeed become a holyday—a feast spiritual, full of wondrous meaning.—From Through Aunt Serena's Spectacles in Zion's Herald.

An Untimely Death.

An untimely death so often follows neglect of a slight cough or cold. If Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein is taken in time it will prevent any evil results. It cures coughs, colds and consumption.

Untruth in the Nursery.

Sleep does not "close tired eyelids over tired eyes" as soon as mamma wishes; little restless two-year-old will not lie still; he turns and kicks; frets and worries; mamma becomes impatient. "If you don't lie still and keep the cover on, the spiders will run down the wall and get on your legs," she exclaims. Or, with her knuckles she makes a noise on the bedside and says, "Lie still, the mice are coming." "The dark will catch you if you lie awake," and numberless expressions of similar import are made use of to soothe the little one to sleep. Mamma knows she is uttering a falsehood when she says such things. But baby is so little he does not know, does not understand; he has only a vague conception of what mamma says, and the impression made by her words is so transient, she argues, if criticised.

"A dewdrop on the infant plant has warped the giant oak forever," and these thoughtlessly uttered falsehoods are not so soon forgotten as mamma thinks. Very soon baby learns that spiders do not lie in wait for the little restless, sleepless babies, are not ever on the point of running down the wall to walk over his uncovered body. He too learns to "make the mice come," and the first lesson in falsehood is stamped upon the pliant nature, never to be wholly eradicated. Mamma said such and such things would happen, but they did not happen; gradually it dawns upon the little mind that mamma says some things which are not true.

A few weeks ago, while talking with a neighbor, I spoke of a recent visit to the greenhouse only a short distance away. She said she had never been to the greenhouse, though she had promised little Harry for a year or more to take him to see the flowers; he seemed so fond of plants, she thought it quite a shame that she had neglected to take him, but there were always so many things to do! Here was an unfulfilled promise of a year's standing. Will the failure to make good such promises have no effect upon the the characters of my children, leave no impression on their minds? Little Polly said to Sue, "My doll's all broke; Mamie broke it; mamma said she'd buy me a new one, but she hasn't done it yet, an' I don't believe she ever will." Had little Polly been deceived until her experience formed a basis for disbelief in her mother's promises?

"Never you mind, sir," retorted Mrs. Pipchin. "Remember the story of the little boy that was gored to death by a mad bull, for asking questions." "If the bull was mad," said Paul, "how did he know that the boy asked questions? Nobody can go and whisper secrets to a mad bull. I don't believe that story." "You don't believe it, sir!" repeated Mrs. Pipchin, amazed. "No," said Paul. "Not if it should happen to have been a tame bull, you little infidel!" said Mrs. Pipchin. How many well-meaning mothers, grandmothers, aunts, cousins, play the role of Mrs. Pipchin! And how many little ones are imbued with the questioning spirit of little Paul Dombey, who have all sorts of incredulous, untruthful answers imposed upon them!

Papa and mamma were going to the neighboring town, to be gone all day. "What will you bring me, mamma?" asked six year-old Alice, as they were driving away. "Oh, if you are a good girl, I'll bring you a silver nothing and a golden wait-a-while," said mamma with a little laugh. All day long, visions of beautiful toys danced before the mental vision of little expectant Alice. She could not form any definite conceptions of what her mamma had promised to bring her, but she felt sure they would be something as beautiful as fairyland, all covered with silver and gold. When mamma returned, little Alice was nervous with joyous anticipations; she waited, and watched, but mamma said nothing about the "promised" gift! At last, able to endure the suspense no longer, she said, "Mamma, I was a good girl; did you bring it for me?" "Bring what, child?" "What you said you'd bring, a silver and gold something." "Oh, you stupid little dear; mamma said she'd bring you a silver nothing and a golden wait-a-while; you see, dear, it doesn't mean anything," and mamma kiss-d the little quivering lips; but she did not know what a heart-struggle, what a bitter disappointment, she had caused by her carelessly uttered words; nor did she dream of adding insult to injury, as it were, when relating the matter to a friend in the presence of heart-broken Alice, laughing the while over the matter-of fact nature of the dear child.—Babyhood.

Many people suffer for years from troublesome and repulsive sores, boils, and eruptions, without ever testing the marvelous curative properties of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The experiment is, certainly, worth trying. Be sure you get Ayer's Sarsaparilla and no other.

Girls and Thanksgiving.

The time has come for every girl to make Thanksgiving. Somebody sighs and wonders what they have to be thankful for; somebody else is very positive that it is certain that she has nothing to be thankful for; but there isn't a human being on the face of God's earth who can't find something for which to say, "I thank Thee, Oh God." One girl has that greatest of all blessings—good health; another the blessings of a bright happy home; another, though she lies on an invalid's couch, the blessings of sunshine and the consideration of those who are less afflicted. One is glad because on her third finger is a bright ring that means she has become mistress of somebody's heart; and another is glad because worry and troubles are all swallowed up in that great pacifier—work. It will do more for you and for me when our hearts are full of sorrow, and our eyes sore with unshed tears, to feel that the hands must be busy and the brain must be at work. If on Thanksgiving Day you can do nothing else, then get down on your knees and thank God for work. It is the best gift that out of his plenty he can offer you.—Selected.

REV. W. E. PENN, author of the popular song-book, "Harvest Bells," makes the following statement:

I am an evangelist (Baptist) well known in the Southern and Western States. I was rapidly getting deaf from catarrh. When in Covington, Ky., five years ago, holding meetings in the First Baptist church, I happened to learn of Dr. J. H. Moore's treatment of catarrh while at the house of a friend. I saw in a moment it was the very thing I needed, and at once got it, and in three months my hearing was perfectly restored. Since that time I have recommended this treatment wherever I have been, and know of several bad cases of lung trouble that were cured by its use.

Several years ago I met a minister on the train who had been compelled to give up his charge on account of lung trouble. I advised him to obtain Dr. Moore's treatment; he did so, and in three months was back at his work, fully restored. All the leading physicians here endorse this treatment; and with great pleasure I give this statement to the public, hoping it will be the means of bringing similar relief to many others.

Dr. Richard Montague's Denominational Sermon.

"WHY I AM A BAPTIST."

They received the word with all readiness of mind, examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so.—Acts 17: 11.

By common consent the Bible is a remarkable book. As a source of history, as a collection of literature, as a volume of moral principles and precepts, as a power in quickening the spiritual nature it is unique. But its claims are also very remarkable. It puts itself forth as a divine book speaking with the authority of God. Moses speaks and legislates in behalf of God. David sings "in the Spirit." Prophets claim to declare the will and word of God. Jesus comes down from heaven to speak the words of him that sent him. To the eleven he promises a special inspiration of the Holy Spirit, leading them into all the truth concerning his mission, and empowering them correctly and adequately to make known the things concerning himself. Peter and John and Paul thus speak in a tone of authority, putting themselves on a plane similar to those holy men who preceded them, who "spake from God, being moved by the Holy Ghost," and whose writings being given through divine inspiration are "able to make wise unto salvation," and are "profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness." Thus the man of God, who studies and follows these sacred Scriptures will be "complete, being furnished thoroughly unto every good work." It is for the patient, devout and obedient examination of these Scriptures, in their Old Testament form—all that then had been given—that these Berean disciples, mentioned in our text, are commended. They tested all that Paul and Silas had to say concerning the Christ by the revelation they had in their Scriptures, and, when satisfied that the new message was harmonious with the old, they received the word with all readiness of mind. That reception lost them social prestige, it identified them with a new and despised sect, it incurred the risk of a contemptuous title, it meant excommunication from the synagogue. With readiness of mind they met it all, however, because the Scriptures, the inspired word of God, laid the duty on them.

I believe that the claims which these Scriptures make for themselves is true, being verified by internal evidence, by unparalleled ethical and spiritual power, by their historic effect on the heart and conscience, by my personal experience of their truth, and above all by the wondrous Christ whom they present. I accept with all my heart the proposition, that the Bible is the sufficient and final source of knowledge concerning God's will and way for man. Other sources of knowledge there surely are,—reason, nature, history, conscience, the church. But our chief source of knowledge, our final source of appeal, in matters of morals and religion, is in the record of God's supernatural revelation of himself which we find in the Bible. For every man who wishes to do God's will, the first, the supreme, the decisive question should be: What do we find revealed in the inspired word of God?

I. Looking, then, to the Bible, we find clearly made known the way of salvation from sin. God has entered into human life, in the person of his essentially equal son. Christ has shown to the full what the Father is. He has made plain what the sons of men may be. He has removed every obstacle to the free exercise of pardon and renewal. He has introduced the mightiest motives conceivable, to repentance and faith. Thus for all to whom he is preached Christ becomes the test, the judge of condition and destiny. According as we receive or refuse him we array ourselves for or against the Father, we are in the way of eternal life, or the way of eternal death. Jesus Christ is the only Saviour, the universal Redeemer, the divine Teacher, the truest Friend, the rightful Master of men. We are to go to all the world, for whom he died, offering to every man who will take it, salvation in his name. We are to observe all things whatsoever he has taught us.

These are the essentials of christian truth as made known in Scripture. All else, however important, is yet minor, subsidiary. He who is in harmony with these essential things is unquestionably a child of God, a disciple of Christ, a possessor of eternal life, a christian. Such disciples are brethren in Christ.

II. But when we look a little further into our Bibles, we find that this christian faith and life is not to remain isolated, unorganized, week. Some other things than faith are exceedingly important, if not strictly essential. Jesus Christ provides for the organization of his disciples into officered and regulated communities, to be known as churches. Against his church, he says, not even Hades shall prevail. To the church, he enjoins, his followers are in given cases to refer certain difficulties and disputes. His authorized apostles, acting for him and in his name, organize individual local churches. So far as the evidence goes, when possible, they gather all disciples into these churches. They exhort believers not to forget the assembling of themselves together. And if you will search your New Testament closely you will find that, without a single exception, these churches were made up of professed, intelligent, credible believers on Jesus Christ. The 3,000 who, as the result of Pentecost, were baptized and added unto the church, were such as "received the word," having personally repented of their sins, and being sufficiently advanced in years and intelligence to be able to continue "in the apostles" teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and prayers." Nor is there in the New Testament a single instance of any one save a personal believer, of age and attainments sufficient to enable him personally to appropriate Jesus as his Lord and Saviour, being received into the christian church. There is no evidence that there were any infant children in Lydia's household, and the implications are against it. The jailer and "all his house" were baptized, but the narrative expressly says that the word of the Lord was spoken to them all, and all that were so baptized "rejoiced, having believed." Crispus, with all his house was doubtless received into the Corinthian church; but we are told that "Crispus * * * believed in the Lord with all his house." As to the constitution of the household of Stephanas we have no information; but analogy would suggest that all were old enough to be believers in Christ. There are numerous families in which all are of responsible years. I have personally received many such households into the church. When Paul says that the children of a believing husband and an unbelieving wife are not unclean, but are holy, and that therefore the unbelieving wife is sanctified in the christian brother, her husband, he is not referring in the remotest manner to church membership or baptism. His argument is this: Let not a christian husband forsake, desert his heathen wife because of her unbelief. She does not contaminate him before God, so that he need put her away. Do his children contaminate him? On the contrary, his association with them purifies them, and in like manner does his union with his wife purify her. Instead of lending any sanction to infant baptism it is declared by such eminent Pedobaptist commentators as Neander, Meyer and De Wette that the passage proves its non-existence in the church at that time, and yields no justification for it at any time. Christ's blessing of little children is wholly irrelevant to the question. Neither he nor his disciples baptized infants then or afterward. His words simply mean that those of a child like spirit are his disciples.

It is sometimes urged that there is indeed no specific scriptural authority, no single text, in support of infant baptism; but that the spirit of the New Testament suggests and endorses it. To me the precise opposite seems to be the case. The Jewish commonwealth, its circumcision, its privileges, its ceremonies, were based on a physical descent from one man, Abraham. The christian church, its ordinances, its blessings are based on a spiritual relationship of the believer with his Saviour. He who has faith is the true Israelite. From type God proceeds to the anti-type. The old economy of Moses is not to guide us in the economy of Christ. The typical has passed into the real, the prophetic into the actual. And so Paul styles the members of the Corinthian church, "Them that are sanctified in Jesus Christ, called ones, saints, i. e. holy." This designates personal believers, and believers only. That our children should from their birth be dedicated to God, is taught, implied, directed in Holy Writ. That they should be introduced into the christian church, that they should be baptized, until in that baptism they can personally profess Christ is a belief and a practice for which I can find absolutely no Bible evidence. According to the Bible the church should consist only of regenerate persons, persons who have repented of their sins, believed on Christ, been baptized into his name, and are seeking to do his will; of persons on probation in the church; of persons entitled to a part, but not to all of the privileges of the church; of persons baptized but not believed to be renewed; declared to be Jesus' disciples, but declared such not by themselves but by someone else and that not as a present fact, but as a condition hoped for in years to come—of anything save an actually regenerate church, an actually penitent church, an actually believing church, an actually praying church; of anything designated a church save it be a company, local, provincial, world-wide or universal, of new born souls, who by God's grace are called out from a wicked world and on the basis of a common faith and hope are banded together for christian worship and service. I can, with my Meyer and Ellicott, and Lightfoot and De Wette, super-excellent Pedobaptist interpreters all, lying before me,—find absolutely not a shred or trace in my Bible. The church and the world, according to the Bible, are to be kept distinct. Into the church are received only professed believers in Jesus Christ. Let the little ones come, our Bible indeed does say, but let them come by the path of personal faith. Let us train our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, the apostle indeed urges, but nowhere does he say that we are to induct them into the christian church or introduce them to christian baptism sooner than their personal faith authorizes us so to do.

That without personal faith anyone is entitled to baptism, but not to the Lord's Supper the Bible nowhere intimates. The faith that alone qualifies for the latter is a faith essential for the scriptural reception of the former. For each personal faith is a scriptural pre-requisite. Such, I am convinced, is the universal form declaration and implication of the oracles of God. Such is the teaching of the Bible.

III. But the Bible not only prescribes the nature of the church, as a society of regenerate persons; it enjoins on the organized disciples of Christ the observance of certain ordinances. Baptism is, according to the apostolic commission, appointed for all believers, and is to be maintained until "the end of the world." The Lord's Supper shows forth Jesus' death "until he come," and is a memorial service binding on all who would honor their Saviour. The church is not merely an organization, but a society embodying its faith, hope and life in divinely appointed ordinances, which as object lessons teach the world its central beliefs. "Go, * * make disciples of all the nations, * * baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost;" "Take, eat * * * Drink ye all of it * * * This do in remembrance of me;" are the veritable words of the Lord Jesus himself, understood by his apostles, and by his disciples in all ages, as binding on the church for all time. They convey commands which when obeyed, have been fraught with choicest blessings to mankind. We should obey them.

Now suppose one wholly unversed in the history of religious discussion, were as a pure unconcerned student to examine his Bible in order to learn its teachings concerning these ordinances. What would he find? What does the Bible say, for example, about baptism?

First of all the investigator would find, as we have already seen, that baptism was administered, so far as New Testament evidence goes, only to professed believers in Christ. As to what baptism is, he would first be struck with the fact that the word "baptize" is not a native English word, but is a Greek word, transferred, but not translated, into our English Bible. Turning to his Greek lexicons, he would find that every first-rate contemporary lexicographer—Liddell and Scott, in their latest edition, Grimm, Thayer, Sophocles—assigns one and only one meaning to the word, viz: "to immerse, to dip." Every figurative meaning goes back to this. I well remember the answer of Professor Sophocles, himself a native Greek, and a recognized scholar of greatest eminence, whose learning compassed the entire literature of his people,—ancient, middle, patriotic, and modern—when a student said to him: "But, professor, does not the word 'baptize' sometimes mean in the New Testament less than to sink or to plunge?" "If anybody says that 'baptize' anywhere means less than to dip, you tell him that he does not know Greek." The Greeks' understanding of the term is apparent in the fact that the Greek church today baptizes by immersion and immersion alone.

Next, our student would notice that the circumstances of the baptisms of the New Testament agree with the meaning of the word itself as just given. John baptizes in the Jordan, takes, Jesus for baptism into the same river. He baptizes in Aenon, near to Salem, because there is much water there. When the eunuch was baptized, both he and Philip "went down into the river," and after the ordinance, "came up out of the water."

It has, indeed, been urged that in speaking of Jewish ceremonies of hand washing and cup washing, the word "baptizo" is used in a sense lower than to dip. I can but reply, that an examination of the passages involved, in the Revised Testament, will show that the best scholarship no longer maintains this point.

It has been urged that according to Acts 2: 41, and 4: 4, eight thousand persons were baptized in Jerusalem in a short period, and that there was not water enough in the city to immerse so many. But Jerusalem was full of pools large enough to immerse any number. One who has personally examined the situation credibly assures me that in the Pool of Siloam alone many candidates could have been immersed at one and the same time. The habits of the East, were agreeable to such use. Then, five thousand, instead of eight thousand, was probably the number of believers in Jerusalem at the time referred to. Nor is it certain that three thousand were baptized on the day of Pentecost. But even eight thousand could easily have been immersed in a day by the twelve apostles and their assistants. On July 3d, 1878, 2,222 persons were immersed into the fellowship of the First Baptist church of Angole, India, in less than nine hours, only two administrators, native preachers, officiating at a time, and the ordinance was reverently, solemnly, and impressively fulfilled. On the 28th of last December into that same church were solemnly baptized 1,671 professed believers in Christ—entire households in many cases being included in this number. Native preachers, two at a time, deliberately immersed this number easily in four hours and twenty five minutes. The simple fact is that immersion can be administered in a reverent manner just as rapidly as sprinkling or pouring. It is a mere matter of arithmetic to show that in a single afternoon, were even only eight administrators acting at a time, 8,000 people could easily be immersed, if need be. It is to be hoped that we shall not much longer hear this objection to immersion cited by intelligent men.

And finally, our investigator would find that the significance assigned to baptism in the New Testament necessarily involved immersion. It is probably called "the laver of regeneration" in Titus 3: 5, i. e. it symbolizes cleansing, purification, the renewal of the Holy Ghost. But this is only a part, and the smallest part of the case. Paul, in Coloss. 2: 12, says: "Having been buried with him in baptism, wherein ye were also raised with him through faith in the working of God, who raised him from the dead." And Bishop Lightfoot, of the English church, in expounding this passage rightly gives its meaning when he says: "Baptism is the grave of the old man, and the birth of the new. As he sinks beneath the baptismal waters the believer buries there all his corrupt affections and past sins; as he emerges thence, he rises regenerate, quickened to new hopes and a new life. * * * Thus baptism is an image of his participation both in the death and in the resurrection of Christ." Precisely this is the apostle's meaning when he writes to the Romans (Rom. 6: 3): "Are ye ignorant that all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death? We were buried therefore through baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, some also might walk in the newness of life." Thus, then, according to the inspired apostle, baptism is, as it were, "a mold of christian doctrine." Into it are run the cardinal facts and fundamental experiences of the christian faith. It derives its significance chiefly from its embodiment of these facts and experiences. It is a symbol of cleansing, to be sure, but more. It symbolizes the death and the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, which are the ground of all our hope. It pictures the sinner's death to sin, and resurrection to righteousness. Blot out every word of Scripture, and if this ordinance alone were to remain, observed and interpreted in its apostolic purity, the gist of the gospel would by it be conveyed to men. Renewal by the Holy Ghost, salvation through the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, a new life of holy obedience in loyal love to that risen Redeemer, these are its message to all. Nothing can be scriptural baptism which does not symbolize these truths. Baptism being a symbol, and a symbol only, if the symbolism vanishes, then the ordinance vanishes; and we have a ceremony, reverent, devout, beautiful, it may be but an institution of man, and not the authorized and authoritive ordinance of God, as given in his word.

It is not necessary to dwell at such length over the Lord's Supper. It is plain to all that it is celebrated, scripturally, in the use of bread and wine, in remembrance of the Saviour's death. For whom, according to the New Testament, is this ordinance designed? Clearly enough for professed christians. With all others it would be meaningless. But are repentance and faith the only scriptural qualifications for this right? It would not so seem. For, according to command and example, the disciple's first duty is to be baptized, not to break bread. The twelve apostles, either as disciples of John or as followers of Jesus—having themselves been sent out on baptizing tours—were in all probability baptized believers when they sat down with the baptized Jesus to the Paschal feast. At any rate, in every subsequent recorded observance of the Supper, the statement or implication is plain that only baptized believers partook of the meal. Indeed the very significance of the ordinance precludes such an assumption. For an unbaptized believer to celebrate the Lord's Supper is, scripturally, a reversal of the ideas involved in the rites. Baptism is but once administered, the Supper is often to be received. In baptism we first profess Christ, we put on Christ. In the Supper we re-appropriate Christ, we seek growth in grace and knowledge of our Lord. The one ordinance makes the inception, the other the continuance of the christian life.

And so, to me it seems clear that, in the Apostolic church membership was limited to penitent believers, credibly regenerate by the Holy Spirit, who before men had put on Christ, by being buried with him in water, into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. So far as the evidence goes in the practice of the New Testament church the Lord's Supper was received only by baptized, i. e., immersed believers in Christ. According to the New Testament, baptism is the scriptural, the logical, the natural and the orderly precedent of the Lord's Supper. The reception of Christ precedes his renewed appropriation. Birth antedates growth. Symbolic acceptance of Christ goes before symbolic fellowship with Christ.

I am aware that circumstances have greatly changed since the New Testament time, and possibly it is doubtful what in some respects the apostles would now do in administering the supper were they here. Surely they would be courteous, loving and respectful of christian liberty. But I see no reason to suspect that they would modify their mode, or extend their range of baptism; and holding to that, they would necessarily hold to the proper relation of the communion to it. If we do what they did, we probably will be doing as they would do. The apostolic order was, first believe; then be baptized; then break bread, maintain prayers, give alms, live a holy life, awaiting him who should come a second time unto salvation.

Work at Mt. Nebo and Forbush.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I have just closed a six days meeting at Mt. Nebo, a good station for the Baptists to build a church-house and do a great deal of good for the Master. The Friends and Methodists united with me and preached some for the people, which the Lord blessed to the depletion of the kingdom of Satan and building up of the kingdom of our Lord upon the ruins thereof. We had a glorious revival all over the entire neighborhood. There were thirty-eight conversions during the meeting. Twenty-eight joined the Baptist church, and four went to the Friends. The Lord be praised for the number that joined the Baptists. At the close of the meeting I baptized twenty five in the waters of the Yadkin river. There was a large congregation to witness the ordinance after which the hand of fellowship was extended by the Baptists, and hand of welcome by the Methodists and Friends.

I am now at one of my churches at Forbush in a protracted meeting. Bro. W. G. Brown is preaching for me.

I go from here to Swaim's next week.

A Lesson from the Seed.

In the parable of the sower, Jesus said, "The seed is the word of God." I want to call your attention to a lesson as we contemplate the seed in nature. The seed is intended for dispersion. It is not intended to remain where it grew.

Look at the peculiar formation of a few seeds on the table before me. Here is one of the Trumpet Creeper. In the middle we see the seed sack, and on either side a wing, by which the seed caught in the wind is carried miles away from its birthplace. Here we have seed of the Yellow Snap Dragon. As in the former case, the seed sack is in the middle. Surrounding this is a fine membrane which, under a microscope, is finer than the finest lace. When the seed is caught by the wind, this membrane serves as a circular wing; but when the seed is blown on the water of the little stream which flows near by, this same membrane serves as a life preserver, and the little seed is carried perhaps many miles from the parent plant, when it finds a lodgment in some convenient corner of the stream, and there takes root and bears fruit. Here is the seed of the common Dandelion. At the lower end of a stem about three quarters of an inch long is the seed sack. At the other end of this stem is a feathery down. The whole looks very much like a tiny parachute. When caught by the wind, the seed goes sailing away ultimately to sink to the earth, where it catches in the grass, and is held fast by little hooks which God caused to sow on the seed sack for this purpose. The stem then breaks off, and the seed in due time, under favorable conditions, will sink to the earth and bear fruit. Thousands of seeds are carried on the wings of birds and in the mud on their feet. Other seed is made to withstand the action of water and so is carried thousands of miles. Thus the cocoanuts of the Seychelles, after being carried on a voyage of four hundred leagues, are cast by the waves on the shores of Malabar, where they grow far away from the country which first gave them birth.

So the seed which is the word of God is intended for dispersion. We have no right to lock it up in the garners of our own hearts to stay there. God intends this seed for dispersion. What a missionary sermon we find here! What an incentive to all kinds of Bible work. When we send the Word to the heathen across the sea, we are doing with it just what God wanted us to do. When we send Bible readers or missionaries to destitute places, we are using the seed in such a way that we may expect God's blessing. Show me a human heart anywhere, and I will show you a heart in which God wants the gospel seed planted. And unlike some of the seed in nature, which will not grow in any kind of soil, this seed which is the Word of God will thrive wherever it finds a lodgment. Will the young people of our Baptist churches help to sow this seed? Then in the harvest we shall be made glad in the Master's presence as we shall see the fruit of our labor. Begin now, sowing seed in the place nearest to you. The field is the world, the seed is the Word of God.

REV. C. T. BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
J. C. CADDELL, AGENT AND CORRESPONDENT.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

Since the price of cotton has advanced nearly three cents a pound, is it not a good time for our brethren in the cotton sections to pay up their arrearages to the RECORDER? It would be a handsome way to acknowledge the blessing as coming from the Supreme Ruler of all events.

If all of the delinquents on our subscription books would remember the editor with these advances of prices and prospect of better times, it would enable him to pay up his indebtedness, and thereby remove a great burden, and cause him to move on in his work with a lighter heart and a more cheerful spirit.

A prompt response to this notice will in every instance be highly appreciated.

THE PIERSON EPISODE.

Not long before the death of the lamented Spurgeon, the religious world, and especially the Baptist portion of it, were surprised to hear that he had invited Dr. A. T. Pierson of Philadelphia, Pa., to fill his pulpit during a temporary absence on his part. Various explanations followed. Many surmised that Dr. Pierson was about to become a Baptist. Some claimed that Mr. Spurgeon thought he was a Baptist when he invited him to occupy his pulpit. Others no doubt thought that the invitation was only the logical result of Mr. Spurgeon's well-known views on the subject of communion. These guesses, surmises, and explanations went on for some time. The religious papers of the day were favored with bits of information bearing on the case, more or less favorable to the opinions held by those who hoped and those who feared. After the death of Mr. Spurgeon, and Dr. Pierson's return to America, the latter continued to write and say quite loving things about the Baptists. His missionary magazine contained glowing accounts of the Baptist centennial celebration in England at Carey's home and in his church; and the language used by him in complimenting the deep piety and remarkable zeal and intelligence of the large body of Baptists that assembled at the above mentioned places to honor the memory of the man whom he and they delighted to praise was, to say the least of it, rather unusual as coming from a leading Presbyterian minister.

Just before Dr. Pierson's recent sailing for Europe, things it seems had reached such a state, in and out of his own denomination, that he felt the time had come for him to end all surmises by speaking plainly as to his church status. In a letter to the Philadelphia presbytery, and again in a letter to the editor of the New York Tribune, he plainly avowed that he was a Presbyterian, "loyal to his church," and "in no sense a Baptist in conviction." After all this he is now in London filling Mr. Spurgeon's pulpit! What next? As an interesting addendum to the situation, we see it stated in a recent publication that at a recent public service in the Tabernacle some one in the congregation, who is a warm admirer of Mr. Thos. Spurgeon, and who doubtless prefers him as pastor, asked Mr. Pierson publicly if "he intended to receive immersion." The question created great confusion, which did not subside until the disturber (?) of the peace was put out.

Now, about this whole affair we have some opinions, and we proceed to express them, prefacing with a few questions. In the first place, did Mr. Spurgeon actually think that Dr. Pierson was a Baptist? We have never seen the statement denied. We hardly think it is true. It would have been a strange mistake for one of Mr. Spurgeon's intelligence to make. If there is any truth in the report, however, and Mr. Pierson saw any evidence in Mr. Spurgeon's letters that he was under the impression that he was a Baptist, it is passing strange that he did not remove the impression before accepting the invitation.

Again, how did it happen that the religious atmosphere became so thick with the reports that Dr. Pierson was about to become a Baptist? Who were the authors of such reports? Did Dr. Pierson say anything to give them currency, or did they simply originate in the brain of over-sanguine Baptists? And why was Dr. Pierson so long in correcting them? He doubtless reads the religious papers of England and America; and it is quite natural to suppose that he was familiar with the news in Baptist papers while filling a Baptist pulpit. He must have known that these reports compromised him, if he expected to remain Presbyterian, and the great church he was serving, if they expected to be true to their convictions. Silence is often golden, but there are times when silence may not be a virtue, and to speak a duty. Why Dr. Pierson was so long in speaking may be better known to him than to us; but his long silence, when a few words would have broken the "uncertain spell," seems to us contrary to the spirit of true candor, and does not conform to our ideal of true manhood. It is just possible that an explanation may be found in that intense desire for notoriety, now noticeable among some English and American preachers, which prompts them to suffer and enjoy almost anything within the bounds of possible propriety that brings them prominently before the public. Henry Ward Beecher has many imitators, in this respect, among the "lesser lights" of the American ministry. Well, let the Doctor's reason be what it may have been, that silence was not golden, but strange and cranky.

Again, considering Mr. Spurgeon's views on the communion question, and remembering the fact that the open communion Baptists of England have been for many years rather distinguished for their marked affiliation with other denominations, we need not be surprised at the first or second invitation sent Dr. Pierson to fill the metropolitan pulpit. For our Presbyterian brethren we do not hesitate to express our admiration and christian love. There is almost complete concord between their doctrines and ours. We differ materially on baptism and church government; but there is a religious mixture about this Pierson affair we do not like. If the true sentiments of many of our sturdy Presbyterian friends were known, they would be found to think about it even as we do. Why should even an able man straddle the denominational fence, and try to hold two faiths at once?

And what is to be the future of the great church that stands as a monument to Mr. Spurgeon's labors? Some may say if Dr. Pierson can capture that church for the Presbyterians the achievement would be worth all the labor and holy (?) tact he has used. It strikes us that such tact is quite questionable in its moral tone; and futher, that it would have been more consistent and manly in him to have declined the second invitation especially as he expected so soon to avow again his strong Presbyterian principles. As to the metropolitan church, in this country we would say they are drifting from their Baptist moorings, and if they should prefer a Pedobaptist ministry, and thus ignore their principles and their baptism, we would cease to regard them as a Baptist church.

The fact is demonstrated beyond doubt, by the history of English Baptists, that the prevalence of open communion sentiments, instead of strengthening, only weakens the Baptist cause. In America, to the contrary, where the practice of restricted communion prevails we find Baptists rapidly increasing, and denominational autonomy well preserved. There are other causes, we think, besides our custom of restricted communion, which operate here to a greater extent than in England, and which we think have had, under God, much to do with our remarkable progress and growth. Among these we may mention our sturdy struggle for religious liberty in the earlier history of the Republic, and the adaptability of Baptist polity to the spirit and genius of American institutions. Explain it as we may, however, where open communion sentiments have prevailed there the Baptist cause has languished, and to the contrary our success is most marked where restricted communion is the rule and not the exception. This looks like God's divine seal of approval upon the practice of a people who esteem principle above expediency, or popularity, and who believe in a faithful adherence to his word, though such adherence should fly into the face of much of the religious "sentiment" of the age.

THE Fayetteville Street Baptist Church, Raleigh, has at last decided to move up town. They have entered into contract for the building of a house on the corner of Fayetteville and South streets. They have selected a beautiful and eligible lot, and we hope to see at an early day a house of worship thereon in keeping with the site. Those of our citizens who are able and willing to assist benevolent enterprises, will do well to consider the propriety of contributing to this new church building. The church is composed of pious people, but poor in this world's goods, and any assistance in this work will be thankfully received. Brethren John T. Pullen and T. W. Blake will receive contributions and see that they are duly appropriated. We hope our brethren of the churches in the city, together with our citizens generally, will act the liberal part in this matter and make it easy for this little band of worthy brethren to have a suitable house of worship in a convenient place.

WE have recently heard it remarked that there were never before so many men who could speak well on the political questions which are now being discussed. It may be there are more men who feel an active interest in public affairs than ever before. This, however, is certain, there has never before been such facilities, in easy reach of the public, to become informed upon economic questions as now.

No longer ago than when Calhoun and Clay were leaders in politics the issues upon which they differed and the speeches they made were not seen in print, except in bound copies of these speeches or upon the Journal of the Records, of Congress, and hence the great majority of people never knew such discussions were going on much less did they feel that their interest and that of their families were even remotely affected by these issues, let them terminate in any way they might. How did the public come in possession of the convicting, and at the same time of the convincing, information which prompted and directed the actions of so many?

We have just remarked upon the great and increased number of speakers, whose voices were not only heard in every hamlet but at every cross-road and election precinct from one end of the country to the other. But where did these speakers get their speeches? We answer, that for the most part they spoke literally out of the newspapers. For when the speakers stopped at night to rest their tired limbs and hoarse throats, their speeches for the next day were being prepared during the midnight hours by the great dailies in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston. These papers contained the thoughts of the best posted men in the nation, and while the articles they wrote from day to day were elaborate and comprehensive, they were put so plainly, earnestly and practically, as to come into the mental grasp of the readers, who had but little time, it may be, to give to their reading. The speeches of the speakers were, to a great extent, only reinforcements of what had already appeared in the papers.

If the foregoing be true, and if the secular papers can fit a greater number of men for efficient service in the discussion of secular affairs, may we not hope that our religious papers, as they shall become stronger and more comprehensive in their scope of teaching, shall become more effective and more decided in their influences on the religious world?

....Rev. A. B. Dunaway of Churchland, Va., has had a good meeting. There were twenty-seven conversions, which was ninety per cent. of the unconverted of the community. Rev. J. R. Harrison, who recently left here for that point, assisted in the meeting.

....Revs. S. F. Conrad and C. C. Haymore have just closed a series of meetings at Pinnacle, on the Cape Fear and Yadkin Valley railroad, at which sixteen direct conversions are reported, with a general spiritual interest awakened.—Winston Republican. Nov. 24.

....Rev. J. B. Marsh writing from Piedmont, S. C., says: "I am, so far, pleased with my new field. I shall have enough to tax hands, head and heart. We have six hundred members, and the pastoral work will be heavy. But it is for the Master, and hard work for him is easy."

The Convention to be held in this city next week is not simply for the preachers, however important it may be for every pastor in the Convention to be present. There ought to be at least five hundred of the best professional men and successful business men and farmers in the State present.

....Sister E. C. Edwards, mother of Rev. J. H. Edwards, pastor at Goldsboro, was the first to organize a Woman's Missionary Society of Baltimore. Sister Edwards, though upwards of seventy years of age, is unusually strong in body and vigorous in intellect, and useful and helpful to her pastor in his varied work among his people.

....Union Thanksgiving service, composed of the Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian churches of Raleigh, was held in the Presbyterian church last Thursday. The contribution was divided between the Oxford, the Baptist and Presbyterian orphan asylums. The sermon was preached by Rev. J. N. Cole of the Edenton Street M. E. Church.

....Five Trustees of Wake Forest College have died during the past year, viz: S. S. Lea of Caswell, George W. Thompson of Wake, L. L. Polk of Raleigh, Reuben McBrayer of Asheville, and A. R. Vann of Wake Forest.——Within the past two years five North Carolina State officers have died in office, viz: Col. William L. Saunders, Secretary of State, and Gov. Daniel G. Fowle, in April, 1891; Judge J. J. Davis of the Supreme Court in August, 1892; Chief Justice A. S. Merrimon and State Treasurer Donald W. Bain in November, 1892. Chief Justice W. N. H. Smith died in office just three years to a day before the death of Chief Justice Merrimon. So many deaths of the State officers at the capital have never before occurred during one administration.

....Next Sunday is the last meeting before the Convention. Will the pastors of the churches please give the brethren who are in arears for the RECORDER a chance to send in their subscriptions? If we had been as unmindful of some of our brethren as they have been of us, they would hardly have known where or when the Convention is to meet.

....Dr. A. T. Pierson, who has, it seems, for sometime past stealthily sought to lead a Baptist church from its denominational stability, in the December number of "The Missionary Review of the World," calls the war of '61 to '65 between the States "the war of the rebellion." We are not surprised that Dr. Pierson should thus show his bitterness towards the South.

....The Congregationalists have ordained five women to preach the gospel. Their success as pastors has amounted to nothing. It is said their severest critics are the women of the congregations to which they preach. The only successful way to preach the gospel is along the New Testament lines. If other lines are followed, another gospel must be substituted for that given in the Bible.—Western Recorder.

....Rev. W. C. Tyree of Durham writes Nov. 26th: "Bro. Jesse Howell preached for us at the First church last Sunday morning, and at the Second church at night. He is now in his eighty-second year, and quite feeble, but his sermon was excellent, and I hope did us all good. For many years he was pastor of what is now the First church in Durham and many old friends were glad to see and hear him again."

....The Calvary Baptist church of New York City, which for years has been noted for the extent and beauty of its Thanksgiving adornment, on last Thursday was not decorated. Dr. MacArthur, the pastor, explained the situation before the sermon. He said: "This painful lack of decoration is all due to the election of Mr. Cleveland." He further said: "As a good Republican, I am not in a mood for decorations."

....Brethren C. J. Nelson and G. L. Finch held an interesting meeting at Nelson's Chapel last week. This church, which is now completed, except the plastering, was founded and built by Bro. Nelson at his own expense, costing something over six hundred dollars. It is fifteen miles from any other Baptist church, and before the putting up of this church no Baptist had preached in the neighborhood for more than fifty years.

....The Newbern brethren are just awaking to a new interest in the State Mission work. Since the Association the Newbern church has pledged four hundred dollars for State Missions in the Association. Brother John C. Whitty has just begun to visit the churches and has already raised in cash and in personal pledges over two hundred dollars for this work. Bro. Ford is specially encouraged in his work and sees a new era for the work in the Atlantic Association.

....The Kinston brethren have moved their church on a very desirable lot. No better location could have been selected in the town. The house is now complete, having been repainted and thoroughly repaired. Bro. Stough is delighted with his brethren, and every feature of the work is encouraging. Dr. R. H. Lewis is again at his old place in the school room much to the satisfaction of his friends, who regretted to give him up when he went to the mountains a few years ago.

....May I, in behalf of the Centennial Committee, say to the pastors of your State through your columns that their reply to the letter recently sent them from me, is earnestly desired at once. There have been sent out 9,000 letters to the pastors of the South, containing a postal card to be filled up and returned. Brethren, please return this postal card, filled out, at once, as directed. Don't delay. The Committee earnestly asks your prompt co-operation in this matter.—F. M. Ellis, Baltimore, Md.

....Bro. J. H. Edwards is entirely restored to health, and is doing some of his best work in his church at Goldsboro. Bro. Edwards is a strong preacher, and is relying fully upon the efficacy of the pure gospel to sustain the growth and progress of the church. In speaking of his church he said, "I feel confident we have enough religion in our church to prevent any serious trouble from any outside circumstance." This good brother has placed us under new obligations for his earnest and successful efforts to circulate the RECORDER among his people.

....The Michigan Advocate tells of a prominent minister who when invited to preach to a colored congregation, took occasion to give them some wholesome doctrine on the moralities of life. In the closing prayer the colored preacher got even with him in the following fashion: "O Lord, bless the brother what preached to us to-night. He's brought us the gospel about good livin'. He's done told us we mus' quit lyin', and quit stealin', and quit gettin' drunk; and he's told us we must pay our debts, and keep our word good. O Lord, bless him wid power and strength to practice what he preaches."

....The following from Bro. J. E. Peterson of Goldsboro is one among the many kind expressions we have had for the interesting and instructive articles which have appeared in the RECORDER from Judge R. W. Winston: "Your subscribers here, doubtless like many others all over the State, are delighted with the communications of Judge Winston. These alone are worth more to a business man than the subscription to the paper. We get condensed principles of law that affect us at many points, and many of which would not be known to the average man if he had the law books in his hands. We trust this valuable information will continue to find a place in your paper, and that the RECORDER may have a bright future as it richly deserves."

....The distinguished educator, President Abernethy of Rutherford College, in North Carolina, claims that the editor of this paper advised him to tackle the editor of the Southern Christian Advocate. It is safe to predict that the famous scholar and divine in the hill country of Carolina will not pay much attention to any suggestion from this office again. In good truth, it is breaking upon the intellect of that cultured college circle that the scribe by the river of Powhatan did hasten to ascend to the crotch of a tree to enjoy the tussle "in sight," after he had "sicced" the yaller dorg onto the short, stout and wrinkled nosed Tige that uses about Columbia.—Richmond Advocate.

3,227 Baptists Called On in One Day.

On Nov. 24th, we sent out from the Mission Rooms 3,227 personal letters, a copy of which is given below.

And now we have two things to say:

1. To the Pastors.—The facts in the letter are too serious to be neglected, and the debt is too large to carry to the Convention. In a time like this the burden ought to be divided, and not at the Convention assumed by a few faithful men. It will not do to take the debt over into next year. Home and Foreign Missions must have the right of way after the Convention till the 1st of next May.

Now, will not each pastor in our Convention, on Sunday, 11 o'clock a. m., Dec. 4th, 1892, after the sermon, call the attention of his people to the letter, and ask each one who has received the same, to comply, if they can do so, with the request at once? If there should be others in the congregations who would unite with these in sending each a dollar, give them, in some practical way, an opportunity to do so.

2. To those who have received, through the mail, this letter.—So far as we could see this was the only thing that we could do—address you this personal letter and ask for this small amount. It is your work—our work—the Lord's work. We are in a hard place. We wish to get out, and we are trying to do it. If we have asked you to do what you cannot do, we beg pardon. This is a hard year, and we should help each other. Please send the one dollar at once, if you can do so. Yes, thank you.

But the following is the letter sent out to 3,227 good people:

"Dear Reader:—We are in trouble—very great trouble. Here now, November 24th, 1892, are the facts: To-day, after all reports are in, there is due on State Mission work for this year $3,227.50.

"We have done well—better than ever before—all have helped—you have done so, and we thank you for it. But every dollar of the above ought to be raised at once. It is due hard-worked, needy Baptist preachers (our missionaries)—114 of them—and we want to pay them before our Convention meets here December 8—13. This appeal is, therefore, sent to 3,227 of the best people we have ever known—you are one of them—asking each one to send to J. D. Boushall one dollar—just one dollar. We believe in you, in each one to whom this appeal is sent. We think they will help us in this work just now. In this way we will divide the burden, and no one will, perhaps, be greatly pressed, and these faithful toiling men will be paid and the debt will be out of our way, and the Convention can give its time to plans for next year's work. Do, therefore, excuse me for this personal appeal, and enclose a one dollar bill in a letter at our risk, and mail it to J. D. Boushall. He is the Treasurer of the Convention, and will acknowledge every dollar received in the Recorder.

"We have faith in you, and therefore thank you in advance. May the Lord help us in this work.

"Truly your servant,

"C. Durham, Cor. Sec.

CANTON MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

Twenty years ago all the Protestant missionaries in Canton organized a Conference to meet every two months and discuss questions pertaining to the work in which they are engaged. At each meeting an essay is read by some member on some subject pertaining to the work, and then its arguments and conclusions are very freely criticised by the members of the Conference.

At the meeting in February the paper was presented by Bro. E. J. Simmons, of our mission on the methods of testing the fitness of applicants for church membership. He presented the Baptist views, which we believe to be the teachings of Scripture, that we should insist not only on a knowledge of the fundamental truths of the gospel, but also upon evidences of an experimental acquaintance with the power of converting grace, and then presented some practical suggestions as to how we may test one's professions of conversion. It had been expected that the essay would be vigorously attacked, but much to our surprise, every one endorsed its positions very cordially. Some of us were not able to see that any room was left by such endorsement for Infant Baptism; but we felt greatly encouraged to find that all the missionaries here were working along these lines. And I have had no reason to question the purpose of all the missionaries here, both from America and England, to insist on evidences of a change of heart in all whom they admit to church membership. I fear that some are less careful in applying the tests and carrying out these principles than Baptists are; but there are evidences that all are doing work for the Master.

At the next Conference the paper was read by an intelligent and skilful physician, connected with the Presbyterian mission. The subject was "Waste of Energy in Mission Work." One thing which he mentioned as a waste of energy was the numerous churches and denominations working in the same field and he urged the union of all into one. At the same meeting a series of resolutions was presented by an English Wesleyan, with reference to the union of all Chinese churches in this Province into one grand Chinese church, (and that I supposed to be spelled with a capital letter). On these resolutions a "grand committee" was appointed, after the manner of Henry Clay's day in Congress, and after the same model, the committee at the next meeting brought in a "compromise" report. This report recommends that all the members use their influence with the Chinese christians to effect a "confederation" of Chinese churches. In the discussion of this report, both in the committee and in the Conference, the Baptists took the ground that if it meant simply an organization for discussion of methods and questions of work, there was already such "confederation" in Conference and in a similar organization of Chinese preachers; but if it meant an organization of legislation and control, looking to organic union, the Baptists must oppose it. The advocates of the measure explained it to mean the latter. So it was replied that Baptists regard denominational peculiarities as matters of grave importance, and so they can not join in any movement which must result in the suppression of these peculiar doctrines; those who hold that denominational lines are drawn about matters of little consequence, may unite and ought to unite; when they have done so, and given the world an example of the much talked of christian charity, it will be time enough to say hard things about the Baptists for a want of charity. When the report was voted on, the Baptists all voted against it. Dr. Graves and Bro. Simmons also asked to have their names recorded as voting against it. It was then resolved to send a copy of the report and resolutions to all the mission Boards in England and America. It is reported that the information sent was that only Dr. Graves and Bro. Simmons opposed the plan. The next proposition was to appoint a committee to report on a basis of union effort in regard to certain questions, as a union translation of the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' Creed, a union hymn book, a division of fields of labor and the like. Here the Baptists proposed that the question had become a question of denominational differences, and so could have no place in an interdenominational conference. At last it was agreed to call a special meeting of all who favored such union, and so the matter was removed from the Conference, and it pursues the even tenor of its way. It was reported that the meeting was held and various committees appointed with reference to points about which it was thought agreement might be reached, but if any other meeting has been held, I have never heard of it.

For a long time I have heard Baptists held up as schismatics, who divide "the body of Christ," (though I never had much faith in the possibility of such division), and I have often said, let other denominations, who confess that their divisions are on points of little consequence, give us an example of union and show its beauties, and then we will review the grounds upon which we maintain separate denominational existence. Hence I am the more pleased to see them make the attempt, unfettered by the presence of the Baptists. In order to give them the opportunity without let or hindrance, I was quite willing, if it were necessary, for the Baptists to withdraw from the Conference and leave them the field free and unobstructed. This is practical "Christian Union," of which we have heard so much theory in certain quarters in America. We shall see how it will work in actual practice.

While the question was still under discussion, one of the Chinese preachers was asked what he thought of the plan. His reply was that the Baptists could not at all unite with other denominations, because they were too loose in discipline. As a case in point, he told of certain church members at a country station, who would go to church on Sunday and then while they were in town do their buying for the next week; but the Baptists, he said, would not do so. He mentioned a village Baptist church where nearly all the twenty male members would lead in prayer or conduct a prayer-meeting; while in the same village was a church of another denomination having about the same number of members, and not one would lead in prayer save the preacher.

Letter from Bro. Newton.

My Dear Bro. Durham:—Yours to hand a few days ago. It followed me on from Lagos and hence I was a long time getting it.

The Board seeing that we had been in that dangerous climate as long as it was safe to risk it, kindly gave us permission to come away to build up our wasted systems. It was a timely favor for I began to fear for the safety of at least some. It was a great trial to me to leave for my work was in a most interesting condition. We were receiving new members occasionally and were engaged in taking a centennial collection for enlargement of our work. We had reached the sum of $85 which I deposited for the church on the day I left. The members deeply regretted our coming away. The church has greatly improved during my stay in Lagos. You know there had been a split in the church that resulted in the withdrawal of nearly all the members who had formed a church about fifty yards from the mission church and they were fighting each other. When I arrived there our church had only about ten members and there had been no growth after the split. I told them that I had not gone to Africa to keep up such a brawl as that so I began to attend both churches. At first I sought to unite them and then finding that impossible I began trying to build up both into self-supporting churches. Our church has grown now to a membership of sixty. The other church has not grown in members but they have grown in kindliness of feeling so that their leader told me the day we left that they intended to do as I had advised them, viz., move their church to a suitable location and fall into line with us in taking the city for Jesus. A Campbellite minister named Cook, a former missionary, has tried to induce them to forsake their principles and co operate with him, but they have persistently refused to do so. The day we left Lagos, all of the members came to bid us good by. Many of them wept. Quite a number of people came with us to the boat that brought us out to the ship.

The experiences of the last four years have been the most wonderful of my life, but I would not exchange them for any other. Surely the Lord has been with me and my people and wonderfully preserved us. There has been growth in the entire mission resulting from the changed state of affairs in Lagos. To God be all the glory.

It grieves me to hear of the trouble growing out of the Crawford Herring Bostick movement. I must say that I do not quite understand what is wanted by the China brethren. Sometimes they are discussing a missionary's clothes, then his houses, then schools, then again native workers, and then expensiveness of methods, &c., &c. I have hardly found time to read all they have written on various subjects, and how they could find time to write about so many things totally unconnected with the success or growth of their own work, has been a mystery to me. I must be candid and say that I do not know enough about their plans to write about them now that I have the time, and I should by no means have had time on the field. It seems to me that much that has been written has not tended to build up but rather to tear down. Paul says in Rom. 14: 19, Let us follow the things whereby one may build another up. We should help one another and not hinder. Any one can tear down one of the greatest buildings or works of art which it took many to build. Christians, especially Baptists, should build up by working together and not destroy. Some do not help others, but only themselves. If their plans prevail, the African mission would be destroyed. Our mission is utterly dependent on the Board. No church or set of churches would undertake a mission so unpromising (humanly viewed) and expensive. No organization need begin work in Africa that is not willing to run it fifty years, fruit or no fruit, success or failure. Our Board can see that after a while there must be results, and there will be. The Wesleyans did apparently fruitless work at Cape Coast, Africa, for many years. Only a few years ago they were giving $10,000 a year to work there. I called there as I came up the coast. I was informed by the missionary in charge that the 8,000 members under his charge paid in for Wesleyan work last year $30,000. Who will say that the Wesleyans have not made a paying investment there? Who will say that our investment in Baptist missions in Liberia has been too large? By the way, I called there and learned many interesting things about their work. They have more than thirty Baptist churches in Liberia. They have a good school. They are building good brick churches. The President of the Republic is a Baptist preacher. No doubt some one was ready to say, a few years ago, that it is an outrage to be wasting so much money on such poor fields. In my judgment, no money was ever so wisely spent and will bear better fruit and more of it.

Missionary work is wonderful work and we have learned by the experiences of the past. If the expenses have been large for the results, it must be borne in mind that these are but the beginning. Many, no doubt, will cavil at the large outlay as compared with the small results, forgetting that this may be the case in the beginning of any great enterprise. When was the first steel rail rolled in Chicago? It was about the year 1865. It had cost in experiments, &c., about $500,000. I think you can buy a ton of them now for forty dollars. I should like to know what it cost to save the first man ever saved in my field—the Yoruba country. I venture to say that it did not cost less than $500,000. Nobody thinks anything of the cost of the first rail because that is a great business of the world. Why should we talk about the cost of these first beginnings of mission work? They are growing year by year less expensive in the machinery and more productive. The expensiveness of missions is not the result of having Boards. These same experiments would have been one thousand times more expensive without Boards and the results far less. There is a reduction of expenses going on now year by year; for example, it cost us one hundred dollars less to come from Lagos to Liverpool than it cost us to go from Liverpool to Lagos. This grows out of reduction of fare. It cost our Board $500 less to run our Lagos work the last year I was there than it did the first year. This grows out of reductions on our part of contributions to the work and increased contributions of the natives. The Board did not object to my making any reduction of expenses that I saw fit to make, nor did they object to my doing anything else that would tend to the furtherance of the gospel. They did object to my selling the Lagos property and making some rash changes of methods that I might have made when I first reached the field, and I now see that they were wise in so doing. Many missionaries get into a maze and wander around without ever getting to the centre of their own work. They are unwilling to be guided by anybody else or look to Christ to lead them through by the route that he has led others, and hence they go off in search of new methods, forgetting that their new methods have to be experimented with and will be more expensive than the methods we have been working by so long until we are now about to reach the maximum of work with the minimum of expenditure. As to the employment of native agencies, no man can lay down a rule for somebody else. It depends on the character and efficiency of the agents. There were five native agents employed with funds of our Board when I went to Lagos. Some of them I found to be unworthy and dismissed. Others I found to be inefficient and called for their resignation. We have now only two native agents paid by our Board. The pay of the two does not amount to as much as ten dollars per month. It would be useless for anybody to undertake to convince me that it is to be laid down as a rule that we are to have no native agents of any kind. I may just say here that these two agents are teachers in in our school. A school is a necessity to our work in Lagos. If I could have had another year on as we are going, the church would have supported its own school and would have started others outside which it would have supported.

Let the brethren wait and stand by the Board. To withdraw our contributions from the Board and put them into some independent movement is to destroy the unity of Baptist work. Nearly all of these independent movements become sooner or later badly mixed up in doctrines and then in practice. Baptists are bound to lose by any such movements. If Baptists don't do their own work you may rest assured that no one else will do it for them. Men may praise the Taylor Inland China Mission and the Y. M. C. A. African Mission as much as they please, but, I am sure, that in all such movements Baptists are going to suffer. I have great love for Bro. Herring and believe him a man who wishes to see the work go more rapidly, but he is simply falling upon a mistaken plan of making it go. There are difficulties in connection with his plans that are entirely overlooked by him. He no doubt wants to bring the churches nearer to the field and let them be better informed in regard to it so that they will be more interested, give more and give more intelligently. By his plan a particular church might know a particular field better, but at the same time it would be more ignorant of all other fields.

As to the reduction of the salary of missionaries, I cannot write now. I could not with the light before me propose any change. the Board will meet all of my outside expenses, I would agree to put the salary at four hundred dollars, but if I must buy my own medicines, pay my own doctor bills, undergo the expense of providing myself pure water to drink, &c, &c., then I could not favor a reduction. It is better for the Board as it is.

The African field being in the tropics where malaria is so prevalent has expenses belonging to it that do not come to any other, as China, Mexico, &c. Some may make money on the salary of a missionary, but with all my economy in living at home I am not the man that would like to undertake to do it. I have spared no means at my command that would insure the life of my family and the success of the work. If the Board should be so unfortunate as to get a man into the mission field whose greed after filthy lucre is so great as to lead him to hord money rather than use it in a way that would bring good to the cause, I should say that the better plan would be to remove that man from the work rather than undertake to cut the salaries of one hundred good men who would make a wise use of a few extra dollars that might come into their hands down to the very bottom cent on which they could provide themselves with the barest necessaries of life. It is hard for one man to say what is necessary for another. We know that what is allowed by the Board is much too small for many men. The Church Missionary Society and the Wesleyans pay their missionaries much higher salaries than we are paid. They also pay their native agents much higher, and employ far more of them than we Baptists. So it seems to me that the Crawford Bostick-Herring criticisms are not directed so much at our places of work as they are at those of the other denominations. The speeches they make in their campaign need to be made in the other churches and not in Baptist churches, for we have too few houses, schools and native helpers. It is no doubt true that the others do push out too far on that line, but that is their own business and not ours. We must not refuse to use a good native christian in the place where he is needed because others are using too many and unworthy helpers. The Board and our missionaries will manage these things if our churches will furnish the funds and stand by us and pray for us.

I wrote Dr. Tupper last Saturday, suggesting some things in the way of enlargement in African work, and am awaiting his reply with interest. I shall remain here until we have sufficiently toned up our systems to return to the work and go back. It distresses me to stop here where I can do nothing for the work to which I have given my life while there is so much need of work on my field and so much need of information to awaken interest in my own particular field (Africa) in the churches at home.

The Lord knows that I wish to do what will help the cause, and would not say a word that would hinder it. O wouldn't I be glad to speak in behalf of Africa at our North Carolina Convention. I could wish Africa had a better representative, but as there is no one who knows its needs better and feels a deeper interest in it than myself, then I would be willing to try.

I so much thank you for your long and interesting letter. I knew that you were interested in me and my work, but it does me good to have you tell me so again. May the Lord bless your work in North Carolina.

My family has greatly improved since we have been in England. We have not seen a single religious newspaper from the U. S. A. since July, and hence are in total ignorance of what is going on in churches and Boards. Your letter is our latest news.

It would be interesting for me to tell you what I have seen in London, where I have been most of the time, but there is no time for that now.

I have visited the Baptist, Wesleyan and Church Mission Society's rooms to get acquainted with men and methods in missionary work. I forgot to say that I also visited Dr. Guiness' College and Mission House.

I was invited to meet a committee of the Wesleyans at their mission rooms to talk with them about their work in Africa. I was also held a long while last Saturday at the C. M. S. Rooms talking with them of their work and my own. It has been my pleasure to have several interviews with our Baptist men at their rooms.

We attended Monday's meeting at the Tabernacle. We heard Dr. Pierson preach a grand sermon there the other night. Spurgeon's church has finally made a decision that forever lays aside the possibility of any except a Baptist coming into the pastoral office of the church. But our Baptist people in England are suffering from their looseness more than they are aware of.

We have visited many places of interest and spent our time in hard study. I have not even taken time to write letters.

You may address me care of Carus & Brow, 32 Chapel street, Liverpool, England.

Pray for us that the Lord may guide us in all things, and that we may be resigned to his will. Wife, Alberta and Ray join me in salutations to you, Mrs. Durham, and the children.

I am yours faithfully,

C. C. Newton.

E. E. Hilliard Addresses the Bertie Teachers Association.

The teachers of Bertie county have shown their interest for the work in which they are engaged by organizing themselves into the Bertie Teachers' Association. The last regular meeting of this Association, which was held in Aulander, Nov. 5th, was peculiarly interesting, not only to teachers, but to all who are interested in the cause of education. The morning exercises consisted of a recitation, essay, humorous reading and an address.

In the afternoon, the Association was fortunate in having for its speaker, E. E. Hilliard of the Scotland Neck Democrat, his subject being "The State's Reserved Power as Found in its Teachers."

Mr. Hilliard said he had been a teacher for several years in which he considered himself fortunate. No occupation gives so good an opportunity for improvement as teaching, nor reveals to a man his own capacity so accurately as do the actual tests which come every day in the school room.

Four hundred years ago, Columbus awoke to give to the world its grandest land. The serpentine trail of his frail ships blazed the way to the world's greatest republic. The ancients had dreamed of wealth, they had longed for power, and sighed for liberty; but here their dreams, longings and sighs had been fully realized. A fitting tribute that in the four hundredth anniversary the people should come together to pay homage to the discoverer. During the last few weeks many grand pageants have marched to the strains of martial music. During next year millions will make the pilgrimage to Chicago in honor of America's discoverer. For this grand consummation of freedom and republican government which is found in America, statesmen have puzzled their brains, warriors have poured out their blood as a free offering upon the altar of their common country. These have been applauded and received a nation's praise; but in every contest the victory has been won by the State's reserved power, the silent work of the teachers in every nook and hamlet where public opinion has been moulded. Napoleon at Waterloo fought as never before, and now the same seal which had crowned him conqueror was to crown him conqueror no longer. Where the battle raged fiercest, the long lines of the Prussians were seen coming as the reserve forces of the English soldiery. The mighty man of destiny charged, was repulsed, then charged again; but his army which had won the victory on many a sanguinary field was routed, and Napoleon was no longer the invincible conqueror. So the teachers, like the Prussians, in the fiercest conflicts have ever been the mighty reserve force to save the State and Nation.

Some one has said that the press is the advance wave of civilization; but every wave has some impetus, a mighty, moving power. This power has its origin in the school rooms of the land, the district school, the academy, the college and the university, where earnest teachers do their work with expenditure of brain and nerve and muscle force. Their work as a mighty propelling engine has sent out waves of influence, power and civilization to bless and elevate the world.

The revolutionary force has always had its first beginnings in the silent work of the school-room, and this mighty force is itself to be revolutionized and improved. What means the State's advancement in establishing the University for boys and the Industrial School for girls? The reserve force to be strengthened.

Our country's greatness is individual in its great men, and they in the great women. In the State and Nation as great men have fallen, others have always been ready to take their places. Where and whence have come these recruits? From the State's reserved force, the quiet work of the teachers.

Great problems present themselves for solution. These are puzzling the brains of statesmen, and all are called upon to exercise higher functions of power. There are political problems, social problems, moral problems. The satisfactory solution of these depends upon who holds the throttle valve. The force, the guiding power, is to be found in the hearts of teachers. The liquor problem is the greatest moral question of the age. No brush can paint the blackness, nor tongue tell the horrors of this traffic. From the school room must come the mighty force which is needed to solve the problem. In every struggle the reserve force is to be found in the teachers of the State; to them its safety is entrusted, and they save it in every trial. Teachers should choose a high ideal and a perfect image, for they, Atlas like, bear upon their shoulders, not only the interests of the State itself, but the responsibility of nature and leading them through nature up to nature's God.

The above is but a very imperfect synopsis of the very excellent address which abounded in striking sayings, vivid illustrations, and eloquent flights of fervid oratory.

A Plea for More Time.

Conversing recently with an earnest christian, who had been by the providence of God shut in for several weeks, she said: "One thing I have learned is that we need more time with Jesus. My sickness has been greatly blessed to me in that it compelled me to stop everything else and spend more time in communion with my Lord." Hurry is the characteristic feature of our modern life. Business engagements, home [illegible] and religious duties are all regulated by railroad time, and the locomotive is each year covering more miles in fewer minutes. This hurry is seriously affecting our religious life and inflicting injury at a vital point.

Spirituality is a plant of slow growth, and finds its favorite nutriment in meditation, contemplation and secret prayer. It is not difficult to account for the rich, juicy spirituality of David's experience when we hear him declare: "I meditate on all thy works; I muse on the works of thy hands." But we have no time for meditation; we snatch a moment for prayer, and while praying think, "I will be late." We open the Bible to read, but the chapter seems so long, and the claims of the newspaper are so pressing that we rush over the precious words and retain no impression of their truth. We bolt our spiritual food without masticating it, securing to ourselves imperfect digestion, poor assimilation, and—dyspepsia. Very much of the discontent concerning personal experience may be traced to this cause. The lack of spiritual power, which so sadly marks the quality of religion in our day is also a result of this feverish haste. They that wait on the Lord renew their strength. Brother, if you would be strong, joyful, restful, spend more time with Christ. If you would know what it is to be "filled with all the fullness of God," let your soul, like an emptied vessel, tarry long enough in His presence to be filled. If you would know the unutterable joy of soul-winning, stay with Jesus all night in the mount of prayer.

How meager a proportion of each twenty-four hours does the average christian devote to spiritual exercises! How utterly disproportionate the time allotted to the care of the body and that given to the care of the soul! We find time for all else, but this is far more important than all. Better neglect any other interest or pleasure than rob the soul of the precious moments of personal communion with the Saviour. Time is precious; save it wherever you can, but don't shorten the interview with Jesus.—Bon Air, in Richmond Advocate.

Relation of the Pastor to the Paper

The relation of the pastor to the denominational paper is thus forcibly set forth by an efficient New England pastor:

"I regard it as an important part of a pastor's work for his people to induce them to take, and encourage them to read, a religious paper, representing their denominational interests. He may make special effort in this line of work. I know of no other method by which we can so effectually raise or sustain the general religious intelligence of the families connected with our churches. And it may be seen that a good denominational paper is a means towards the greater unification of our people in their thought and purpose and activity, inasmuch as it is a common source of information, an object of common interest, a common centre of influences radiating to all and through all, and a medium of easy communication for each and with each."—Selected.

Letter from Rev. W. A. Barrett.

SULPHUR SPRINGS.

This is the name of a church in Montgomery county, three miles south of Candor. It takes its name from a spring near the place. Capt. Samuel Usher was the man who made the first move in constituting this church, and by his personal efforts, and with the labors of his hands, the house for the worship of God was built. It is not completed, but if it was, it would be one of the neatest and most pleasant of our country churches. Bro. Usher had the misfortune to lose two stores with their goods by fire, and also his turpentine distillery. Believing he could do better for himself and family, he moved last January to Alabama, but the strong love he had for the church at Sulphur Springs moves him to keep his membership there yet. His presence, labor, and christian admonition are greatly missed in the church.

I have been in a meeting of five days with this church. The meeting commenced on Saturday night. Bro. S. W. Fuquay preached Saturday night, Sunday and Sunday night. When I got there Monday I found that Bro. Fuquay's sermons had made a good impression on the members of the church and the people of the congregation. They were ready for a good meeting; but the rain and coldness of the weather prevented the people from coming out, and the meeting closed Wednesday night. I have promised to hold a meeting with this church some time in the future, when God in his goodness shall so provide.

LINDON.

This is a place on the Aberdeen and West End Railroad, seven miles from Aberdeen, and the first stopping place on the road going west from Aberdeen. Lindon is the center point of the membership of the Deep Creek Baptist church, and I have advised the members to build a house of worship at that point. Such is now the intention. I hope to be able to succeed and get the building, and then the cause of the church will the more prosper.

EAGLE SPRINGS.

This is a railroad point on the same line, seven miles east of Candor, and is the first stopping point on the road going east from Candor. A Baptist church building is very much needed at this point. Bro. S. W. Fuquay has promised and will give the lot of land for the house. With a little money there can be a very good house put up.

If we can get these two buildings, we will have a line of churches very much needed. May this work ere long be done.

Just the Help for the Little Ones.

A most excellent aid in the exposition of the lesson in the Primary Class is the Primary Quarterly issued by the American Baptist Publication Society. It contains the lessons for three months, with valuable helps and suggestions to teachers, and is illustrated with attractive pictures. The price is only 2½ cents per quarter, 9 cents per year. It is a wonder to many how the Society can afford to furnish so excellent a help for so little money.

Rev. Dr. David Spencer, of Wisconsin, has compiled and The Standard has published a table showing the time when the Baptists organized their first church in each State of the Union. It is interesting and worth keeping as a table of reference. It is as follows:

The Mission of Tracts.

Tracts can go anywhere. Tracts know no fear. Tracts never tire. Tracts can be multiplied without end by the press. Tracts can travel at little expense. They run up and down like the angels of God blessing all, giving to all, asking no gift in return. They can talk to one, as well as to a multitude, and to a multitude as well as to one. They require no public room to tell their story in. They can tell it in the kitchen or the shop, the parlor or the closet, in the railway coach, or in the omnibus, on the broad highway or in the foot path through the fields. They take no note of scoffs, or jeers, or taunts. No one can betray them into hasty or random expressions. Though they will not always answer questions, they will tell their stories twice over or thrice or four times if you wish them. And they can be made to speak on every subject, and on every subject they may be made to speak wisely and well. They can in short be made the vehicles of all truth, the teachers of all classes, the benefactor of all saints.—Selected.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

AN APPEAL FOR A CENTENNIAL CHRISTMAS THANK-OFFERING FOR JAPAN.

Never, as now, did mission work call for a Thanksgiving. God has multiplied his blessings upon it as he alone can multiply work done for him. This year, as never before, Southern Baptists have been studying the history of missions in the past hundred years. Our hearts have burned within us as we have seen God's hand in India, his way in the islands of the sea, his triumphs in Burmah, his dealings in Japan. Let us then at the happy Christmas-tide bring him the thank offering of praise.

The Christmas offering is bound up with the very life of the Missionary Union. Coexistent with it, it has grown with its growth, taking ever deeper heart-hold on all who have taken part in it. We appeal to every Woman's Missionary Society, to the women and children of every Baptist church, to join with us this year in a Centennial Christmas offering.

This is no common appeal. This Christmas offering is to be the recognized woman's part in the great Centennial work of sending to the mission fields a hundred new missionaries. Much as the women have done and will still do for the Chapel Fund, we would have them have a noble part in this work also.

For four years the object of the Christmas offering has been the enlargement of the mission force in North China, the gifts to this object aggregating $15,639.84. This year the Foreign Mission Board has recommended for the object of our offering, Japan, the youngest and weakest of our missions.

Forty years ago Japan stood apart in seagirt solitude, a hermit among nations. In 1853 her ports, through America's bloodless victory, were opened to the world. Through this open door the missionaries were not slow to enter. They entered by scores; while men of no religion, sceptical, atheists and blasphemers entered by thousands. One preached the gospel of Christ; the others lived the belief in godless civilization. The missionary triumphs were many, and those were not wanting who prophesied that Japan would soon stand among the Christian nations of the world. Then came a pause. Scepticism gained ground. It invaded the schools, assailed the churches and found willing converts from the great ranks of heathenism. To day Japan stands balancing between old idolatry, modern doubt and christianity. To whom shall the victory belong?

God has said unmistakably to his people, "Go forward in Japan." He has brought to himself 25,000 of the Japanese while yet there was but one missionary to 80,000 people. One little band of four calls for help from the midst of an island of nine million souls almost untouched by mission effort.

They ask for seven new missionaries. Shall they ask in vain? The King's business requires haste. Delay now means centuries of defeat.

When the first mission work failed in Japan, God waited four centuries before he allowed missionaries again to enter.

The Missionary Union has prepared a double Centennial Christmas thank-offering program, half for the woman's missionary societies and half for the children, with envelopes for the ingathering of the offering. These will be supplied free on request to all woman's mission societies, churches and Sunday-schools, by Miss F. E. Heck, Raleigh, N. C., of the Woman's Central Committee of your State.

1. Send for programs promptly.
2. Distribute envelopes liberally.
3. Prepare these exercises thoroughly.
4. In sending up the offering, designate it for the Christmas offering carefully.

Care at these four points will crown this work with large success.

But, does some one say, we have the regular mission work to maintain, the chapel fund, and we have had Centennial day. True, but still you will have Christmas gifts, Christmas feasts and Christmas joy in your home. Shall he, then, who is the crown, the joy, the giver of the feast, be left without a gift?

FANNIE E HECK,
President Woman's Mis. Union.

Need for Haste in Japan.

We thank God, take courage and go forward at the news that Japan is to receive the Christmas offering of Southern Baptist women this year.

In many respects, Japan bids us to haste in our giving the gospel to her perishing millions. When once she was compelled to open her gates to the foreigner, she threw off with one tremendous effort the chains which bound her to the ancient rites, ceremonies, and to some extent, religions, and began the onward march which has been the wonder of the nations affording material for so many glowing descriptions of Japan as the paradise of the East, etc. Indeed the Japanese have made remarkable progress, and there has been much true and stable work accomplished. But the adoption of a code of laws based on the western codes; increased commercial and political activity; the falling into partial decay of the old religions, together with the broad educational system which has sprung like magic into existence, and the intercourse with the nations has not made them christians, nor, I am sorry to say, as a nation, better prepared for the reception of christianity. On the contrary, the floodgates of every phase of skeptical teaching have been lifted and the country has been deluged with all the "isms" of Europe and America. Young men who a few years ago were bowing at the shrines of Buddha and the spirits of their departed fathers, now worship at the feet of Spencer, Huxley and others. Thus with Japan striving with all her might to take her stand among the civilized nations; with the old religion dying as naturally as the old civilization has died and given place to the need; with the united forces of Eastern and Western heathenism, fighting against us; and endeavoring to present to the world (a spectacle never seen and God grant never to be seen), a country whose laws are based on the decalogue, yet whose rulers, statesmen and people deny the very existence of the God who gave that decalogue. I submit that as lovers of our fellowmen, as servants of him who said, "Go ye into all the world," etc., it behooves us to make haste to give to this people the gospel. It can be done now easily, but twenty years hence, in my humble judgment, means a century hence for Japan.

Our special field is the island of Kyushiu in the southwestern part of the empire. It is by all odds the richest district in the entire country. Here all the coal beds or the principal ones, and the most fertile and productive farming districts. The men of Kyushiu are regarded as the strongest in the nation, as is evinced by the great number who have held, and are now holding, the most important posts both civil and military in the government. There are on this island about nine million people, and we are the only Baptist workers among them. To be sure other denominations have entered the field to some extent, but there is virgin soil in abundance, and millions of the people who have never heard of Christ and his salvation. Our prayer has been and is, and we ask you, brethren and sisters, to hear and join with us in praying, "O Christ, Lord of the harvest, send us eight men and their wives into Japan, and to thee be all the glory. Amen."—J. W. McCollum, Kokura, Japan.

"Ante-Convention Thoughts and Suggestions."

Bro. Powell thinks that the Convention should—

"Authorize the Board of Education to bind the young men under obligations to let their services be subject to the State Mission Board for a number of years equal to that of which they were beneficiaries at the College. In other words, if they are beneficiaries two years, when they leave college, let the State Mission Board take charge of them and send them for two years to the desiitute fields in the State now under the supervision of the Board."

Now while the Education Board would be delighted to see every beneficiary when he leaves college enter the mission field where laborers are so much needed, and where they will find the best training possible, yet the Board sees very serious difficulties in the way of the adoption of this plan. Last June eight beneficiaries left the College. At that time the State Mission Board had more men employed than it had means with which to support them. Now with such a rule as the one suggested, these eight young men must remain unemployed until the close of the Conventional year at least. For two, three or four years, they belong to the State Mission Board, and the Board has plenty for them to do, but not a dollar to pay them with, and they are in debt. They have been compelled to incur expenses besides those met for them by the Board of Education; and their debts must be paid, or they cannot, and ought not, to preach anywhere.

Another difficulty in the way of the plan, as it seems to the Education Board, is that the churches in need of pastors should, in making their call, seek the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and that the preachers, whether pastors or missionaries, should take charge of no fields without being persuaded that the Lord is leading them. But suppose we follow the plan suggested, it might turn out that the State Mission Board should direct the preacher to one field and the Holy Spirit might be leading him to another. Suppose the Board, having the preacher in charge for a number of years, sends him to some mission field, and some church or churches in the mean time have been looking to the Lord to send them a pastor, and he has directed them to him. But he belongs to the State Mission Board for a number of years, and the Board tells him that he must go where they send him, whatever to the contrary the Spirit may say to the churches or to other fields concerning him.

As to the largest salary, no preacher of the gospel, whether old or young, should allow that to move him only in so far as it is necessary to a support. Every pastor and missionary should be influenced in all his moves by a desire for the widest possible usefulness and the conviction that the Holy Spirit is leading him. Nearly all of our beneficiaries who have gone to their work as pastors and as missionaries are living on small salaries, and some of them are making sacrifices—living very poor and living of the gospel. The Education Board helps no young man unless he assures them that he is willing to live poor, if need be, for the gospel of Christ. And several of our beneficiaries have been known to continue to live on small salaries when they were offered much larger amounts even in city fields.

Bro. Powell's last suggestion is, that the plan—

"Would also act as a check upon any hypocrite who might be tempted to enter the ministry for securing an education. For until the establishment of this Board, the Baptist ministry offered no inducements for any one to enter it save the inducements in the call of the Master."

I have only this to say that by far the largest number of unworthy men who have entered the Baptist ministry in our State, of whom I have had any knowledge, have been those who never had any connection or even any acquaintance with the College or the Board of Education, while a very large majority of our most useful pastors and missionaries were once beneficiaries.

W. R. GRAINGER.

Letter from Bro. Chappell in China.

Dear Recorder:—I am ashamed of my neglect of you and my many friends in North Carolina for months, until their complaints are reaching my ears from various quarters. Especially anxious was I to write at once on hearing of the death of Maggie Nutt Herring, and to add a few words to the expressions of loving remembrance from various friends.

It was a sad day for us when we heard of Sister Herring's death; for Mrs. C. and I have lost a warm-hearted and kind friend. Shall we ever forget the pleasant home she gave us for months after our arrival in China, and before we could reach our field in Chinkiang; or her many acts of kindness during times of sickness in our family? Her life was one full of such kindnesses, and many a friend will cherish fondly the recollections of her goodness. She was a true missionary, and our work here in China has sustained a heavy loss in her death. Many a precious seed was sown in the hearts of women and children in Sunday-school, church, street, chapel, school-work, and in their homes; for she could so speak the language of the Chinese and of the human heart as to reach those to whom she talked. And yet I cannot think it strange the Master has taken her home so soon in the full bloom of her young womanhood, for he could spare her no longer from his presence. How fast we are gathering home! Who next? May we [illegible] for our summons as was this beloved sister, and receive so well deserved a welcome.

We are now again in Chinkiang. There is no [illegible] at Yangchow, and Mrs. C.'s health [illegible] the care of a physician, [illegible] our return to this place. We [illegible] the place the Bryans have [illegible] by their removal to Shanghai. [illegible] the Pierces there temporarily in that great city. We must have some one to join them in Yangchow soon. Would that some physician could hear God's voice calling him to Yangchow. What a work he could do among the poor people at that place. Our missionaries are fifteen miles from any physician, and two or three days might elapse before a doctor could reach them from this place, their nearest accessible point to a physician. This state of things ought not to exist. We are praying God to send us out a man to do medical work in Yangchow. I feel sure the Board will be only too glad to send us such a man as soon as he can be found. Is not God calling some brother of the medical profession to this labor of love, of which our blessed Lord did so much during his earthly ministry? I know of no way more effectual in reaching the hearts of this people than that the medical missionary has. Many a poor soul has been led to light and salvation through the healing of some bodily disease, and many a community has been made accessible to gospel truth through the work of a physician as the forerunner, carrying in his hands the blessing of healing accessible to the poor Chinese from no other source. How often he has appeared a messenger of heavenly grace to these poor afflicted people. The gospel is the only hope of salvation for this people, and Christ often first healed the body, and thus opened the heart to receive the healing of the soul through the living word.

Our work is encouraging. The audiences at Yangchow continue good, and the work of seed-sowing is going on. A sure harvest awaits us by-and by. A few have been added to our little church here in Chinkiang recently by experience and baptism. One man from a distance has recently been brought to the light, and like the eunuch from Ethiopia, after being baptized, he returned to his home rejoicing, and he has gone publishing the news. One of the native brethren recently visited the village where this man lives and preached the gospel. He reports a great interest among the people of that place, and a number are inquiring the way of life. This recently converted brother offers to give land for the erection of a chapel for preaching; and who knows but ere long there may be an infant church established at that place. The interest seems to be extending to other places also. Pray for us, brethren, that an effectual door may be opened to us for the gospel in many places and in many hearts.

Yours fraternally,

L. N. CHAPPELL.

Chinkiang, China, Oct. 17, 1892.

To the Clerks of North Carolina Associations.

Dear Brethren:—Suffer a word of exhortation:

The Convention will soon be upon us, and we are anxious to report what the churches have given during this Centennial year of missions, but we cannot do it unless you fill up the blanks we have mailed to you and return them at once. Please do not wait till your minutes are printed; for that will make your returns too late. Be sure to add up all the columns before mailing them, and under head of "total contributions" in the last column, put amount of total contributions to all objects, not simply the totals of the other columns. The Clerks of only twelve out of the forty white Baptist Associations in the Convention have so far responded to my request to fill out the blanks and return them. These are as follows: Beulah, Central, Mt. Zion, South Fork, Yadkin, Flat River, Liberty, Ashe and Alleghany, Catawba River, Three Forks and Tar River. The Carolina, Cherokee and Newfound in the Western Convention have responded, and I have received the minutes of Buncombe County, Sandy Creek and one or two others.

I put this letter in the RECORDER, because I can reach you much easier in this way than in any other. Please look over the foregoing list and if the name of your Association is not in it, please mail me at once the information desired. We need it before the Convention meets. Be sure to enclose with the blank a revised list of ordained ministers in your Association, also the names of your Executive Committee, with their post offices. We want to have the tables of all the Associations in, if possible, by the end of this week. We desire to publish the names of ministers and their post-office addresses by Associations.

Please, brethren, send in this information at once to Raleigh, N. C.

A Centennial Collection from Every Sunday-School.

This is our aim. Many schools observed the 2d of October, but more perhaps did not, and to these I now appeal. For the good it will do the children, in making them familiar with the facts of missions, also in cultivating in them the spirit of beneficence, as well because of the money that will thus be realized for the good cause, we ask every pastor and Sunday-school superintendent to see to it that at some time, in the near future, this matter shall receive at the hands of his school such attention as its worth merits. I have plenty of mission literature and will take pleasure in furnishing all who may wish it. I shall take some of this literature with me to the Convention, and can supply all who may desire it.

We are in dead earnest about this matter, brethren, and don't wish you to forget it.

T. H. PRITCHARD.

Gloria Patri; or, Our Talks About the Trinity. By James Morris Whiton, Ph. D., author of "Beyond the Shadow," etc. Price $1.00 New York: Thomas Whittaker, 2 and 3 Bible House.

This book is unique in form and treatment. It is a book for thoughtful laymen on a subject that few laymen have cared to read about—the Trinity; but it is very far from treating it in the usual way. An unusual freshness and interest is secured, in part, by the use of dialogue, in a conversation between two friends, in which, as the author tells us, more or less of many actual conversations is recorded.

Peloubet's Select Notes, by Rev. Dr. F. N. & M. A. Peloubet. 340 pages. Illustrated, cloth 12mo. Price $1.25. Boston, W. A. Wilde & Co.

This Commentary on the International Sunday-school Lessons for 1893, like its eighteen predecessors, bears evidence of the widest research on the part of its compilers into every field of christian literature. Its exhaustive quotations, excellent suggestions to teachers, helpful anecdotes, and admirable notes, wonderfully illumine the scripture text and impress upon the mind the salient points of each lesson.

The library references are particularly full, and a great convenience to the busy worker, who desires to study in detail from original sources, of the times, places, personages, and secular, as well as the sacred history of the events and peoples mentioned in the lessons.

In authentic colored maps, appropriate original illustrations, and general mechanical make-up, the present volume excels all previous issues, and this is praise enough.

Through its wideness of scope, condensation of statements, and happy combination of original and selected matter, this commentary is at once so concise, evangelical, and practical that every teacher and preacher must find it an invaluable aid in the study of the lessons the coming year.

St. Nicholas for Young Folks. John G. Whittier long ago wrote of St. Nicholas, "It is little to say of this magazine that it is the best children's periodical in the world." Edward Eggleston, the author of "The Hoosier Schoolmaster," says of it, "There is not one of the numbers that does not stir the curiosity, inform the memory, stimulate thought, and enlarge the range of the imagination." Founded in 1873, and from the first number edited by Mary Mapes Dodge, St. Nicholas is now entering upon its twentieth year. The most famous writers have contributed to its pages in the past, but never has its editor been able to offer a better program or a more distinguished list of contributors than for 1893.

There is to be a series of illustrated papers on "The Leading Cities of the United States,"—the story of each city told by a prominent resident. Edmund Clarence Stedman will write of New York; Thomas W. Higginson, of Boston; New Orleans will be described by George W. Cable, and Baltimore by President Gilman, of the Johns Hopkins University. Dr. Lyman Abbott will tell the story of Brooklyn, and other cities will be treated by other famous men. There will be an article on the World's Fair, and a number of pages of funny pictures and humorous verses.

Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin, the well-known author of "The Birds' Christmas Carol," etc., will contribute the leading serial for St. Nicholas during the coming year. The November number opens with a three-page poem by John G. Whittier, which has in it some of the most beautiful lines the good Quaker poet has ever written, describing the visit of a party of young girls to his home.

The School Journal says: "Place St. Nicholas in your household, and you need have no fears for the lessons taught your children." The magazine is the greatest aid that the teacher and the conscientious parent can possibly have. It entertains, and at the same time educates and instructs. The subscription price is $3 a year. Remittances may be made directly to the publishers, The Century Co., 33 East 17th St., New York.

"Through the Bush." By Mrs. Dora E. W. Spratt. 12mo, 320 pages. Price, $1.25. Philadelphia: American Baptist Publication Society, 1420 Chestnut Street.

This, as the sub-title informs us, is a story of New South Wales of fifty years ago. It is an account of a trip made by a Mr. and Mrs. Hart, of New York, and Mrs. Van Nois, of Boston, with their two boys, to the wonderful continental island of the South Seas. They went on a ship belonging in part to Mr. Hart, the captain of which enters very largely into the thread of the story.

At her burial was a large concourse of friends and relatives, to whom the writer preached from Rev. 21: 1-4. She leaves an aged husband, with whom she had happily lived more than fifty years, and eight children, besides several grandchildren, to mourn her loss. JNO. T. ALBRITTON.

Mt. Olive, N. C.

HAYNES—It is with sincere regret that we are called upon to chronicle the death of one of the bright jewels of the infant-class of the First Baptist church, Raleigh. Johnnie W. Haynes answered the Father's summons Tuesday morning, Nov. 15th, 1892, and is now among the angels with an everlasting song in his mouth. Acting from childish instinct, he grasped an electric wire which administered instant death to the unsuspecting victim. He was nine years old, and the fifth in a family of brothers and sisters. He was of a lively temperament, and was kind and affectionate toward the little ones.

The dumb grief of the father and mother is most touching, and they have the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community. It is hard to believe always that "all things work together for good to them that love God" but it is a Father's message to his trusting ones, and surely "a Father's hand will never cause his child a needless tear." "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." MARY V. MARSH.

The Recorder

—IS AN—

Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty-eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

Five Words.

The Lord thinketh upon me.—Psalm xl:17.

Five blessed words for me to-day,
I read them o'er and o'er;
They cheer me while upon the way,
To yonder heavenly shore.
And all the time, at work or play,
A happy child I'll be,
Because I know that night and day
My Saviour thinks of me.

I may be poor and have no store
Of silver or of gold;
But oh, his thoughts are valued more,
Their worth cannot be told!
For rich am I with heart so light,
From care and grief so free;
I must be precious in his sight
When Jesus thinks of me!

In summer's days, in winter's snow,
In hours that brightly shine;
Through all my journey as I go,
A holy joy is mine.
His loving thought makes me rejoice,
What bliss it gives to me
Whilst in my heart I hear his voice,
"Dear child, I think of thee!"

Christmas Forethought.

The most puzzling task at Christmas is to select presents for father and brothers. Two years ago, a certain young woman (this by way of reminiscence) failed to find anything she thought suitable for her brother. But after much perplexity a coffee cup and saucer, daintily decorated, was selected, and it was gratefully used at about three hundred and sixty breakfasts during the following year. The next year a cut glass salt-cellar and pepper box were given. Besides these and similar articles, one might try canvas or linen slipper cases, made to hang against the wall, inkstands and other articles for desks, silver match-boxes, razors (for which the traditional penny should be exacted), shaving glasses, cases of shaving paper, or, that always welcome friend, a silk muffler. A case for carrying collars and cuffs when traveling, is a useful present for many. The outside may be of any material available, and the lining should be of silk; but a stuff interlining of buckram should be inserted. In short, make it like a music roll, but not so wide, and fasten it with a fancy leather strap and buckle. Decorate the outside with some pretty device—the initials or monogram of the prospective owner.

I shall make no further suggestions of articles especially suitable for the sterner sex, but among the presents which will do equally well for either father or mother, brother or sister, may be mentioned umbrellas; umbrella-cases; chairs of more or less elaborate workmanship, from the pretty wicker or rattan chair to those which are profusely carved or richly upholstered; opera-glasses, gloves, handkerchiefs and handkerchief-cases, gold pencils, fountain pens, card-cases, napkin-rings, and books.

Many of the large publishing houses keep on sale pictures of authors. Twenty-five cents will buy the portrait of almost any well-known author. These are usually wood engravings and excellent of their kind, well printed on good paper, in size about ten by twelve inches. For the same picture on India paper (which, of course, is more durable and admits of a finer impression) one dollar may be asked, and the extra money will be well spent. A neatly framed portrait of the favorite author of a friend will make a charming gift at but small cost.

Many make it a practice to subscribe to some favorite magazine or paper, as a Christmas gift; and those who wish to confer an ever new pleasure may well bear this in mind. With so many capital publications, devoted to all imaginable tastes and pursuits, a choice will not be difficult. Children, especially, enjoy receiving their own papers and magazine, and a present of this kind can, by a payment far from large, be guaranteed to last one year—a surety which can never be furnished with any toy, no matter how expensive or durable.

The mothers—the housekeepers—are the easiest to cater for at this season of puzzled shoppers. There are hundreds of dainty articles which the true home-maker will welcome. Anything to beautify the home can hardly fail to please—silver, china, articles of cut glass, or choice napery for the table, a Japanese umbrella stand, a work-basket prettily fitted up, and with perhaps a silver or golden thimble in its own little pocket, a linen scarf for the sideboard embroidered or finished with "drawn work," a shopping bag, or embroidered scarfs of the pretty China silks now so much used in decoration. Other gifts might be vinaigrettes, silver glove buttoners, crocheted slippers, dainty aprons, ivory brushes and combs, stationery, pocket-books, card-cases, or address-books. In presenting any of the latter gifts it will show an added thoughtfulness on the part of the giver to have the name, or at least the initials, of the recipient printed in gilt letters on the article, if it be of leather. The added cost for this work is very trifling. In the same way the value of a box of stationery is much enhanced if the giver has had the address of the recipient stamped upon the upper right hand corner of the paper.—Mary V. Worstell, in St. Nicholas.

What is the Gain?

Self-sacrifice comes natural to women. Much of it is born in them, and what is not is ground into them from their childhood by education. For the sake of her home [illegible] girl gives up amusements and privileges which her brother would never be expected to forego for the like reason.

As she grows older, this spirit grows, encouraged by all tradition and outside influence. [illegible] power masters her altogether, and her life becomes one long devotion to endless labor and acceptance of [illegible] things, that the pleasant part of living may be kept sacred for the rest of the family.

The purely useless side of this entire self-abnegation must sometimes strike the beholder. Such effacing of individuality is not uncommon. And it gives as little real benefit to the family as it does to the individual.

Putting aside the moral effect on the younger members of a family, brought up to regard their mother as a machine run for the family service, does the woman who so gives herself for the well being of her family really accomplish all she desires?

If she work without pause or slackening day in and day out, does she always feel satisfied, with the admiring on lookers, that it is the noblest way to spend her health and energies?

If she renounces all recreation and higher life for herself, and gives up all communion of mind and spirit with her husband and children, is the reward adequate that is paid to them in a better kept house, a more bountifully supplied larder or handsomer clothes?

If over fatigue causes her to become petulant or complaining, is not the atmosphere of home more greatly injured than the added cleaning and cooking can repair?

If she is too worn out to give sympathy and help to the children's joys and sorrows, what do the finer clothes and furniture obtained avail?

And if, as sometimes happens, outraged nature gives way, and others must step into the breach, do their own work and the played out woman's as well, and take care of her into the bargain, what has she gained by her extreme efforts that she has not lost by the break down?

A life laid down in a worthy cause is not lost, but gained; but is this cause worthy?—Harper's Bazar.

Nothing More Dangerous

"Than a neglected cough," is what Dr. J. F. Hammod, professor in the Eclectic Medical College, says, "and as a preventative remedy and a curative agent, I cheerfully recommend Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein."

Matter Out of Place.

The fierce animosity some ardent housekeepers exhibit toward dust seems amusingly exaggerated to quieter souls. To the true dust hater no family trouble or family joy is paramount. With her mouth she may mourn William's sorrow or exult over Edith's prosperity. Her eyes are roving. They spy the bit of fluff upon the carpet, and she checks her sobs to pick it up. The recital of Edith's happiness is interrupted while she walks across the floor to wipe off a table's edge or to lament the difficulty of keeping a room clean when the windows are so often opened.

Births, deaths, or marriages may come and go in her household. Not one of these disturbs her equanimity half so much as having her sweeping day postponed; they are all of less importance than the discovery that her dreaded enemy has gained a foothold in some unsuspected corner.

An enthusiast of this sort one evening, with a tragic air, requested her husband to accompany her to an upper chamber. The tired lawyer was impressed by her solemn manner, and heavily climbed the necessary stairs. The lady led him into a room and pointed sternly to a table.

"Look at that," she said, indignantly. "Three times this week I have told Mary to dust it. I believe she neglects it purposely. I am completely disheartened."

The lawyer looked at the table and sighed.

"My dear," he replied, "to-day I have had to deal with a murderer and two burglars. I have also examined two wife-beaters and one child stealer, but anything like the moral depravity of Mary I confess I never saw before—never!"

And the lady triumphantly led the procession down stairs.—Harper's Bazar.

How to Cure a Cold.

When one becomes chilled, or takes cold, the mouth of myriads of little sweat glands are suddenly closed, and the impurities which should pass off through the skin are forced back to the interior of the body, vitiating the blood, and putting extra work on the lungs and other internal organs.

Just beneath the surface of the skin, all over the body, there is a network of minute blood vessels, finer than the finest lace. When one is chilled, the blood is forced from the capillary vessels into one or more of the internal organs, producing inflammation or congestion, and thus often causing diseases dangerous to life.

The time to treat a cold is at the earliest possible moment after you have taken it, and your prime object should be to restore the perspiration and the capillary circulation.

As soon, then, as you feel that you have taken cold, have a good fire in your bedroom. Put your feet into water as hot as can be borne, and containing a tablespoonful of mustard. Have it in a vessel so deep that the water will come up well toward the knees. Throw a blanket over the whole, to prevent rapid evaporation and cooling. In from five to ten minutes take the feet out, wipe them dry, and get into a bed on which there are two extra blankets.

Just before or after getting into bed, drink a large glassful of lemonade as hot as possible, or a glassful of hot water containing a teaspoonful of cream of tartar, with a little sugar if desired.

Should there be pain in the chest, side or back, indicating plurisy or pneumbnia, dip a small towel in cold water, and wring it as dry as possible. Fold the towel so that it will cover a little more surface than is affected by the pain. Cover this with a piece of flannel, and both with oiled silk, or better, with oiled linen; now wind a strip of flannel a foot wide several times around the chest.

The heat of the body will warm the towel almost immediately, the oiled linen and flannel will retain the heat and moisture, and steaming the part will generally cause the pain to disappear.

Should there be pain or soreness in the throat, you should treat it in a similar manner with wet compress and flannel bandage.

Eat sparingly of plain, simple food. Baked apples and other fruit, bread and butter, bread and milk, milk toast, baked potatoes or raw oysters may be eaten.

By following the above directions intelligently and faithfully, you will ordinarily check the progress of the cold, and prevent serious, possibly fatal, illness.—Youth's Companion.

"WHY I AM A BAPTIST."

They received the word with all readiness of mind, examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so.—Acts 17: 11.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

IV. Having spoken of the membership and ordinances of the New Testament church, suffer me a word concerning its organization and polity. It was, as I understand it, congregational. The reception and dismission, the discipline and expulsion of members was by vote or authority of the membership. Its officers were few and simple. Elders, pastors, bishops, terms of identical application and merely naming different aspects of a common work, filled one office. Deacons and deaconnesses filled another. All were servants of the church, subject to the church, yet to be respected and obeyed in their respective offices. Worship was simple, flexible, hearty, spiritual. Fellowship was warm, loyal, self-sacrificing, Christ like.

In the "First Apology" of Justin Martyr (written not later than half a century after the completion of the New Testament) we find this account of the way in which a christian convert was received by the church:

"After we have thus washed him who has been convinced and has assented to our teaching, we bring him to the place where those who are called brethren are assembled, in order that we may offer hearty prayers in common for ourselves and for the baptized person. * * * Having ended the prayers, we salute one another with a holy kiss. There is then brought to the president of the brethren, bread and cup of wine mixed with water, and he, taking them, gives praise and glory to the Father. * * * And when he has concluded the prayers and thanksgivings all the people present express their assent by saying Amen. * * * Then these who are called by us deacons give to each of these present to partake of the bread and wine. * * and to these who are absent they carry away a portion. * * * * And we afterwards continually remind each other of these things. The wealthy among us help the needy; and we always keep together. * * * On the day called Sunday all * * gather to one place, and the memoirs of the apostles or the writings of the prophets are read * * * and when the reader has ceased, the president verbally instructs, and exhorts to the imitation of these good things. Then we rise and pray * * bread and wine are brought * * * the president offers prayers * * and the people assent." Then follows an account of the taking of the alms, their distribution among the needy, and a declaration that these things are done, as apostles and teachers of Christ have enjoined. It is a simple, beautiful picture, showing our holy faith in its early and comparatively pure estate.

I have thus sought to outline the teaching, ordinances, polity and spirit of the apostolic churches. Now, when I look about me, I certainly find numerous and important variations from this early apostolic order and practice. I find, e. g., the Scriptures lightly esteemed, rarely searched, and in many things practically ignored. I find the great doctrines of grace—such as the divinity of Christ, the sacrificial atonement of the God-man, the necessity of a supernatural regeneration of the sinful heart wrought by the Holy Spirit, the justifying power of faith, the sole sufficiency of an indwelling Christ for the accomplishment of acceptable works before God, the attainment of eternal life through God's Son alone—I find these precious doctrines of God's word, these thrilling experiences of countless christian hearts, either in whole or in part set aside, or else encrusted with teachings or ordinances of men that virtually conceal their glory. I find the constitution of the church changed from the early model, and infants of but a few months, or worldly men with no profession of an experience of renewing grace, recognized and defended as corporate members in it, grafted into its fellowship. I find the ordinances of Christ set aside by some, unduly magnified by many, and essentially changed by others. I find encroachments, of greater or less importance, upon the primitive simplicity of the early church's organization, orders of clergy, in Scripture unknown, with prerogatives foreign to the letter and the spirit of the New Testament order, rise in ascending heirarches till they reach the professed vicar of Christ himself.

To me all these changes seem to be departures from God's will as made known in the sufficient and final record of that will, the Holy Scriptures. Some of them are very grave departures imperilling the whole gospel economy, and by experiences of many centuries shown to be great obstacles in the way of the progress of the kingdom of God. If the Bible, not reason; if Scripture, not tradition; if God's word, not my predilections are to decide my cause, it seems as if I ought to renounce one and all of these corruptions, modifications, or additions.

More than this, if I can find a company of Jesus' disciples embracing and professing the principles and order of the New Testament in their apostolic purity, then as a loyal disciple of Jesus Christ, I seem bound to choose that people as my people. I need not do so censoriously. I may do so very broadly. I ought to do so very humbly, recognizing my liability to err, the differences of good men whom I love, and the possibility of getting new light. I must recognize the devout piety, the successful ministry, the christian consecration of dear brethren in Christ who cannot see all things as I see them, and who may possibly think me narrow, or over particular, or unscholarly in my interpretation of God's word. But I must be loyal to conscience, true to Christ, faithful to the divine word, as word, and Christ, and duty are made known to me. My church connection ought to be—if I am a true man, surely it will be with those disciples who in my candid judgment come not merely near, but come the nearest to the standards set up in the Bible. To do this may be popular, or unpopular. It may be pleasing to myself or displeasing. It may fall in with the line of my family, or social, or intellectual preferences; or it may cross them one and all. That is neither here nor there. I am not my own; I am bought with a price. As a purchased bondservant of the all-gracious Lord I am to go where he, by his word, spirit and providence leads.

Now so far as I know, the regular Baptist churches of this land do faithfully hold and practice the principles of the New Testament as I have to-night set them forth. To the best of my knowledge they do this more clearly, positively and persistently than any other christian body.

1. They exalt the Revealed Word of God. They do not advocate stiff and mechanical views of its inspiration. They give full recognition to the human element in Scripture; but they magnify the divine element, believing with Peter that "no prophecy ever came by the will of man, but men spake from God, being moved by the Holy Ghost." They frame and use creeds, but no creed is imposed for subscription on any candidate for church membership, or even any candidate for ordination to the ministry. Of the former repentance, faith and baptism are required; the latter is asked to give his own statements of christian teachings, and by their conformity or want of conformity directly with the Bible is he judged as to his fitness to teach the churches of Christ. To the Bible first, last, and always, without intervention of creeds or commentators, to the Bible is reference made for decision in all matters of faith and conduct. Reason establishes the authority of Scripture and is necessary in interpreting Scripture; but reason having once, on valid evidence, accepted the Bible as a religious standard is not suffered to tear down its own building, or add thereto.

2. The Baptists magnify the great doctrines of grace. I do not believe that from any pulpits of Christendom can be heard purer, more thoroughly evangelical preaching than from the pulpits of our Baptist churches. They sound no uncertain note concerning the depravity of man, and the necessity of divine renewal. They never shuffle concerning the Godhood of Christ and the atoning merits of his sacrificial work. They believe in conversion, they encourage revivals, they seek the power of the Holy Ghost for service. They have their ancient and renowned institutions of learning, they welcome the most advanced scholarship, and they value the finest culture; but with them no culture can take the place of the new birth, no learning of man can be a substitute for the favor of God.

3. Baptists maintain the ordinances as originally given. They never baptize any save credible professed believers. They never accept as valid any mode of baptism save immersion into the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. They make the Lord's Supper, in idea and observance, sequent to the ordinance of baptism. If they do not invite unbaptized believers to the Lord's Supper, it is not from any spirit of narrowness or any disposition to belittle the piety of their brethren of other connections; it is solely because they find no New Testament authority for so doing, and their sense of the duty of loyalty to God's word forbids them to go further than the New Testament authorizes them to go. Yet if, on his own responsibility, and not on the strength of my teaching, an unimmersed fellow believer deems himself "scripturally qualified" for the Supper remains to observe it with me, I for one shall not suggest or think that he should retire; nay, I shall even be glad that he remains. I shall only regret and teach that, while dutifully remembering one of Jesus' commands, "This do in remembrance of me," he has mistakenly failed to obey a prior command, "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins." The spirit is more than the letter; and while I may not dare to teach against the letter, I would ever remember that before his own Master each stands or falls. There is such a thing as perspective in doctrine, or what Paul calls "the proportion of the faith."

4. Moreover, Baptists organize their churches after the apostolic manner. They give the laity full power in receiving and dismissing members and in the other affairs of the congregation. They have but two sorts of officers, which they deem scriptural, —pastors and deacons.

Thus it seems to me that the Baptist churches are more closely loyal to the faith and the practice to the doctrines and the order of the apostolic churches, as made known in the New Testament, than any churches of which I know. Other bodies make very close approximations to that Bible standard, but they seem to me to be less near than the churches of the Baptist denomination, imperfect as in some respects these latter doubtless are.

This, then, is why I am a Baptist. I do not like sectarian names. I wish we could get rid of them. Could I have my choice, I would change the name of this church, of which I am pastor, from "The First Baptist Church of Colorado Springs," to "The Church of the Apostles of Colorado Springs," and then that all might clearly understand our denominational connection, I would put in smaller letters, within a parenthesis, the single word "Baptist." For denominations exist, and in common honesty we must in some manner designate the regiment of Christ's army to which we belong. I dislike denominational pride or glorying. We are all far enough from the full truth and the loving Christ to awaken shame and promote profound humility; but then we all should be loyal to truth as we see it, Christ as we know him, the Bible as we understand it, and we should ever be ready to give a reason for the hope and faith within us. I believe in freedom. Roger Williams suffered much that he might worship God after the dictates of his own conscience, and Baptists have led the world in the advocacy and practice of religious liberty. I like catholicity, and I think it has been exhibited in this pulpit the past few months. But I wish to be free in Christ, set at liberty by the truth, as broad as, no broader, than my Lord. I have my likes, my preferences, my individual tastes. Some of them at times might be gratified more fully in other communions; but then my likes are nothing before God's will, my tastes are of no account beside Christ's commands. My notions are to yield before God's word.

In a word, then, I am a Baptist simply and solely because my Bible makes me one. All the other reasons I might cite end here. It was early impressed upon me by christian parents that I should test all teachings of men by the inspired teachings of God's word. After my fifteenth year my parents had little opportunity to teach me any distinctive religious tenets. I was away at school. For ten years I was in Methodist, Congregational and Unitarian seminaries of learning. Only at the close, when in the main my convictions were established, did I go to a distinctly Baptist school. Before that I was steadily, though kindly, opposed, first or last, by argument, or example, or even ridicule, in respect to every evangelical or denominational doctrine which in my youth I had heard. I was forced thereby to search these sacred oracles, to examine the Scriptures daily, to see whether these things which I have advocated were so. I was compelled, I am still compelled, on fresh examination, to believe that, according to the Bible, they are so. That is my whole story, frankly told. I am a Baptist, simply and solely, so far as I can analyze, because the Bible, interpreted in the light of such experience as God has given me—of such scholarship, as by diligent application for many years, under the most eminent teachers, I have been able to acquire—compels me to be one. In fact, I know of no other sufficient reason for being a Baptist. I surely would advise no one to become a Baptist on any other ground. When an enquirer asks me for a compendium of Baptist doctrine I usually hand him an edition of the New Testament, and tell him to study that. If Baptist principles and practices are not provable from the New Testament, then is the denomination known as Baptists divisive, heretical, rending the body of Christ. If I have interpreted God's word to-night wrongly, I pray the Spirit to reveal to me my mistake and undo my erroneous teaching. I ask each one of you to accept no position I have taken, save as it can justly be ascertained from the word of God. It is a serious thing to stand apart, even in matters of ordinance and polity, from the great mass of christians by whom one is surrounded, and, for one, I could not assume so grave a responsibility, did I not feel compelled thereto by God's word. If, on the other hand, I have interpreted the Scriptures aright, then in due time God will cause his people now so divided, to see eye to eye, and we shall all hold to one Lord, one faith, one baptism.

Meanwhile let us magnify the things on which we all agree. They are the essentials of religion. Let us work together, heart and soul, for the upbuilding of Christ's cause. Let us rejoice in the successes of God's people, under whatever name they may prosecute the Lord's work. Wherever I find a man loyal to Jesus Christ, as he unstands that Christ, there I find my spiritual brother, with him I can confer, pray, and work.

For the present, the best that we can do, amid our honest differences, is to search with noble ardor and with obedient spirits the oracles of God. Let us imitate the oracles of God. Let us imitate the Berean christians. Let us be Bereans. In a time when God's word is by many depreciated, let us lift it on high. The exaltation of the personal Christ, as made known in God's authoritive word, is the only way of which I can conceive whereby to attain christian union. The Bible, the Bible, the sufficient and final authority in all matters of religious faith and practice; let this be our motto, let this be our course. This word of God, infallible in all matters for which it was given—the reconstruction of humanity after the image of Christ Jesus; this Bible, inerrant in all things whereunto it is appointed—"for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness," devoutly studied, and humbly followed, will in the long run lead us into all the truth of God which we need to know.

"To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

Recollections of Raleigh Association—No. 1.

BY REV. D. S. WILLIAMS.

In the fall of 1826 I connected myself with the Cumberland Union Baptist church, belonging to the Raleigh Association. Having but little knowledge of the usages and customs of the Baptist churches, only what I had learned from the New Testament, I was anxious to learn more of the people with whom I had cast in my all for life. (True I had often attended the meetings of my former connection, the Presbyterians.)

In the fall of 1827, I attended the meeting of the Association in Franklin county at the Poplar Spring church.

My good mother fixed up my duds in my valise, a round leather contrivance that was strapped on the hind part of the saddle; and with my cloak across the saddle, I mounted and was off for the great meeting of the Association.

My feelings and curiosity can be better imagined than I can express or describe. I passed through the city of Raleigh. I asked my companion where was the Baptist meeting-house. He pointed to a little frame-house standing in an old field southeast from the Capitol, as the Baptist church house of the metropolis of the State of North Carolina.

On my arrival, I was received very cordially by the brethren, and was introduced as was the custom on such occasions. Among the brethren present, was the good Luther Rice, returned missionary from India, also brethren Pureboy, Crocker, Armstrong and Crudup. These brethren and many others I learned to love and venerate upon a better acquaintance. Of those named, brethren Rice and Armstrong were visitors; the others were members of the Association, and all zealous ministers of the Cross.

The introductory sermon was preached, and after an intermission for dinner, the Association was called together by the former Moderator. The letters were read and the regular business was taken up. I soon learned from the reading of the letters that there was, and had been, much trouble among the churches. Many were dissatisfied on the subject of missions, particularly, Foreign Missions. Bro. Rice, who for some time had been stirring up the churches of the South on the subject of Foreign Missions, used all of his influence in a plain and practical way both in the Association and in the pulpit to remove their prejudices and the unpleasant state of affairs. Many of the leading brethren felt and saw the importance of missionary work, and went into it with heart and soul.

From what I could learn, the subject of missions was rather novel at that time. There had been a Bro. R. T. Daniel, a Baptist preacher, who was working in the churches of the Association and in other portions of the State, had stirred up the churches in spirituality and missions, and was exerting a good influence in the great work of human salvation.

But, unfortunately, Bro. Daniel was a Mason, and as soon as that was found out, those who were seeking an excuse to fight the cause of missions, made a pretext of that fact to do so. Some who called themselves Baptists came out against everything that tended to the betterment of their fellowmen. A perfect hubbub was kicked up, and from that the trouble began. But many stood firm for the cause of missions, and the Association took its stand for said cause and remained a missionary body while I had the pleasure of attending its sessions.

Short and Long Pastorates.

Dear Bro. Boddy.—I write this to endorse the article, "Short and Long Pastorates," in the Recorder of Nov. 23d. This disorderly, captious and factious minority is becoming very numerous in our churches, insomuch that pastors frequently have to resign and leave work that God is blessing. The pastor may listen out somewhere in the camp for "Time to change pastors—don't think it best to keep one man too long." They always have some smart preacher in view who can preach with power, and the pastor had as well move out, or they will use him up.

One very sad thing about it is, the pastor is driven out disheartened, and having no other place in view where he may work, and no other way of support. Oh, that we all would read and practice what the Lord preached, Matt. 7: 12—"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so them, for this is the law and the prophets."

I am ready to agree with Bro. Lamar that if the minority will not come over with the church and be submissive to the majority of the church, then the thing to do is to inform them that they will not be recognized as members if they do not yield.

The minority spirit is doubtless doing injury to the cause in many churches. We would like to hear from the brethren on this subject.

The Meeting at Wallburg.

Dear Recorder:—Our meeting at Wallburg closed yesterday. It was a day which will long be remembered. I baptized twenty-four, three of them over seventy years of age; two others about sixty. Among those baptized were grand parents, children and grand children. One of the number had been received at Abbott's Creek; another at New Friendship. Five others stand approved for baptism; as many others who have professed will present themselves soon, while others will join at Abbott's Creek. A considerable number of others professed faith. The whole country around experienced a great awakening.

After baptism, I preached to an immense congregation, estimated at 1,000. The prospects for the cause at this place are truly encouraging. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

Bro. Henry Sheets was with us from Monday morning till Friday afternoon and did splendid service both in publicly preaching the word and in laboring privately among the people. Several of the New Friendship members and of the Abbott's Creek people aided with presence and by personal work. All are held in grateful remembrance by us all, while dear Bro. Sheets is "esteemed very highly in love for his work's sake," both for his earnest and faithful presentation of the truth and for his kind, gentle manner among the people. The Lord continue to bless him and his labors! May the Lord's word continue to have free course and be glorified everywhere!

Yours fraternally,

J. N. STALLINGS.

How to Make Missionaries.

This is the great subject of to-day among the christian people of this country. And just how to solve it practicably is the point. One may say that Christ makes missionaries. That is all well enough, when we know he uses the gospel as a means. Why do we not find more missionaries in the churches? Is it for want of a knowledge of heathen destitution? or a lack of proper information about the mission work? We say it is not altogether this, for the commonest reader and ordinary school boy know about these facts. We need more living, moving preaching on that fundamental principle of faith.

While we tell of the doleful state of the heathen, let us not forget the story of the Cross. When we grow enthusiastic on the success of our mission work, and how the gospel lifts men from the quagmires of sin in those foreign lands, let us know that if we preachers would put the simple truth of a well divided gospel, clothed with the love of Jesus, painted in the back ground with Sinai's smoking top, that true christians would wake from their slumbers. When shown the relation of the now benighted nations to us in our age, let us also give the relation of the church to Christ, and christians relation to the church.

The necessities of the times, now as has ever been, and will be till the end, demand the fat and the fleece, we admit; but will that make the sheep fat and fleecy? Let us lead them into green pastures, for our heavenly Father has them; and not pounce down on the poor naked sheep until they have been sufficiently fed with the sincere word. Not that I am opposing the mission work, but do suggest that we get at the bottom of it. How would it look to us to see a man abusing a poor brute that would not pull because its feed had been of such light stuff that the animal was so low spirited that it could not draw the desired weight? We may hollow and yell, and if possible make the brute understand the importance of his going on, and for all that he will not go because of his poverty. Christ told Peter to feed his sheep and lambs. Good feeding makes us love the good shepherd, and if we will learn more love to him will do more for his cause. But this says that is a fling at missions, but we say not because there is a solid [illegible] this work that should not be [illegible] among others.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1892.

REV. C. T. BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
J. C. CADDELL, AGENT AND CORRESPONDENT.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

Since the price of cotton has advanced nearly three cents a pound, is it not a good time for our brethren in the cotton sections to pay up their arrearages to the RECORDER? It would be a handsome way to acknowledge the blessing as coming from the Supreme Ruler of all events.

If all of the delinquents on our subscription books would remember the editor with these advances of prices and prospect of better times, it would enable him to pay up his indebtedness, and thereby remove a great burden, and cause him to move on in his work with a lighter heart and a more cheerful spirit.

A prompt response to this notice will in every instance be highly appreciated.

THE COMING CONVENTION.

The next session of our Baptist State Convention, to be held with the Tabernacle church, Raleigh, N. C., commencing December 8th, will be one of unusual interest. We do not presume in this paper to outline the policy or the work of that Convention. Nor are we disposed to hamper our brethren with a multitude of officious suggestions, even if we had been delegated to do so. Yet we are sure they will take kindly a few remarks, and even a few suggestions, of one who by long and intimate association with them has learned some things which tend for the good and efficiency of such meetings as the coming Convention and other things which experience and observation have taught us had better be avoided. The RECORDER, time and again, has been clearly recognized as the organ of the North Carolina Baptists, and we would be unworthy of the trust imposed upon us by our brethren if we failed to make proper effort to have some part in shaping our denominational policy and work. A paper, secular or religious, is an insipid affair that is in charge of one who deals only in editorial generalities, and leaves it to the contributors to his columns to discuss pro and con the leading questions of the day without any expression of assent or dissent on his part.

Allow us to suggest, then, first of all that as soon as possible after the Convention meets let the body be organized for work by the election of the proper officers. There is no need to delay the organization, and in order that there may be no delay, the Convention ought to be called to order by the president at as early an hour as possible, and all preliminaries necessary for organization attended to at once. The address of welcome and response should be heard on the first night of the meeting, and as it is a mere formality (a sincere one, however,) if there is any red-tape in the way of it, let the red-tape be removed and the address go on. Such address and response should be short but pointed, and free from fulsome flattery and nauseating compliments.

It is very important that the presence of strangers or visiting brethren should be recognized, and that they be invited to take seats on the floor, or as our English brethren might put it, given the "freedom of the meeting;" but it does not follow that such visiting brethren, except in rare cases, should do anything more than simply rise at their seats, acknowledge the invitation, and then sit down again. For a visiting brother to consume precious time in a long harrangue about how long he has been wishing to come, what he expects to do, see, and hear, &c., is in bad taste, to say the least. The case, of course, is different if the visiting brother comes from a foreign country, or comes as a delegate from some august body of our brethren, or is a distinguished missionary whom we have never seen before, and may never see again in the flesh. In a case like this, common courtesy would dictate a respectful, and if necessary, a patient hearing.

By all means let the man appointed president or moderator of the Convention keep order in the church or hall in which the sessions are held. He should not only have a gavel, but use it freely. His brethren have appointed him moderator with the expectation that he moderate, and it is a sore disappointment to many when he fails to do so. It is true our people are much more democratic in their methods than the assemblies of some other religious denominations. They have no bishop in the chair. The presiding officer is often only a layman, but we must say that the free and easy, and at times boisterous, manner which prevails in some sessions at least of our representative gatherings is not pleasant to many of our people, and certainly not calculated to produce a favorable impression upon intelligent visitors of other denominations who "look in" on our assemblies. If any of our brethren appointed to preside over one of our assemblies is so pleased with the honors of the office to which he is elected by his brethren as to bid for popularity, or a re-election, by failing to keep order in the house, it is a good evidence that he is not well qualified to fill the chair. The liberty, noise and confusion of the ancient forum cannot be introduced into a Baptist Convention without laying us open to the charge of being ignorant, or heathenish, neither of which we would enjoy. The talking, laughing and constant interruption of speakers in an unparliamentary manner constitute the most striking disorder we have noticed in our Convention, and we hope all such will be vigorously suppressed by the "coming" moderator and his assistants. Talented and decorous preachers are sometimes seen laughing and talking while another is addressing the Convention—conduct they would not enjoy if they were in the speakers' place, and which they would suppress sharply in their congregations at home. Why should you reprove a tittering miss, or a gay young man at home, brother, for laughing or talking during service when you do the same at your annual Convention. Consistency is a jewel, which many of our brethren may possess, but which they dim at times by their own thoughtlessness.

The day for long speeches and eloquent addresses has about passed in our Convention. We need not spill much eloquence over Foreign Missions, Home Missions, State Missions, Education, the Orphanage, or, the Ministers' Relief Board. The nights or evenings are rather long to devote entirely to one object that claims our attention. At least two could be considered at one such session. The "cut and dried" method only to a limited extent should be avoided. Said method is not baptistic. The corresponding secretaries of our Boards should have a respectful hearing, but beyond that the great cause they represent had best be open, as a rule, for general discussion—even if a brother from the "rural districts" does at times get the floor. He may not have a "prepared" speech, but what he says comes from the heart, and Baptists are fond of that kind of speaking.

In conclusion, we would respectfully suggest to our honored secretaries, "now or to be," not to burden themselves or the minutes with anything like an epitome of the speeches made. It is impossible or needless to give one of all, to do so in some cases smacks of favoritism.

REV. A. C. DIXON SICK.

Monday morning, Dec. 5th, Dr. C. Durham received a letter, dated Dec. 2d, from Bro. Dixon, saying:

"I got wet in a storm the other day, and, as a result, have a very deep cold, and the doctor tells me that it is very probable that I shall not be able to travel next week, but I hope he doesn't know much about it; for, if I cannot go, it will be one of the greatest disappointments of my life. I think it best to write this much, and will telegraph to you Tuesday or Wednesday of next week."

Monday night 8 o'clock Dr. Durham received the following telegram:

"Doctor says I should not come. Very, very sorry. A. C. DIXON."

We trust Bro. Dixon will be speadily restored to health. His inability to be at our Convention will be a great disappointment to many—very many—to the Convention.

IT seems much confusion exists about the "Centennial Fund." This, in part, grows out of the appointment and work of a special "Centennial Committee." It is now reasonably certain that the appointment of this committee was a mistake. The Home, Foreign and Sunday school Boards of the Southern Baptist Convention could, doubtless, have arranged and executed the whole of the work with more success, less cost, and confusion, without the committee than with it. But the committee exists, and we must now do the best we can with the conditions as we find them.

The original idea of the Southern Baptist Convention was to send out during the year, if the Lord should call them to the work, one hundred new missionaries to pagan and papal fields, and to increase correspondingly all of the other departments of our regular missionary work. The regular work of the Boards is the great work before us. Much valuable time, it seems, has been lost in centennial speeches. We hope our Convention will see to it that the regular work of the Boards shall have the right of way, and that the churches may not be left in doubt about the comparative importance of the different phases of work presented to them.

Also let the brethren see to it that their pastor does not fail to come for the lack of money to pay his expenses. The salaries of many of our ministers are small and not sufficient to pay their expenses to the Convention.

....Rev. D. N. Gore writes: "God in his mercy bless you and the RECORDER. It gets richer in truth, improves in wisdom, and is in fact the best paper I ever read. The Bible and the RECORDER are to me of more value than all the balance of my library. I have two sets of commentaries, a full set of classic works and histories, text-books, &c. But the Bible and RECORDER generally employs my time. I do not see how a Baptist could do without the RECORDER. Please pray for me and mine. * * * My school at this place (Loris, S. C.) is doing finely, and my church is in fine condition. Thanks to God for all the mercies he bestows."

....Jay Gould, the great money king, died at 9:15 a. m. on Dec. 2d. He is said to have controlled ten thousand miles of railway, and to be worth one hundred million dollars. The Richmond Dispatch in an editorial very significantly remarks: "'The little Wizard of Wall street' is now face to face with the mystery of mysteries." The leading question concerning his death is, "What effect will it have on Wall street?" The same editorial referred to above closes thus: "He has left his family great wealth. But he is poor indeed if he has not treasures laid up in heaven."

Thanks—Thanks.

On November 24th, '92, we were due on State Missions $3,227.50, and on the same day we sent a personal letter to 3,227 first class Baptist men and women in North Carolina, asking each one to send J. D. Boushall, Treasurer, Raleigh, N. C., one dollar—just one—on the above amount. We believe in the Baptist men and women of this State. We knew that every one to whom we sent the above letter was first class. Up to date, Monday, 10 o'clock a. m., about 1,000 persons have responded, sending the dollar.

Thanks, brethren! Thanks, sisters!

PREACHERS OFFENDED.

In sending out the above request, we gave instructions that no preacher was to have one of those letters. Others had to address the letters, however, and perhaps, a half dozen preachers, through mistake, received them. But, strange to say, these are not the men offended—they gladly sent the dollar. It was the preacher to whom we did not send the request who is offended. One of them sends his dollar and says: "You sent your request to some of my brethren, but not to me. I want to take part in this extra collection, and I send you the dollar for spite." We ask pardon, and promise never to do so again.

WE EXPECT

to hear from every one to whom the letters were sent on Nov. 24th, unless we made a mistake and addressed some of them to second or third class Baptists. But we must give a little time. Many of them are in remote sections of the State where the mails are weekly, and many of them had the silver but not the one dollar bill to put in a letter, and many of them did not have the money just the day the letter was received. But this will all be right soon. We believe in each one of these brethren and sisters. They are first-class, and will, before Jan. 1st, 1893, send the dollar. Thanks, thanks. To-day we need $2,078.22.

C. DURHAM, Cor. Sec.

Raleigh, Dec. 5, 1892.

From Mt. Airy, N. C.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Under the benedictions of God I am again encouraged to write a few words to your valuable paper, the medium of Baptist communication and Baptist news.

Of course my pen is vitalized by the inspiration and momentum which the recent meeting gave to our church and community. For eight or ten days Rev. L. G. Broughton, the pastor of Broad street, Winston, preached the gospel with great boldness and fearlessness, knowing no one save Christ and him crucified. Under his simple, plain, direct, earnest preaching of the cross, and yet in the spirit of tenderness and love, about forty-five persons made public profession of their saving faith in the Saviour.

It was another overwhelming moment in my life when, on last Sunday night, I buried with Christ in baptism twelve of these happy converts. There are yet eleven who have been approved by the church for the holy rite, and still there are more to follow.

Our meeting was a signal success. It was a revival of wonderful awakening among the unsaved, and of deep spiritual emotion among the saints. Each service was imbued from on high and laden with the fruitage of the Spirit. It was a real feast to the souls of men.

As to Bro. Broughton, I am constrained to say that he is faithful, plain, and at times eloquent.

He is a worker. He believes in showing your faith by your works. He urges all christians to go "somewhere, somehow, to work for God." I thank God for the glorious work he did for the cause in our midst. He and Bro. J. R. Harrison have assisted us in raising the Baptist standard of truth and practice in Mt. Airy.

Baptist affairs in this section of the State are quite prosperous. Think of it! A little more than twelve years ago there were only two Baptist sisters in town, while now there are more than two hundred, male and female. We thank God and take courage. Bro. B. made many warm friends while here. The good people of our church and town will ever be glad to tender him a cordial welcome to their homes and to their pulpit. He leaves us with many good wishes and fervent prayers following him to his field with the noble band at Broad Street. They are a noble band, too.

We are delighted to have Bro. Herring with us again after such serious illness. His influence was deeply felt in our meeting.

Mt. Airy, N. C. L. R. PRUETT.

Resolutions.

At a meeting of the former students of Wake Forest College, now at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, held Nov. 18, 1892, with C. J. Thompson, '89, as president, and J. W. Millard, '92, as secretary, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Be it Resolved, That the Wake Forest men at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary return fraternal greetings to professors and students at their alma mater; and that we congratulate Wake Forest College on having more representatives at the Seminary this year than ever before.

Resolved, Second, That we express our allegiance to old Wake Forest and our sincere appreciation of the time spent within her walls, and that the memory of those happy days are cherished by us still.

Further, That we express our earnest conviction that the Seminary is to the Baptist ministry of the South what Wake Forest College is to the Baptist denomination of North Carolina.

J. W. MILLARD, '92, Sec'y,

Dr. McArthur's Thanksgiving Observations.

"This painful lack of decoration is due to the election of Mr. Cleveland." "As a good Republican, I am in no mood for decorations."

And so the thanksgiving observations of this distinguished pastor are shaped and inspired by his political and partisan moods! What an admission to come from the lips of a professed christian and a religious teacher and guide of the people. And bad enough it would have been if made privately; but when we take into the account the fact that it was made from the pulpit and in the presence of a congregation assembled for worship and thanksgiving, it becomes shocking. And worse than all, these are the utterances of the pastor of one of the most prominent Baptist churches in the country. In this view of the case, it is humiliating. Plain and inconspicuous christian people are wont to believe and hope that such services are shaped and inspired by the Holy Spirit. But here seems to be a conspicuous exception to the rule. How painful to many will be the discovery.

J. L. CARROLL.

Chapel Hill, Dec. 1, 1892.

Meeting at Eureka—Rev. G. L. Finch.

Dear Recorder:—I have just closed a very interesting meeting at Eureka. One was baptized, and others likely will be soon, and I think the outlook is hopeful for our cause in that section. The house of worship is nearly completed, but I have had to bear the burden of building largely myself. Now since I have gone ahead and had the work done, I do hope that our people in the State will come to my aid and help me out of the financial strait in which this work has placed me.

I was ably assisted in the above named meeting by Rev. G. L. Finch. He did some preaching for us, the influence of which will doubtless be felt for some time to come. In this connection, I will say that Bro. Finch has resigned his churches both at La Grange and Snow Hill, and I can most cheerfully recommend him to any of our pastorless churches as an excellent gospel preacher and one of our most faithful pastors. He has been very greatly blessed in his work in this Association, and in my judgment the church that secures his services will be very fortunate.

God bless the dear RECORDER. Long may it live to contend for the faith once for all delivered to the saints.

Yours in Christ, C. J. NELSON.

The Cause on the Deep River Banks.

Dear Recorder:—I will give you some of the points along the banks of Deep river in Randolph county.

This field called Brother G. M. Webb of Shelby the first of the year, and he has done a grand and noble work here. The Baptist cause is building up very much along the line. There have been several additions to the church at this place during the year, and also at Worthville. I believe the Baptist cause is seventy-five per cent. better now than it was when he came here.

I never saw any one more devoted to the cause of Christ than Brother and Sister Webb. They made a great sacrifice to leave their nice, comfortable home at Shelby to accept a field of labor like this, but they seem perfectly resigned to the Lord's work, and are doing all in their power to advance the cause. Bro. Webb is a strong and firm man in his belief, and is not afraid to preach Baptist doctrine.

This is one of the most important fields in the State. The Baptist cause here has never been pushed as it is now. Bro. Webb is just now "getting the ropes," so he can do a noble work in the coming year. I don't believe the State Board can invest money in a more important field than this.

Brother Webb preached three sermons at Central Falls and stirred up eighteen Baptists, and will build a church there soon.

Ashboro is a thriving little town, the county seat of Randolph. He has been preaching there once a month, and the cause is taking right along. I am in hopes it will not be long before a church will be established there.

Studies of the Model Life. The Various Aspects of Christ Considered in a Series of Essays. By Rev. Burdett Hart, D. D. Price $1.25. Pastor Emeritus Congregational Church New Haven, Fellow of Yale University.

The human soul in its reaches after goodness, seeks a pattern after which it can model. The only perfect one is that of the God-man. Dr. Hart has presented him in these studies with a breadth of view, a vividness of outline, and a beauty of expression that must commend the Saviour to every reader. The book throughout is strong in argument, forceful in statement and elegant in style.

Little Bo: A Study in the Ninth of John. By Russell H. Conwell, Pastor of (The Temple) Grace Baptist church, Philadelphia. 8vo, 61 pp. With sixteen full-paged illustrations. Price, $1.00. Philadelphia: American Baptist Publication Society, 1420 Chestnut Street.

This, as the title indicates, is a study of the healing of the blind man, as recorded in the ninth of John. The name, of course, is an imaginary one, and was chosen, the author tells us, because it happened to strike his fancy. The characterization that has associated itself with this name will repay perusal. Many of the Bible stories gain increased attention as we take them from the somewhat unnatural atmosphere in which we have enfolded them, and tell them as we tell other stories. This does. In the picturesque, graphic language, for which the author has become noted, he brings before us the infancy of poor blind "Bo," the blighted hopes of his parents, his helplessness as he sits begging, the interposition of the Christ, the healing plunge in the Pool of Siloam, his return home, his arraignment before the Sanhedrin, and his finding and worship of the one who had given him sight.

From Brother R. T. Bryan.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Oct. 7, 1892.

Dear Bro. Bell:—The hot weather and sickness kept me home most of the time during last quarter, but I hope that some good was accomplished in Chinkiang, and in preparing for the autumn work.

With the assistance of a native brother, we had services nearly every night in our chapel, and a conversational meeting for enquirers in the afternoon from four to seven o'clock. These meetings were well attended, and we believe that good results will follow.

Our work was not all sowing. We received two members.

The Sunday school lessons were about Eli and Samuel; Saul and David; Absolom and Solomon. Disobedience and faithlessness versus obedience and faithfulness. They were well adapted to the development of a higher standard of christian character in our native church members. A number of them answered well on review day, and I hope have been greatly benefited by these lessons.

Two of our native brethren volunteered to visit the country villages.

They made two trips, and besides preaching and talking the gospel, distributed a number of tracts and gospel hymns.

The country around Chinkiang suffered much from drought and locusts. While they were thinking about these things and seeking deliverance, we distributed three tracts which I prepared for this purpose, composed mostly of Scripture texts on how to secure rain, how to destroy the locusts, sin and the sinner's Saviour.

God will honor his own work, and bless the work that honors the Scriptures.

I made use of a native teacher employed by the year and not used during the summer, to print about 13,000 tracts and hymns for distribution this autumn and winter in connection with our work, both at Chinkiang and Yangchow. In this way, after the small expense of cutting the characters on a board, the tracts cost nothing except for the paper, a mere trifle.

I enjoyed many hours of sweet communion with God, when not strong enough to engage in active work. We had, too, some precious prayer meetings in our church. May God accept and bless the quarter's work.

September 28th, we moved from Chinkiang to Shanghai at the request of the Board to take up work in Shanghai.

I made the move a matter of prayer, and feel that I am led of God to come here.

I am satisfied that God has a special work for me to do in Shanghai. Being able to speak the "Mandarin" and also the Shanghai dialect will widen my field of usefulness

It is a privilege to follow such workers as Dr. Yates and Herring, and to be associated with Mrs. Yates, Mr. and Mrs. Tatum.

I hope to be able to write more fully about the work in Shanghai at the end of the year. Yours sincerely.—R. T. Bryan, in Foreign Mission Journal.

It is said that the logical faculty is dying out in the world. One reason given is that in our educational methods, pupils are taught to cram rather than taught to think. No doubt this is an important element in the case, but there are others. Our material development and our mammon worship have operated most unfavorably on the thinking power of this generation. The great point is to be comfortable, and hard thinking is not believed to render those who indulge in it comfortable. High thinking, too, has come to be coupled with poor living, and this generation prefers high living and poor thinking.

One sees on every hand the evidence of the decay of the logical faculty. Note the utter lack of argument in favor of certain innovations in religion. In theology men adopt a thejstic premises and reach theistic conclusions, in utter unconsciousness that there is anything wrong. Whoever seeks to point out their mistake is roundly denounced for his pains. Those who favor the adoption by Baptist churches of certain parts of the "Christian Year," offer no argument, and they cry out and make a wry face at those who oppose the innovation. The answer is "old fogy," "enemy of progress," "trying to domineer over Baptists," etc. The craftsmen of Ephesus answered Paul with a wild cry, "great is Diana of Ephesians;" and as they kept up their yelling "for the space of two hours" they felt that Paul's arguments were abundantly met. Surely two hours' yelling of several thousand people is more than an offset to the arguments of one man!

We see the same thing in science and in politics, as well as in private life. The wildest vagaries are caught up and advocated while people seem unable to see the folly of them.

We need a revival of earnest thinking. In our churches we need a revival of theology, that the people may have clear and true views of God's character and of man's relation to him. To worship God acceptably it is necessary to worship him "in spirit and in truth," and the "in truth" is as necessary as the "in spirit."—Western Recorder.

The Story of Pot Hooks.

This is the rather ludicrous title of a serio-humorous book by Rev. C. A. Jenkens, of Oxford, N. C. Pot Hooks, a backwoods philosopher tells of some things in life as he saw them. He saw some very, very funny things, and many of them were funny just because he didn't see them. The design of the author in writing the book is evidently a serious one, but from start to finish there is scarcely a line in the book that does not appeal to one's sense of the ludicrous. The reader would expect a dry-as-dust, matter-of-fact preface, to say the least. But he is disappointed; and after bumping his nose against a sentence like this: "I have desired to write a book for the melancholy, and at the same time furnish a suitable manual for the insane," he actually finishes reading the preface. Without stopping to decide the trifling question as to which of these two classes we belong to, we took up Pot's narrative.

It was gratifying to learn in the very first paragraph something about the fellow's outlandish name. Says he, "I inherited the hooks from my father—where I hooked the Pot from is a mystery." Pot then conjectures that his name is either an abbreviation of Potiphar or a monument to his infantile propensity for pot liquor.

The reader's interest is keenly alive before he has finished the first chapter, and unless he is interrupted by some such startling announcement as that the cow has broken into the garden or the baby has fallen into the well, he will probably read the entire book before he puts it down. In course of time Pot becomes a preacher. That there are many ministerial experiences related in the book, follows naturally.

We cannot give here a table of contents, but we will select the titles of a few chapters.

Of course Pot had to go off to school. The chapter entitled "Sheepskin College" contains some college reminiscences and adventures that are very rich. Especially mirth-provoking are the various reasons assigned for conferring the title of the "double sacred consonant" (D. D.) on different ministerial brethren.

"Starting in Life" is another chapter in which are related the experiences of Pot in getting a start. With a patent cork screw he made a vast fortune—on paper. He compounded a patent medicine and advertised it. The advertised directions are calculated to dislocate the reader's anatomy. Pot got so much out of his wonderful medicine and imposed on so many people that, as he says, he "was ashamed of being a member of the human race; for it became clear to me that the world is a vast fool asylum, kept by a few sane individuals here and there."

The chapter entitled "A Pastoral Visit" is terribly trying on melancholy. The visit was also trying on the pastor. The picture of the visit is a study.

The short-comings of the fashionable choir—and other sorts, too, as for that matter—are ventilated in the chapter entitled "Toplofty Choir." Pot says Toplofty choir sang that good old hymn which runs:

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord"
Is laid for your faith in his excellent Word!'

But here is what the congregation heard:

"Ha fa ha fwa dah sha, ya sah ah thah Loraw.
Ah la fwa yah fwah ong whang ohx sa la whaah!"

"The Average Girl" is the title of a lecture delivered by Pot before a celebrated female college, after which he wasn't invited to deliver any more lectures at female schools.

These are the titles of only a few chapters selected from a large book. It is impossible to describe the book adequately, because we know of nothing to which we may liken it. It is overflowing with humor of the most refined and delicate character, and at the same time abounds in vigorous satire. In an especially happy manner does the author pay his respects to the vanities and weakness and foibles and follies and sham and hypocrisy of people who pass off on themselves as deeply religious but fail to impress other folks that way.

The Story of Pot Hooks is a book worth reading and worth buying. Besides being amusing, it is stimulating and furnishes much to think about. We are glad to announce this new book by a North Carolina author, and are especially happy to number the author among the warmest personal friends we ever had. Rev. C. A. Jenkens, the author, is one of North Carolina's most faithful and consecrated ministers, is now a professor in Oxford Female Seminary, and by all of his friends and acquaintances is known as a man who is as modest as he is gifted.—W. F. Marshall, in Gastonia Gazette.

The brethren of the Goldsboro church have completed three new churches within the past year. Bro. Edwards, the pastor, has in addition to his own work, been supplying two of these churches during the year, preaching at one on Sunday afternoon and the other on Thursday night. They hope now through the co-operation and help of the State Board to put a man on this field for all his time.

Read the advertisement of the Baptist Sunday-school Board, to be found in this paper. Now is the time to order Sunday-school supplies for the first quarter of 1893. It is needless to say that the publications of the Board are first-class.

On November 21st, 1892, Rev. A. D. Hunter and Rev. R. D. Carroll closed an interesting meeting at Cox's School-house in the southern part of Pitt county. The meeting continued eight or ten days and is believed to be an important point in the community.

A Baptist church will be organized in North Wilkesboro soon. And it is expected that an elegant building will be erected there in the near future.

J. D. BOUSHALL,
Treas. Bap. State Convention.

Raleigh, Dec 5, 1892.

The North Carolina Baptist State Convention will meet in the Tabernacle church in Raleigh on Thursday the 8th inst. at 7:30 p. m. The introductory sermon will be preached at that hour by Rev. J. S. Handaway, of Oxford, (Rev. R. Ford is alternate).

Rev. W. O. Hall of Scottville, [illegible] died Nov. 30th. He was an [illegible] beloved minister.

From Person County.

Editor of Recorder:—Thanksgiving has come and gone, and found us as a school in the midst of what has been so far a very prosperous year's work. For the sake of those who are not acquainted with Bethel Hill Institute, I would like to state a few facts regarding it, which may interest your readers.

It is situated in Person county near the Virginia line and near the junction of the A. & D. and the L. & D. railroads. The country is high and healthy.

It would be difficult to find a better community in the State. The people are open-hearted, frank, free and generous, and seem to be working for the honor and glory of God. Strangers are gladly welcomed to their homes and hearts, and all students when they go away, carry with them many pleasant recollections of their kindness.

Rev. J. A. Beam is at the head of our institution. All who know this excellent man need no further testimony as to the good management of the school. His pure christian character, his deep piety and his great zeal for the promotion of the Master's cause are well known to a great number of your readers. His noble wife is a worthy assistant in his great enterprise. She is one of those generous, warm-hearted ladies whom to know is to love.

Miss Lulu Ballentine of Wake county is also an assistant teacher, and her many virtues and noble traits of character endear her to all whofare brought under her influence.

Training of the heart in connection with the mind is one of the chief aims of the teachers. We know of no young man or young lady who ever came here and went away without having experienced a spiritual growth and having received grander impressions of what it means to live. There are now noble men and women in different sections of this and neighboring States who are doing a great work for the uplifting of humanity, who owe to this institution a large part of the success which is now crowning their labors.

One special feature of the school is the training of young ministers. Surely a great work is being done in this direction and one which in future years will redound to the honor and glory of God.

No better place of training could be found for one who is not yet ready to enter college, and who is anxious to prepare himself for his life's work as an ambassador of Christ. Besides being an excellent preparatory school, there is a great opportunity for spiritual growth and religious development. Being under the influence of such a man as the principal is of vast benefit to the young minister. Bro. Beam has learned by experience some of the trials and difficulties which beset their pathway, and he is always a sympathizing friend, ready to advise and help. The writer, for one, can testify that many dark hours have been brightened for him by his kind encouragement.

We have in our ministerial class this year eight students, representing three States. The Association with each other is a great source of improvement to each one. Together they can talk over their work for the present and the future and derive fresh inspiration to pursue with renewed zeal the great object of their high calling.

All our students this session seem to be filled with a desire to improve their talents and to make themselves nobler. Not only is this so among the young men, but it is also the disposition of the young ladies to a very marked degree. We believe that we have here young ladies who in the future will be noble workers for Christ and who will honor any sphere in life which they may be destined to fill. They have noble aims and aspirations that will surely be felt in the future.

Bro. Beam has had other opportunities offered him for fields of labor which possibly might result in more personal aggrandizement to himself; but he prefers in his own way to work for the honor and glory of God, feeling that he can do more for Christ in this sphere than any other.

We have placed before the readers a few of the advantages of this school which we would recommend to the consideration of all young ladies and young men who wish to prepare themselves for fields of future use, fulness. Yours in brotherly love,

C. L. GRAVES.

Money Received for Church Building in Edgecombe County.

At the beginning of this year there were only sixty-one Missionary Baptists in Edgecombe county, with a population of about 25,000 souls. Now we have at least one hundred or more. We need three new churches very much from Whitakers to Hobgood, one at Cherry's Cross Roads, Lane's School-house and Lawrence's School-house. Our work will be greatly retarded unless these churches are built soon. We cannot build these churches unless our brethren and sisters help us.

Dear reader, will you please help us? We are only asking aid to build the hull of these churches. If we can get them hulled in we will try to finish them without further aid.

The following churches and friends have kindly aided us in this work: Tar River Association, $4 45; Brassfields church, $4 50; Flat Rock church, $6.82; Wake Forest church, $20.15; Second church, Durham, $4 11; W. M. S., Perry's Chapel church, $2.75; Wake Union Union Meeting, $4.50; New Hope Union Meeting, $11.11; J. M. Heck, J. N. Holding, C. H. Norton, each $5.00; Miss Amanda Cheek, $3.00; Mrs. A. D. Markham, W. H. Holloway, each $2.00; [illegible] T. Newton, G. T. Pennington, each $1.50; John T. Pullen, F. A. Hatch and wife, —— Morgan, T. J. Riggsbee, H. A. Beams, W. A New Lesson Help.

One of the most hopeful and promising signs of progress in Sunday-school Bible study is the appearance of a new issue by the American Baptist Publication Society, entitled The Inductive Bible Lesson Quarterly, edited by the Rev. W. G. Fennell; Prof. Philip A. Nordell, D. D., and Prof. H. H. Harris, LL. D. The lines of the International series are followed, but the studies include the whole book from which the International lessons are taken. No Scripture text is printed with the lessons, hence the student must perforce use the Bible at every point. In style, size, and price, the new Quarterly is similar to the Senior Quarterly, the same dictionary and pictorial illustrations being in both. Otherwise there is no resemblance. The student is led along from step to step in an easy manner, if the mind is willing, until the full scope of narrative and history and prophecy are brought out clearly when, the facts having been brought thoroughly to mind, the practical applications to heart and life come naturally, the closing thought appears evident, and written test questions close the lesson. The plan adopted is thorough, yet within the reach of any intelligent seeker after truth. This Quarterly is in all respects most admirable, and its use cannot fail to elevate the standard of Sunday-school work. Samples will be sent on application to the Society. Price, single copy, thirty cents a year; in clubs of five or more, twenty-four cents each per year.

The palate is almost tickled with Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil. The stomach knows nothing about it—it does not trouble you there. You feel it first in the strength it brings; it shows in the color of cheek and smoothing out of wrinkles.

It was a beautiful thing to do, to cover the odious taste of cod-liver oil, evade the tax on the stomach, and take health by surprise.

Talk, Don't Scream.

A little observation ought to teach any preacher to talk to an audience, large or small, rather than declaim. In the presence of a man who shouts, screams and declaims the people are restless, look out at the windows and otherwise show their want of interest. After him another preacher arises and in a familiar, conversational style makes clear statements of fact and doctrine and the attention is profound. Men wish to be taught something in a sensible way. When the preacher does not get and hold the attention of his congregation he is to blame. Plainness of speech, in an earnest, conversational style is what the people want and what they need.—Texas Baptist Standard.

Miss Shepherd, the Accomplished Vocalist.

"O Music! thou that bringest the receding waves of eternity nearer to the weary heart of man as he stands upon the shore, and longs to cross over, art thou the evening breeze of this life, or the morning air of the future one?"

These beautiful words of Richter were recalled upon hearing a solo by Miss Shepherd, the accomplished vocalist of Oxford Female Seminary, at the Baptist church on Sunday evening. She sang "Unanswered," beautiful words by Robert Browning, and held her hearers completely under the spell of her voice, whether it lingered in plaintive minor strains in the valley of darkness and despondency, or soared in the very ecstacy of triumphant faith beyond the fears and sorrows of this present time. President Hobgood is to be congratulated upon the acquisition of this sweet singer.

On the same evening, Dr. Wm. Royall of Wake Forest College preached an able sermon from Matthew 13: 23.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. Cuba, a Miracle of Missions.

Our prayers are to cluster around the lovely "Pearl of the Antilles this month, and how much like the church just after Stephen's death, is the religious history of this island. Persecution in both instances led to the spread of the gospel seed, and today the christian religion has gained a firm foothold in Cuba. From the lowest classes to the highest circles, many witnesses can be found to testify to the renewing and saving influences of the Word of Life.

It strengthens the faith to study the past history of Cuba. Clearly do we trace the leadings of the hand of Providence, first in putting before his servants this "open door," and then in shielding them in persecution's dark hour. Who but God could have given such a sublime trust and heroic endurance to Diaz and his co laborers when passing through the times that tried their souls?

To day, Cuba stands before the world, a miracle of missions, a mighty testimony to the grace that saves the sinner; to the power that overturns men's devices, and restrains the wrath of his enemies; to the holiness of our God who brings to light "the hidden things of dishonesty;" and to his great loving-kindness in presenting to darkened minds the knowledge of his glory, "in the face of Jesus Christ."

The future of Cuba depends upon the churches in our Southern Land in a large measure. We know that Catholicism is in this lovely island, poisoning the spiritual and intellectual atmosphere with its baneful influence, and we know also that only the pure, healthful gospel can bring new life to cleanse and invigorate.

In working for the Centennial Chapel Fund, we will be doing great things for Cuba. If we study carefully the map of this isle of the sea, we shall see there are many points yet unreached, much land still to be possessed. Chapels are needed, and, dear children, do not be satisfied until you have had a share in helping to build the houses wherein God's praises shall be sung, his Son worshipped and adored, and in which multitudes shall be gathered.

Let Cuba, then, dear children, have your prayers, your contributions, and your earnest, immediate help.—E. Y. H., in Kind Words.

A Trip to Japan.

Little seven-year old Ada came in, looking greatly fuzzed, as she said,

"I asked Cousin Edith to take us on a picnic, 'cause 'twas my birthday; but she said she would take us on a make believe-picnic to Japan. Where is Japan, Harry? and what did she mean?"

"Why, don't you know," answered Harry, with the superior wisdom of a dozen years, "that Cousin Edith is a missionary to Japan, just back on a visit home? Here she is now. But what in the world has she got on?"

Cousin Edith laughed a merry little laugh, then said, with a very serious dignified air, "Here is your guide, in Japanese costume, ready to conduct you on your voyage to Japan."

"We must first cross our own continent to San Francisco, then take a steamer westward to the 'Island Empire.' Did you know, Harry, that Columbus started on his first voyage in search of Japan—'Jipangu,' of which Marco Polo had written such a glowing description?"

"But, Cousin Edie," interrupted Ada, "do they really wear that kind of dress like you've got on?"

"Yes, they wear a loose robe with a long sash wound round the waist and tied behind. They have their dresses loose in the neck, forming a sort of bag behind, so they can put their babies in them and carry them on their backs. Now, Harry, bring your geography and find Japan for us and tell us the population."

Harry promptly returned, saying, "This book was published in 1878 and gives the population something more than 34,000,000."

"Thank you, sir. You know that Japan consists of four large islands, besides several smaller ones. It is governed by an emperor called the Mikado."

"Cousin Edie, what sort of houses do they live in?" asked Ada, who was scarcely old enough to enjoy the geography lesson.

"They are very funny looking things indeed," was the reply. "They can be taken to pieces and carried away in a box. They have a roof and a few side braces, but are made mostly of bamboo and paper. If a cyclone strikes them, away they go."

Here mamma, who had slipped in unobserved, asked about the condition of the women.

"As compared with other pagan nations, the condition of Japanese women is an elevated one, though by no means an enviable one, as we regard it. Their religion offers them no hope. Nirvana, the Buddhist's heaven, is not for them. When a woman dies, they say she has sunk into the lake of hell, and her relatives pray that her soul may be reborn into the world as a man. This rebirth is the best, the only hope offered a woman.

"This gloomy religion embraces even the children. The mother who loses her child is taught that its spirit is wandering in a gloomy region on the banks of a stream where a dreadful old crone is waiting to seize and bear it to a purgatory, where the tender baby fingers must toil all the day long.

"There is a curious temple in Osaka to which bereaved mothers often make pilgrimages. It is decorated with the clothing and toys of dead children, which their parents have brought in the hope that the departed prince, to whom the temple is dedicated, seeing these touching reminders, may take pity and lead the children into Paradise."

Cousin Edie saw that mamma's tears were falling fast, and the children, too, were weeping.

She knew they were thinking of the dear little babe whom the Good Shepherd had so recently taken from them. How could they have borne it, if they had not known that that their darling was "safe in the arms of Jesus"!

She was silent a few moments, then resumed, "Christianity is the only religion that offers hope to our women and children. I trust our little Sunbeams will remember this and that gratitude will lead them to help other children who do not enjoy its blessings."

Ada had slipped down and now came back, saying, "Here is my birthday dollar papa gave me to buy a doll. I want you to buy a Bible for that woman you told me about yesterday that lost her little girl. I want her to know that she is in heaven."

Mamma smiled and murmured, "A little child shall lead them." Perhaps it was Ada's example that led her to make her own generous contribution the next day.

"Do the little girls go to school?" asked Ada, the irrepressible, who is greatly pleased at the thought of soon becoming a schoolgirl.

"Yes, indeed," was the reply. "There are thousands of public schools, academies, colleges, and a university. The Japs are beginning to catch up with the times, and have railroads, telegraphs, telephones, electric lights, street-cars, etc.

"They have some very queer customs, though. Instead of killing his enemy, a Japanese will kill himself, out of spite. Instead of reading across the page, their books read from top to bottom. They build the roofs of their houses first. When you go to see them, you must be sure to take off your shoes and keep on your hat!"

"Tell us something more about their religion," said mamma.

"The two great religions of Japan are Buddhism and Shintooism. Buddhism is the religion of the masses. You should see them go up to their temples to worship. Before entering, they will feed the sacred horse and the holy pigeons. They then ring a bell, to awaken their gods! Some of the wooden gods have their features entirely rubbed away by the sick people who have come to them for healing. Each house has a closet in which the household gods are kept.

"But the people are becoming disgusted with their superstitions and idolatrous religion.

"Before Commodore Perry entered Japan in 1854, their ports were closed against foreigners. Now they welcome them, and, we think, will soon welcome the foreigner's religion. They are groping for the light—for the 'unknown God.' What better work for our Sunbeams than to shed their beams upon this 'Land of the Sunrise,' until it is indeed bright with the 'Sun of Righteousness'?

"But it is getting late, and we must hasten back from our first voyage to Japan."

And there was a far-away look in her eyes, as she thought of the long voyage she was soon to take to her adopted country.

"Cousin Edie," said Ada, as she nestled in her lap in the twilight, "I think I would like to be a missionary and go to Japan with you, when I get grown."

"God bless you, my darling, and all of his Sunbeams, and make you to shine in his service, wherever most needed, whether at home or abroad," was Cousin Edith's prayer, as she bade her a loving "Good night."

Wake Forest Foot-ball Team in Knoxville.

Editor of Recorder:—Having just returned from a victorious visit to Knoxville, Tenn., and realizing that Wake Forest College and the RECORDER are closely allied, and believing that when one is benefited, the other receives aid also, I wish to give to the friends of both a few remarks made by some prominent Baptists and other notable persons of Knoxville.

When the memorable foot ball team of Wake Forest College arrived in Knoxville, Tenn., they were greeted by loud shouts of applause of North Carolinians and Tennesseeans with our famous College yell. The team was divided up among the citizens of Knoxville, Mr. W. A. Wray taking the largest portion.

After the game on Nov. 24th, Mr. W. A. Wray gave a thanksgiving supper to the team and their friends.

While the boys of Wake Forest with their skill were rapidly moving towards the goal of the U. V. T., it was amusing to hear Rev. Carter Helm Jones ask his deacon, a native of Tennessee, "Who has the ball?" His deacon replied, "Our boys," meaning the U. V. T. boys; and almost instantly the deacon asked who had the ball, he eagerly replied, "Our boys," meaning the W. F. C. boys. When the time had expired and the game played, it was encouraging to the team to hear the boys, formerly of the Old North State, say, "Our boys are victorious."

At the close of the game, Mr. W. A. Wray, a deacon in the First Baptist church, said, "The strict sobriety of the boys while in Knoxville, and the marked honesty with which they played the game, together with the morality of the team, was the greatest advertisement of Wake Forest College that had ever been on that side of the mountains." This was sanctioned by the crowd that was standing around him in which there were two or three ministers. It was a general remark among the prominent citizens of Knoxville that the gentlemanness of the team spoke well for the morals of the College. And it is an undeniable fact that every father in seeking a college for his boy, seeks one with a high moral standing. While Wake Forest College has permitted her foot-ball team to play beyond the borders of her State, yet her high moral standing and dignity of character, instead of being lowered, has been elevated everywhere the team has been. Our President received a letter, after we returned from a trip in Virginia, saying, not in so many words, but conveying the idea, that if our boys knew how to cheat they would almost be invincible.

The Wake Forest Foot-ball Team extends to Mr. Wray their most hearty and sincere thanks for the kindness and interest he manifested in us. Also, to Knoxville and the U. V. T.

We are glad to say that we have not lost a game this season and have not been scored against but twice.

Yours respectfully, LEFT GUARD.

Status of the London Spurgeon Tabernacle.

The following, says the Chicago Standard, taken from a newspaper clipping sent us by our London correspondent, and part of a letter signed "James A. Spurgeon, Pastor," and "Thomas Olney, Treasurer," may, we should hope, be taken as indicating the present status at the Tabernacle in one or two very important points of view:

"As the church officers of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, we desire to assure all our friends that no changes have been made in the doctrines, constitution, practice, or institutions of the church so long under the care of Pastor C. H. Spurgeon. Perfect unanimity has characterized all our counsels upon these points. This ancient church has been, and must ever be, a Baptist community in its creed and practice. No one has expressed a wish to make any difference, and the attempt would instantly be suppressed. The pastor is, and ever must be, an immersed believer, who is pledged to maintain the distinctive creed of the church in all its integrity. Upon this point also there is perfect oneness of purpose throughout the whole church and all its officers. Indeed, no other than a Baptist can be chosen to the pastoral office according to our deed of trust. No change has been made or proposed in the management of the Pastors' College, which is conducted, as far as can be, upon the old lines, alike as to choice of students, their qualifications for admission, and the course of study pursued. Any statement to the contrary is incorrect."

Yes, dear brother pastor, you are having a hard time of it. God only knows the burden you bear because of precarious support, lack of sympathy, etc. Sometimes you seriously question whether you are doing any good, and you possibly feel tempted to turn aside to some other and more remunerative pursuit. Stop just there. You are sowing, another may reap. Be willing to be only a sower if God so wills. Could you see into the future and behold the church you now serve, grown strong and vigorous with a pastor amply sustained and doing great good, you would be willing to toil on in your present field. One of the surprises in heaven will be the discovery that you builded wiser than you knew.—Central Baptist.

He Giveth Grace.

Over and over the sweet refrain,
In accents pure and holy,
Sings in my heart and soothes its pain—
"He giveth grace to the lowly."

Grace to bear the trials of life,
Grace to perform each duty,
Grace transforming the desert of strife
Into a garden of beauty.

Rough and steep is the path I tread,
Beset by trouble and sorrow,
But grace relieves my heart from dread,
Gives hope of rest to-morrow.

Grace bears me through the ills I meet,
Leaves me to stumble never,
But smooths the pathway for my feet
And strengthens each endeavor.

So over and over the sweet refrain,
In accents pure and holy,
Sings in my heart and soothes its pain—
"He giveth grace to the lowly."

—Abbie Kenfield.

How to Cook a Husband.

The following recipe is not altogether new, but it has the virtue of having been tested and found to be reliable. It is somewhat long and liable to be forgotten, and then it were well if it were kept near at hand in the work-basket, for instance, so that it can be read frequently.

"A good many husbands are utterly spoiled by mismanagement. Some women go about it as if their husbands were bladders, and blow them up. Others keep them constantly in hot water; others let them freeze by their carelessness and indifference. Some keep them in a stew by irritating ways and words. Others roast them. Some keep them in pickle all their lives. It cannot be supposed that any husband will be tender and good managed in this way, but they are really delicious when properly treated. In selecting your husband you should not be guided by the silvery appearance, as in buying mackerel, nor by the golden tint, as if you wanted salmon. Be sure and select him yourself, as tastes differ. Do not go to the market for him, as the best are always brought to your door. It is far better to have none unless you will patiently learn how to cook him. A preserving kettle of the finest porcelain is best, but if you have nothing but an earthenware pipkin it will do, with care. See that the linen in which you wrap him is nicely washed and mended, with the required number of buttons and strings nicely sewed on. Tie him to the saucepan by a strong silk chord called comfort, as the one called duty is apt to be weak. They are apt to fly out of the saucepan and be burned and crusty on the edges, since, like crabs and lobsters, you have to cook them while alive. Make a clear, steady fire out of love, neatness, and cheerfulness. Set him as near this as seems to agree with him. If he sputters and fizzes, do not be anxious; some husbands do this till they are quite done. Add a little sugar in the form of what confectioners call kisses, but no vinegar or pepper on any account. A little spice improves them, but it must be used with judgment. Do not stick any sharp instruments into him to see if he is becoming tender. Stir him gently; watch the while, lest he lie too flat and close to the saucepan, and so become useless. You cannot fail to know when he is done. If thus treated you will find him very digestible, agreeing nicely with you and the children, and he will keep as long as you want, unless you become careless, and you set him in too cold a place."

The Exposition Did It

Is how Mr. O. C. Johnson, of Beloit, Wis., expresses how he found out what Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein was, and how efficacious it is in curing coughs, colds and consumption.

Nervous Children.

I want to say a word about nervous children. Never scold or make fun of them. They suffer enough without your threats or sarcasm. Don't let them know you see their awkwardness when in company, nor their grimaces when alone. A case was reported by the Boston Globe of a boy ten years old, who, on being vexed, and often without any apparent provocation, will clench his hands and make the most frightful contortions of the muscles of his face and head, till his poor mother fears he is idiotic. By no means. He is the brightest boy in his class at school, fond of reading and of natural history, but he is of a highly nervous temperament, and has not been taught to control the little wires, so to speak, on which he is strung. This is no single case. There are thousands of children who give way to their nerves in similar fashion. Never whip them, but talk to them about these curious little strings that should be made their servants, not their masters. A prominent physician in this city says the man or woman who whips a nervous child should for every blow given receive five, and is on a level with brutes that have no reason. It is our duty to encourage and help them. Be patient with them. They are the making of our future successful men and women, for they will work hard at whatever they undertake. Brace up your own nerves first, and then be indulgent toward the capers of your overnervous children.—Christian Union.

Electrical Terms.

At the present time electricity depends [illegible] engineering for its generation. [illegible] behooves every live engineer to [illegible] the knowledge regarding its generation [illegible] possibly can. At the present time nearly all of our ocean, river, and lake steamers are equipped with dynamos for electric lighting, and the engineer who does not acquire knowledge necessary to care for the dynamos and its appliances will find hard work to procure a position. Engineers will find herein the electrical terms so clearly defined that any person can easily understand them: Volt, unit of pressure, called electric moter force, same as pounds of steam; ampere, unit of quantity, called current same as gallons of water; ohm, unit of resistance, similar to friction; watt, unit of energy consumed, similar to foot pounds, and thus 746 watts equal one horse power, same as 33,000 foot pounds.

The whole question of electrical distribution may be properly illustrated by its analogy to hydraulics. The dynamo is essentially a rotary pump, but pumping electricity instead of water. If the discharge pipe of a rotary pump be carried around through a given circuit and connected with a suction, both pump and pipes being full of water, the movement of the pump will obviously cause the water to flow in one direction, producing a continuous current of water. Substitute dynamo for pump, wire for pipe, and electricity for water, and conception of electrical transmission by the continuous current is at once clear as to its elementary phenomena. We will bracket the analogous electrical terms; then we may say that a certain number of pounds (volts) of pressure are required to overcome the friction (resistance) of the pipe (wire) in order that the water (current) may flow at the rate of so many gallons (ampers) per minute. The larger the pipe (wire) the more water (current) can be carried and the less will be the friction (resistance); or per contra, the smaller the pipe (wire) the less quantity (ampers) per minute and the greater the friction (resistance). Manifestly the pipe (wire) might be so small that the friction (resistance) would absorb a very large proportion of the power of the pump (dynamo), leaving but little remaining for useful effect, therefore the two horns of the dilemna are: If the pipe (wire) be too large, it will cost too much; if too small, the loss will be too great.—R. G. Davis, in Marine Review.

Expectoration.

Aside from its being an exceedingly filthy habit, the custom of free and careless expectoration involves dangers to health which are not generally understood, but which are nevertheless in no sense fanciful.

It is well established that the poison of certain diseases appears in the expectoration. The germs of consumption are known to be minute, rod like, vegetable bodies, visible only by the aid of the most powerful microscope. In the matter expectorated by those afflicted with this disease these germs are met with in large numbers. By experiment it has been determined that they are very tenacious of life, and can be destroyed only by certain fluids or by exposure to a high temperature for a considerable length of time.

It is easy to see, therefore, that if the expectoration from the lungs is allowed to lie exposed till it becomes dry, the germs will be taken up and scattered abroad by the air currents, and in this way a fruitful source of contagion will be provided.

Fortunately most people in good health remain unaffected by the germs which have found entrance into the body. It is only when the powers of resistance are weakened by some defect of the constitution, or when some unusually favorable opportunity for infection has been given, that the poison gains a mastery and produces disease.

When we consider that in a hall of moderate size, which has been occupied by an audience for an hour or more, there are millions of germs of various kinds, some of which, under favorable conditions, are capable of producing disease, then the wisdom of such a provision of nature becomes apparent.

No doubt every one has felt a certain disgust at the hawking and spitting which is met with to a greater or less extent in all public places, and it is well for every one to know that there are [illegible] reasons for the observance of a rule which good breeding and a care for the feelings of others ought to be sufficient to enforce.

It is in the discovery of the real causes of disease that we shall most surely find the valuable ounce of prevention. If we must expectorate, let us at least refrain from doing so in public places.—Youth's Companion.

The Value of Sunshine.

"Basking in the sun" is in itself of real and considerable benefit, and it is no compliment to our human intelligence to find that cats and dogs understand that fact much better than we do. Even the "blue glass" craze had a truth underlying it, and owed such success as it achieved to the proportion of sunlight which penetrated its colored medium. The love of sunshine is naturally one of our strongest instincts, and we should be far healthier and happier if we followed and developed it, instead of practically ignoring and repressing it. How a sparkling, sunny morning exhilarates us and makes us feel that "it's too fine a day to spend indoors," and yet how few holidays are taken for that reason. The wealth of the sunbeams is poured out lavishly all around us, and we turn from it to struggle for a few pitiful handfuls of something else that is yellow and shining, but not half so likely to bring us happiness, and often has strange, red spots upon it.—North American Review.

For every variety and phase of the many diseases which attack the air passages of the head, throat, and lungs, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral will be found a specific. This preparation allays inflammation, controls the disposition to cough, and prevents consumption.

Home—Woman's Realm.

Home is the habitat of woman. In the home, all that is characteristically feminine in woman unfolds and flourishes. Home without woman is a misnomer, for woman makes the home, and home is what she makes it. If she is illiterate, her home partakes of this quality; if she is immoral, her home cannot be the abode of virtue; if she is coarse, refinement does not dwell where she resides. If she is cultured, pure, refined, these qualities will characterize the home which she creates. The higher the degree of her culture, her purity, her refinement, the more will these qualities characterize the home of which she is the center. The self that a woman takes with her in her marriage is her real dower. If her dower can be reckoned in numerals only, no matter how many they may be, wrecked indeed will be her husband, impoverished her children. But if she possess industry, gentleness, self abnegation, purity, intelligence, combined with capability, she is in herself a treasure of treasures.—American Agriculturist.

Care of the Eyes.

Never read in bed or when lying upon the sofa. Sit with your back to the light as much as possible. Attend to your digestion. The Harp of Ten Strings.

SERMON PREACHED BY REV. B. D. THOMAS, D. D., ON THE TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF HIS PASTORATE WITH THE JARVIS STREET CHURCH, TORONTO.

Upon an instrument of ten strings will I sing praises unto thee.—Ps. cxliv: 9.

This instrument which the Psalmist brought into such frequent requisition in his sacred exercises has not come down to us. We can have but a conjectural conception as to its construction. It is probable that it resembled the harp more nearly than any other instrument used in modern times. It was peculiarly suited to give expression to those emotions and experiences which are predominant in exalted worship. In his loftiest moods, in times of spiritual exultation and triumph, when his soul was filled with an overwhelming sense of the divine beneficence, when words failed him, when his thoughts were too full and living to permit of ordinary expression, this "man after God's own heart" would take down his favorite instrument, and upon the strains of its entrancing melody pour forth his soul before the Lord.

There is an instrument upon which I desire to play this morning, but how shall I describe it? It has not been made with hands. Its mysterious mechanism has been put together by invisible artificers. It has been raised to its commanding place without noise of hammer or sound of machinery. Human genius must ever prostrate itself in utter and abject helplessness at the thought of the most distant imitation. Its framework is time, and the strings are the years of my pastorate in this church.

Let us consider then

THE VARIED MELODY.

This magnificent instrument has ten strings. It is, as I have indicated, a period of time divided into so many years. It forms an important epoch in the history of each one of us. We ourselves, with our experiences and activities, hopes and fears, successes and failures, joys and sorrows, enter into it. We are as inseparable from it as we are from our personality. We cannot touch any one of these strings without reproducing the discords and harmonies of our own lives. If our aim this morning were to recall the human elements that have entered into our history, we might well shrink with painful apprehension from the undertaking. It could not fail to prove a most humiliating exercise. The discord would be intolerable. If we touched these strings simply with a view of reproducing the tone and quality of our own christian living, I apprehend that there would be little in it to inspire gratitude. The hideous sounds of selfishness and sin would be so overpowering as to drown all the sweeter and diviner melodies. I have little desire to listen to the accentuations of my own past life. It has been so marred with imperfections and failures that I can only hope that the great God of love will for Jesus' sake forgive. I would not dare to play on this instrument if all that I could bring out of it was what we had thought and done. Our lives, at the best, have not had enough music in them to awaken a desire that they should be reproduced.

But these years have been full of God as well as ourselves. Every month and week and day have had poured into them a wealth of life and love and goodness which has been most exhilarating. When we touch these strings with the supreme purpose of bringing out the divine quality which they embody, all is melody—the most unskillful manipulation fails not to produce enchanting musical effects.

1. I play upon either one of these strings and there are tones elicited that speak of God's beneficence.

All these years have been years of blessing; we can but imperfectly estimate the multiplicity and munificence of the favors that have rested upon us. It has been no small privilege to have lived so long surrounded by so many delightful conditions and gracious ministries. "Our lines have fallen unto us in pleasant places, and ours has been a goodly heritage." Our pathway has led through scenes of ever-varied exhilarations. The instances have been rare when we have been exposed to inconvenience or discomfort, to fatigue or weariness. Our God has been to us a sun and shield. He has given grace and glory. No really good thing hath he withheld from us. He has planted us not in a wilderness, waste, and howling, and desolate, but in a garden of inconceivable affluence and beauty. Dark clouds have sometimes gathered around us, but they have been radiated with sunshine. We have had times of weeping, but rainbows of promise and covenant have glistened on our tears, enabling us to see the opening heavens even when we failed to take pleasure in the smiling earth. We have had to follow to the sepulchre many whom we dearly loved, but the circle of our friendship has widened in spite of the gates of death. We have had disappointments and sorrows, but our realizations and joys have exceeded them a thousand fold. We cannot touch the strings of these years which we are now holding in review, either singly or in combination, without being constrained to exclaim, "Surely goodness and mercy have followed us."

But I desire more especially to speak of God's unbounded beneficence to us as a church. We have been as Mount Hermon, upon which the dews of heaven have fallen so copiously as to make religious living a delight. This has been a place of broad rivers and streams, and if any of us have been barren or unfruitful we certainly cannot charge it to the lack of vivifying and fructifying ministries. We have not made the most and best of our privileges, but God's bountifulness has never failed us. There have been failures through our inability to appreciate the largeness and the purpose-fullness of the divine thought concerning us, and through our faithlessness to respond to the divine call to service and to conquest. We certainly should have been more resplendent in character, and more imperial in achievement, in view of all that God's grace has done for us. We could not dare to boast in ourselves, but we will boast in the Lord, for in spite of our narrowness and feebleness, in spite of our selfishness and worldliness, in spite of our inability to rise into the full grandeur of that ideal of achievement and possibility to which he has been inciting us, we have not been left without evidences of his favor.

I have an instinctive distaste for anything that savors of the egotistic. The summing up of the results of spiritual activity by an imposing array of figures has always appeared to me a vain glorious exhibition. I certainly do not believe in the infallibility of the principle of arithmetic as applied to religious work. I would be profoundly sorry to think that all the beneficent potency of this church could be measured by any purely materialistic estimate. And yet we cannot altogether disregard such facts as have developed in the activity of these ten years. There is some music in them surely. They speak of hundreds of souls who have made an open profession of Jesus Christ; and of thousands of dollars that have been given to further the interests of christianity in this and other lands. It would not be possible to do justice to the requirements of the occasion without some reference to the work which has found chrystalization in this way. This is my only excuse for giving it. On the second Sabbath in October, 1882, I commenced my pastorate. The membership at that time numbered 718, which, by a careful revision of the roll, was reduced to 612. There have been received by baptism 432, and by letter and experience 518, making a total of 950. There have been dismissed and dropped in the same period 727. The total income of the church the first full year of my pastorate was $7,111; the second, $10,523. For some years past it has been little less than $14,000. The total amount raised in ten years was $126,379.57. Out of this sum $61,379 has been for benevolence.

I leave these figures to speak for themselves. I do not maintain that they are as largely creditable to us as they might have been; but there is, certainly, reason for profound thankfulness that during a period which has severely tested most of the churches in the lower portions of the city; during a period when the migration of the membership to distant points has been alarmingly frequent, the congregations have been slightly affected, and the contributions of the church toward beneficent enterprises outside of herself have rather augmented than diminished.

Nor do these figures indicate all that our membership have done during the period under review. Large and generous contributions have been made toward denominational enterprises, and some four thousand dollars contributed toward the erection of the main edifice of the Beverly Street Church which was formerly our mission.

The sources of benevolence, as far as the individual members of the church are concerned, are not likely to run dry for the want of being used. Ontario, and even the regions beyond, have come to believe that Toronto Baptists are inordinately and uncomfortably rich, and they are beneficently determined to do all within their power to lessen both the discomfort and responsibility.

The influence which our church has exerted during this decade of years cannot be estimated. There is not a little Baptist community throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion but has felt the throb of her quickening life. In Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba and on the slopes of the Pacific there are hundreds of spots which have been made to blossom by hands which received their cunning within these sacred walls. As the rills and rivulets that make the wide plains fruitful have their sources in the mountains, even so has many a fountain of beneficent influence sprung up in the wilderness, because here the clouds were pierced which bore the moisture of the heavens. Like the life blood flowing from the heart's central reservoirs into the extremities of the body, there have gone out from this church impressions and impulses that have quickened human lives for service and for conquest all over this broad land. We are profoundly sensible of the honor God has placed upon us in this regard, and the responsibility which accompanies it should make us very humble. "Not unto us, not unto us, but unto thy great name be all the glory." Every string vibrates with a melody which swells upward to the highest throne.

2. I play upon either one of these strings and there are tones elicited that speak of the divine leadership.

The history of every true church has an element of the supernatural in it. Israel in the wilderness was not more absolutely led by an invisible hand, than we have been. When I think of the diversities of character, temperament, taste and quality, that have been united in the fellowship of this church; when I have regard to the complexities of religious thinking that are wont to develop under the free air of an age like this; when I remember that there have come into our communion men and women of widely divergent views in regard to some of the distinctive doctrines of the inspired word, I have been not a little surprised that for so long a period such perfect harmony and good fellowship have prevailed amongst us.

"Year by year this hand hath brought us
On through dangers oft unknown."

Every string is musical with praise for this inestimable benediction.

3. I play upon either one of these strings and there are tones elicited that speak of the divine forbearance.

We have not deserved to be thus distinguished. Our lives have not been such as to merit the munificence that has enriched them. We have been worldly and selfish, cold-hearted and unbelieving. We have not appreciated our privileges, and made the most and best of our opportunities. Well might God have cast us off, and allowed us to write "Ichabod" upon our walls. But he has not dealt with us according to our deserts. I touch either one of these strings, or play upon them in combination, and the music might be thus interpreted: "The Lord, the Lord, merciful and gracious, full of compassion and plenteous mercy."

4. I play upon either one of these strings and there is music elicited that should be an inspiration to us in all our future life and work.

What God has been to us in the past he will be in the future. We have only tasted of the resources of his grace. He is able to do for us exceeding abundantly. Our barrenness and inefficiency have always resulted from our lack of faith. In the measure that we have had the capacity and desire to receive has the divine affluence entered into our lives. The supreme message of these years to us is, "Have faith in God." There is nothing of power or grace which you may not command. Every string in the grand instrument gives forth a melody that should inspire to larger confidence, and stimulate to more heroic living. We have listened to the music of the years in vain if we are not prepared to make the future eclipse the past in all that is spiritually purposeful and resplendent.

THE BLENDING HARMONY.

It is a harp of ten strings. These years have been distinct as well as diversified. No two of them have been exactly alike in quality or expression. As we listen the music varies perceptibly. The strings have not all been set to the same key. In one the plaintive quality predominates, in the other the jubilant, but in combination they blend into a harmony sublime. God's judgments as well as his benedictions are exquisitely tuneful.

But the music is not perfect until the harp of grateful sensibility strikes in concert with "the harp of years." We must be able to say with the Psalmist, "Upon the harp of ten strings will we sing," before the finest effects can be produced. We must sing as well as play to realize the ideal of melody as here set forth. The heart's exultant music must interblend with the music of the years to produce the harmony that befits the Being whose praises we would celebrate.

THE ACCUMULATING VOLUME.

These ten years forming one grand instrument of inconceivable capacity, is suggestive of the sweep and compass of the aggregated expression. Unlike any ordinary stringed instrument this "harp of years" has all the combinations of melody in every string. Their union is not essential to symphonic perfectness. Sweet and varied music might be brought out of 1882 or 1892, or any of the intervening years. The grand sweep and swell "like the sound of many waters," breaks forth when all the strings are swept, when every year pours out the full volume of its melody, when the whole grand instrument is made instinct with responsiveness. Such music I would fain have produced today, but I could not. I have tried, alas! how feebly, with unskillful fingers. To experience the full capacity of this "harp of years," we must be content to wait.

THE PERFECT SYMPHONY.

That will be on the other side, in the palace of the Eternal King, when the Master Artist himself shall sweep the strings. Christian living may appear tame and commonplace enough, as it moves wearily along, but there are qualities in it which will one day thrill the hearts of angels. There is a whole ocean of imprisoned music in ten years of life and work beneath the smiles of heaven. When the redeemed church, that has lived and loved and worshipped within these walls, shall stand in spotless purity before the throne; when all that is harsh and discordant shall have been eliminated, and all that is true and genuine shall have been attuned to the concert pitch of heaven's high melody; then, and not till then, shall it be known how much of pathos and of purposefulness has entered into our history.

I have not followed this line of thought with any idea of church glorification. There has been enough, God knows, to mantle our cheeks with shame. If my aim had been to bring out the mere human elements in our religious living, I could have made the instrument pour forth tones that would make our ears to tingle and our very hearts to weep.

For all in which we have failed to rise to that ideal of purity and consecration which our privileges have made possible to us we sincerely pray to be forgiven, and for all that has been sweet and rich and regnant in our fellowship and service we magnify the grace of God. Not to minister to our own vanity, but to exalt the name, and celebrate the praises of our ever faithful God, have I sought to play upon this "harp of years."

I cannot say my last word without expressing sorrow at the thought that so many of you who have waited on my ministry have not become avowed followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. You have cheered me with your presence. You have won a large place in my affections. You have been a help and a joy to me in many ways. I have fain believed that some of you were secretly the disciples of my gracious Lord. I beseech you do not leave this matter in uncertainty. You cannot become divinely musical until the new chord of forgiveness is inserted into your lives. However exemplary your character, "you must be born again." However exquisite your natural endowments or moral qualities, there can be no real spiritual melody until the Divine Spirit has been at work. Come, then, this morning and let him enter into your souls, and change your hearts, and thus bring you into unison with the best and sweetest life of the universe.

"And now may the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the Everlasting Covenant, make you perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in you that which is pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen."

"When I was at College."

This phrase is so often used in these latter days, especially by young preachers, that one would suppose it was intended as a sort of passport to public confidence. Those who use it appear over anxious for it to be known that they have attended college. And it is sometimes used when no one would suspect that the one using it had ever been inside of a college building

And near akin to the aforementioned phrase is another, "When I was at the Seminary." A sermon fifty minutes long might be sifted with a sixteenth inch sieve and not a thimble full of theology found. It may be that the preacher's theological lore being costly, he uses it sparingly—just enough to slightly flavor his discourse.

Occasionally we hear a brother whose sermon is packed from beginning to end with rich gospel truth, but he is generally of that class of whom a certain brother in the State says they were brought up under the old constitution; and how the old brethren enjoy such preaching! They greet each other with smiles, saying, "that was a good one." The fact is the old brethren are to be excused; some of them hear so little preaching from which they derive any spiritual nourishment, that when they get a good morsel, no wonder they give vent to their enjoyment. One of our elderly brethren visited a town church not many years ago and preached a good gospel sermon that went straight to christian experience, and one sister got so happy that she could scarcely refrain from shouting right out in the congregation, but she went home and had it out there—shouted just as much as she wanted. She was not an old sister either, but was, very likely, brought up under old constitutional principles and had old-fashioned religion; nor was she so ignorant as to have no better sense, but was well educated and had both sense and grace enough to appreciate a good thing when she heard it.

Scarcely anything more disparaging can be said of a preacher now-a-days than that he is a good theologian and preaches doctrinal sermons, while the truth is there has not been a time in the last hundred years when the study of Bible theology and direct doctrinal preaching was more needed than the present time. To preach about the Bible cannot be stoned for by such embellishments as "when I was at college," "when I was at the seminary." I once heard a brother say that he had never preached a sermon on repentance, and he had been preaching about ten years. I told him it was time he was at it, and he went at it, too, and said afterwards that he found more in it than he expected; and I had often heard that brother say "when I was at college" and "when I was at the seminary."

If it is known that one has been to the seminary and he fails to enforce doctrine—I mean the cardinal points of doctrine—the impression is made on the minds of the hearers that that is the way he learned it at the seminary; that is, that he learned to preach almost anything and everything at the seminary except the cardinal truths of the gospel. More than twenty years ago a sister said to a preacher, "There is a peculiarity about your preaching." "What is that?" asked the preacher. "You preach Christ so much," said the sister. "Well," replied the preacher, "I think that is what we ought to preach." "Yes," quoth the sister, "but you preach him more than any one I ever heard." "I don't know about that," replied the preacher, "but I try to preach him just as I find him in the Bible." That preacher, whether justly or unjustly, acquired the unpopular distinction of being one of the best theologians and closest doctrinal preachers in the State: so much so, that a brother of much intelligence who had occasion to hear him for the first time expressed his surprise that he preached with so much life. He said he expected to hear a dry, tedious theological disquisition, but instead of that he heard a lively, animating sermon. Unfortunately for this brother, he can't say "when I was at college" or "when I was at the seminary."

Colleges are good things, so are theological seminaries, but a preacher ought to make it appear to his congregation, not so much that he has attended either or both of these institutions, but that he is familiar with the Bible and is master of the situation on doctrinal points. If he fails to do this he will be very apt to become a slave to public opinion and acquire the reputation of courting popularity. It is a very poor recommendation of a Baptist preacher to me for it to be said that he is popular with other denominations. He ought to conduct himself so as to be loved by Baptists and respected by everybody else. But this is a little off.

A theological seminary is a new thing in these southern States. One dear brother who was one of the original professors is still living and doing good work, and quite a host of brethren are living who know when our theological seminary first opened. It being new, perhaps the brethren are a little excusable for reminding their hearers that they have been there. The new will wear off after awhile and there will not be quite so much temptation to say "when I was at the seminary." I am glad so many are availing themselves of the opportunity of theological training, and I hope they will learn theology and that when they come home they will preach doctrine out of the fulness of their theological acquirements. They need not fear being dry. Let them get it well in their own minds and souls so as to make it apparent that the cardinal points of christian doctrine is part and parcel of their spiritual being, and there is no danger of dryness. The Holy Spirit will give life and power too. But I do hope the brethren will omit ringing the charges on "when I was at the seminary" so much. It makes some of us old fellows who did not have the privilege of attending the seminary feel a little badly, especially when we see so little theology in the preaching: the cardinal points of gospel doctrine being seldom so much as hinted at. I know "young America" wants something flashy, interesting and sensational, and "young America" has to a great extent taken possession of and demands the control of the churches, the preaching and almost everything, but it is time to call a halt, and as the mariner would say watch our bearing. The character of the preaching makes the character of the churches. So it appears to this

OLD MAN.

The Power of Christian Love.

How benign its influence, so sweet and ennobling! It is expressed in the light of the eye and hearty grasp of the hand, making one feel in an instant that religion is the same the world over. They are no longer strangers, it may be, but can say, "My brother, my sister, here's my hand, together we'll journey on to the promised land. The way may be rough and full of snares, but we can look to him who bore the cross for us."

It is the love that was spoken of by the disciples after his resurrection, and exclaimed, "Did not our hearts burn within us as he talked with us by the way?" As we near the end and pass through the valley of the shadow of death, it will not be effaced. And even when we reach "the shining shore," it will be a chrysalis that will never fade away. But I feel that it would take "abler hands and nobler hearts than mine" to do justice to the subject I have chosen, therefore I must desist.

ON PAYING DEBTS.

There is a great deal of "loose morality" abroad in the land at the present. Among the loose views prevalent on different subjects, there are evidently some on the matter of debt-paying. This looseness is seen, not only among men of the world who make no pretensions to religion, but also, among professed christians who are expected to set a good example before the world in the matter of honesty, as well as in other respects. "An honest man is the noblest work of God," is a sentiment quite liable to drift into a popular legend instead of remaining one that applies to the life and practice of the present generation. Grasping, ungodly, and covetous men might be expected to try at least, in some cases, to avoid their honest debts, and thus defraud their creditors. For professed christians to pursue this course however, not only gives such men "aid and comfort," but it also brings much reproach upon the christian name and profession. It matters not how regularly the professor of religion may fill his place in church, how long and fervent his prayers may be, if he fails to pay his debts, when he is able to do so, his piety counts for nothing in the opinions of honest men.

We are verily persuaded that the cause of religion, in our country at least, is now suffering seriously from the failure of church-members to meet their just obligations. It may be well, in this paper, then, to give some needed attention to this important matter. It may be well, perhaps, to first look into the causes of this state of things, and then suggest some remedies.

One cause is found, we think, in the religious, social, and business changes, wrought among the people during and after the unfortunate war through which our country has passed. The piety which is so perverted as to see no inconsistency in making saints of men who have stained their hands with innocent blood, must affect the religion of people who attempt it; that sentimental and fanatical craving for the entire obliteration of race distinctions in the social circle, which does violence to reason and revelation, must bear its legitimate fruit. And the great upheaval in the business world, by which many avoided just monetary obligations, is also bearing its natural fruit at the present day. Men who are disposed to do wrong, naturally seek for an excuse to justify them in so doing, and the changes wrought by the war, furnished many with such excuses. We are perfectly willing to admit that when a man is suddenly reduced from affluence to comparative poverty he may at times have an honest desire to pay debts which he no longer has the means of meeting, and this we think was the case with many who experienced the changes wrought by the war. But unfortunately, the facility with which many then avoided just obligations, has it seems, created a passion for so doing, which follows and controls them, when the causes for such conduct no longer exist. It is high time that these, and their more recent imitators, should return to, and be governed by, the rules of old-fashioned honesty.

Another cause may be found in the recklessness with which many incur debts, and their failure to live within their income. We fully sympathize with those who lament that state of things in our beloved country, by which capital is rapidly accumulating in the hands of the few, to the grief of the many, so that the rich are becoming richer, and the poor poorer. Considering the resources of our country, the genius of our government, and the inherent right guaranteed to every citizen by our Constitution, such should not be the case. But even poverty is no excuse for dishonesty. It is no disgrace to be poor, but it is a disgrace to be dishonest. As civilization advances, and culture and refinement are developed among a people, their wants, real and imaginary, increase; so that we now need, or think we need, money for many things of which our forefathers did not dream. This fact, however, is no excuse for recklessness in incurring debt, or for attempting to live beyond our income. You may see about you people that have accumulated property by questionable means, and among these the avoidance of honest debts; and as these "go in style," and are highly respected (?) you may be greatly tempted to follow their example, and thus be reckless in incurring debts you do not expect to pay, and live beyond your income, in order to keep pace with them; but real honesty cannot endorse such conduct.

Another evident cause of this state of things is, that in certain influential circles (?) a premium is put upon rascality and dishonesty, and old-fashioned plodding honesty is at a discount. How many business men are there in these days who believe, or at least are more or less influenced by the opinion, that "it does not pay to be honest." All such are prepared for the "business" opinion that shrewdness, low cunning, or even dishonesty, may be substituted in the place of honesty and fair dealing when they foolishly imagine that the latter are in the way of present gain or present success. Many of these we fear are about as cranky in their reasoning as the old Hebrew we once heard of who instructed a new clerk how to cheat his customers, but concluded his instruction with the warning, 'Don't take any of my money;' that would be a great sin, and if you commit it, you will die and be lost." This is told not to reflect on the Jews as a class, for many of them are noble men, and no small part of their nobility consists in their honesty.

Another cause may be found in the passage of bankrupt, homestead, and other laws designed in the first place, possibly, to protect honest debtors from the tyrannical oppression of unreasonable creditors. As hinted above, the original design of these laws may have been good, but unfortunately they have been abused by many who have avoided just obligations, even when amply able to meet them. Laws which are open to such objections, and which give dishonest men such fair opportunity to avoid their just obligations, are rather questionable in their operation, if not in their design. There is tendency enough among men in general to avoid their debts without encouraging that tendency by enabling a delinquent to say he has "the law on his side."

Now as for the remedies for this state of things, we desire to say that they are suggested, to a great extent, by the mere mention of the causes that have led to it. The war, with its sorrows and its woes, is numbered among the things that are passed, and what we have mentioned is only one among the train of evils associated with it. It is clearly evident that people should be careful how they contract debts, and that they should live within their income. To incur debts carelessly, without a fair prospect of meeting them, partakes of the nature of dishonesty, and a great many such debts could be avoided if those who make them would remember that it is much easier to make a debt than to pay it; and the fact that one has not the money to pay for what he thinks he needs is generally a good reason why he should do without it. A healthy public opinion should frown down wickedness in high places, and men should never be honored with offices of public trust and emolument if it is well known that they have opened their purse strings to encourage fraud or sustain corruption. Such evidence should dismiss them from office, instead of promoting them to it. Any laws, State or national, which attempt to regulate the relations between creditor and debtor, ought to be drawn with such care as to give those who are disposed to deal unjustly with their fellow-men, no fair reason to claim the sanction of law for their meanness.

The preceding remarks have been mostly of a general nature; but, as we hinted in the outset, we wish them to apply especially to church members. There is certainly need now for reform among christians in this matter. If there are men and women in our churches that owe debts and will neither pay them nor make any honest efforts to do so, they should be disciplined by the churches with which they are connected. Christians are too much in the habit of thinking that financial difficulties can only be settled before secular tribunals; but the truth of it is, Christ and the Apostle Paul plainly teach that the church is quite competent to settle questions that are often carried to secular courts, and among these, questions involving honesty and fair dealing among her members are clearly within her province.

FROM OUR TRAVELLING AGENT.

NOTES FROM HERE AND THERE.

Soon after reaching the town of Oxford last week, and while walking leisurely along, all at once something shot by me with the speed of electricity itself. If there had been any time to think, I should have concluded that the rapid-transit system complete had reached Oxford. But just as the object was getting out of sight, I recognized the flying skirts of Bro. Hardaway. When I say flying, I mean it, with all the term implies, and as the flyer turned the last corner for the happy little parsonage, I thought, what is horse-power? what is steam, or even electricity, when placed beside a self-propelling bicycle?

The next thing to fear was that I should be run over by either Bro. Marsh or Bro. Devin. But, to my satisfaction, I soon met them travelling as usual on foot. Brother Marsh, however, being somewhat lame, was relying much on his cane, and, it may be, his sores were the result of a want of the dexterity which his pastor exhibits on the wheel.

This reminds me that as I passed Henderson, Bro. D. Y. Cooper told me that the Episcopal preacher in his town was already mounted on his bicycle, and was working it for all it was worth. Of course this one is an automatic one, for Bro. Hardaway has a clear majority of avoirdupois over him. I also learned that the municipality of Henderson had recently emancipated the bicycle and that now they could run at large on the side walk, a privilege heretofore not granted. So the next time I go to Henderson, I shall expect to be asked by Bro. VanDeventer and Bro. J. H. Lassiter to please step aside while they pass—the one to visit the members of his flock, and the other to hasten to his merchandise.

It is always a pleasure to visit the Oxford Female Seminary when in Oxford. I found President Hobgood in the best of heart and spirits for the outlook of his school. There are few situations so inspiring, especially to a man who naturally loves school work, as to have the daily oversight of a large number of sprightly, intelligent girls. Especially is this true, since the object of the association is to train and develop the women who are to adorn society and to be useful in the highest spheres of woman's work. I found that many valuable additions had been made to the school under the recent management—new desks in the study halls and recitation rooms, the walls of the rooms newly papered, the floors neatly carpeted, the dining hall thoroughly renovated and nicely furnished, and also several new and handsome musical instruments in the music rooms.

I am indebted to Mrs. Parham, the lady principal, for the information about the school. I know of no one who knows better what is required to constitute a first-class school than does Mrs. Parham. With an experience of ten or twelve years in the school-room in which she built up and conducted on her own account a first class school, she came to the Seminary with an experience and knowledge of school work which makes her connection with the school most desirable and satisfactory to all concerned. She not only has the power of imparting information in the class room, but possesses in a marked degree those high and ennobling characteristics of head and heart which make her a pattern worthy the study and admiration of all her pupils.

The brethren have made considerable progress on the new church building. The house is a model in design, and, when completed, will be one of the nicest church-houses in the State.

Bro. S. H. Smith, one of Hro. Hardaway's "stand-by's" in church building as well as in all work pertaining to the church, was recently married to Miss White, daughter of Dr. T. C. White, one of Oxford's oldest and best citizens.

While at Oxford, I received a letter from Bro. J. H. Lamberth to come to Roxboro and be with him at his last appointment at Ephesus church. My mind was at once made up to do as the letter directed. There were, however, two circumstances which entered in to disturb me: one was that I had no pass over the road I was to travel, for nothing is so distasteful to a newspaper man as to have to pay railroad fare. The other was, I was sorry to know that Bro. Lamberth was to leave the churches in which he has done such a magnificent work to go to other fields. I do not understand how it is that a preacher who is well situated, doing a good work and whose people all love him and appreciate his work, finds it necessary to break up and go elsewhere. It may be, however, I am not called on to understand these things, so I'll pass on. An intelligent lay-member said to me recently that some preachers were very much like a boy who went fishing; after trying awhile without catching anything, he decides to leave, but before doing so, takes a spell of thrashing into the water with his pole, throwing rocks and chunks in among the fish. Whoever else this may apply to, it certainly does not to Bro. Lamberth, for in his churches, there is, I learn, no one who does not wish their present pastor to remain. Probably, with the exception of Bro. H. A. Brown of Winston, he has received more calls from churches in and out of the State than any preacher in North Carolina. There is this sad reflection: he has staid on the field just seven years, and the probability is, will leave without his Leah; but who knows if he would add to his labor and patience as did old Jacob, that he, too, would not be rewarded as was the patriarch of old?

PERSONALS AND OTHER ITEMS.

....Rev. John T. Edmundson is pleasantly situated on Chincoteague Island, Va.

....Rev. S. H. Thompson has resigned the pastorate of the church at South Boston, Halifax county, Va.

....Rev. Dr. A. E. Owen has celebrated his twenty-first year as pastor of the Court Street church, Portsmouth, Va.

....Rev. J. D. Newton has resigned the care of his churches, Mt. Olive, Kenansville and Falling Creek, to take effect the 1st of June.

....Bro. Edens of the Christian Index, Ga., put in his appearance on last Wednesday as a visitor to the Convention. We were glad to welcome him in our office.

....Two telegrams were received on Saturday, which cast a gloom over the Convention—one announcing the death of Rev. R. VanDeventer's father, and the other, telling of the accidental killing by a railroad train of Bro. B. D. Howard's son at Keysville. The RECORDER extends its sympathy to these bereaved brethren.

....Dr. J L. M. Curry has again been elected to the secretaryship of the Peabody Fund and will probably make his home for the future in Washington City, and will devote a portion of his time to the writing of some valuable history, for which he has the highest qualifications.

....We are in receipt of a very kind letter from Bro. E. B. Atkinson of Spartanburg, S. C., in which he asks for some information in regard to the statistics of different denominations in the United States. The latest and most reliable statistics on this subject are not yet completed but will be soon and will appear in the RECORDER.

....A pastor says that he does not know what to try next to draw the crowd. He has had fiddles, quartettes and musical attractions, and the crowd does not come. He has preached sermons on bright, spicy topics and still the crowd does not crowd. We would timidly suggest that he try the gospel. It might be the novelty and the sensation that the people want in his neighborhood. Any how it is worth trying.—Baltimore Baptist.

....The case of J. T. Clark of Danville, Va., for the killing of Rev. J. R. Moffett was set for trial last week, but as is usual in such cases, the trial was put off and the case continued. This practice which lawyers have of delaying the courts with a view of giving time a chance to wear out the just indignation of the public, and to create sympathy for the accused, has done much to break up the confidence of the public in the justice of our courts. It is this want of confidence, which we see so forcibly expressed in the form of lynch law, where the people decide to take the law into their own hands.

BAPTIST STATE CONVENTION.

The North Carolina Baptist State Convention met in its sixty-second annual session in the Tabernacle church, Raleigh, N. C., at 7:30 p. m. on the 8th inst.

The introductory sermon was preached by Rev. J. S. Hardaway of Oxford from Isaiah 52: 1—"Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion." The following is the SERMON.

Without any preliminary or explanatory remarks, taking it for granted that Zion is clearly understood to be a type of the church of Christ, I shall discuss, as best I can, what constitutes the strength of the church.

There are many false notions abroad in the land as to this subject, so that it cannot be inappropriate to undertake its consideration.

I. A DEFINITE CREED IS AN ELEMENT OF STRENGTH TO THE CHURCH.

This would be true even if the creed were not drawn from the Scriptures. The strongest errors are those believed and held to most firmly. The man or the church that believes nothing is weak, and becomes a ready prey. Both are "tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine by the slight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." There is power rn earnest conviction to impress and convince. Emphatic believing leads to emphatic preaching, and emphatic preaching leads to influencing others. The man who would make men believe a thing must believe it himself, and must declare his faith with the positiveness of conviction. A church that would hold the people must teach definitely something to be believed. When a church teaches a well defined creed, and teaches that common honesty demands that those who hold membership in her must believe in accordance with her teachings, there is strength there. There is weakness in the church that does not teach a definite creed. When under one church shelter may be gathered those who believe in any form of church government; in any of the many conflicting doctrines abroad in the earth; in anything for baptism; in any design of baptism, there are elements of weakness in that church.

This age in which we live does not wish a well defined creed. This is religiously a superficial age. There is an endless clamor for men to believe in nothing. There are members who would be glad to have a great conglomeration of all phases of belief—a monstrous union. To day there is an everlasting cry for union—union protracted meetings, union prayer meetings, union Sunday-schools, union Sunday-school associations, union young people's meetings, union of all churches into one. There was actually a bona fide invitation given to all denominations to come and unite under "the Historic Episcopate." For my part, I can see no ground of union with those that differ from us in religious belief. One party or the other must stifle conviction, and the union will be one in name only. The only unity that will be real unity is a unity of faith—"One Lord, one faith, one baptism"—a union that can only be brought about by understanding, receiving and holding to the word of God. Any other union is spurious; any other union is weak; any other union is worthless. I was in a meeting of one of those union concerns not long since. The question under discussion was, How can we help the pastors and the churches? The leading idea of the essay read was a tirade against sectarianism. In other words, they could serve the church by breaking down all distinctive views and doctrines, or to speak plainly—they could serve the church by putting an end to it. I am free to confess that I am a sectarian. What is a sectarian? A sectarian is a person holding to some particular doctrines as tenets; or, to put it in another way, a sectarian is a person that believes something. I honor persons of other denominations that hold tenaciously to their doctrinal views. A wishy-washy christianity, a sort of milk and water affair, is fit for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men.

"Ah but," they say, "it makes no matter about the non-essentials." What are the Will you be pleased to tell me? Are the dare you to say they are those things which God hath commanded? Nothing is non-essential which God bids us to do.

"Ah but, they say, "it makes no difference what you believe, so the heart is right." But, my friend, can the heart be right, with the faith all wrong? Does not the heart influence the life, by what a man believes? "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Creed has a definite and practical bearing upon life. "Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works."

"Well but," they say, "we different denominations are only different regiments in the same army. See, here is the infantry, there is the cavalry, yonder is the artillery, and over there on the water is the navy. That is a pretty theory, but how about the reality? What is the matter with the artillery that it has opened on the infantry? what is the matter with the cavalry that it charges the artillery? What is the matter with the infantry that it pours its volleys into the cavalry? And why is it that the three, keep out of the range of the men of war? That is a lively army, to put it mildly.

Will men never see that he who believes in baptizing an unconscious, or unwilling subject is constructing a church on a wholly different plan from those who baptize only believers? Will men never see that in the creed of those who thus differ there lies an ineradicable difference? And is it not discernible that for a church to possess a definite creed there is an element of strength, and not to possess it, is an element of weakness?

II. I said that an element of church strength was a definite creed; that a church must believe something. I now say, in addition, THAT A SOURCE OF TREMENDOUS STRENGTH TO A CHURCH IS FAITH IN, AND OBEDIENCE TO GOD'S WORD.

Baptists have ever held that the word of God only was to be the end of controversy. They have ever tied by God's word. There is no man-made, or church-made confession of faith that possesses any binding influence over Baptists. They do not ask, "What saith the confession of faith?" but, "What saith the Lord?" The word of God speaks with unquestioned authority on all religious matters, and when it speaks, controversy ends. What a power there is in holding closely to God's word! To settle a disputed point with, "Thus saith the Lord!" "To the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." "Is not my word a fire, saith the Lord? and as a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?"

There is great power in words when a man can say, "Turn to the word of God and read such and such a statement." There is great weakness in words, when a man saith, "My church teaches thus and so," and he can show no scripture for it. One reason why Baptist ideas are growing so fast, is because they have a "Thus saith the Lord" for them. Believers' baptism, as opposed in infant baptism; immersion as opposed to sprinkling; congregationalism as opposed to Episcopal forms of government lie on the face of the Scripture, and "he who runs may read." When we call for the Scripture proof of sprinkling, or of infant baptism, we have done all we need to do to refute those errors. A church, like Samuel, should ever say, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth." The church that would be spiritually strong must yield implicit obedience to God's word. Wherever there is a failure to do this there is the entrance of an element of weakness. The church should repose on the promises of God's word, should heed with deepest attention its teachings; should hold with utmost tenacity to all its requirements. The man, that holds and practises a thing contrary to the word of God, because his church teaches it, has in himself the essential germ of Romanism. Rome puts the teachings of the church, on equality with the Scriptures.

Brethren of the Baptist churches of North Carolina, holding to the word of God is our strength; and woe worth the day when we shall ever loosen our grasp upon its truth.

There are some of other denominations who see this in our denomination, and who accord us all praise for the same.

Rev. J. L. Withrow, a distinguished Presbyterian preacher of Chicago, spoke as follows, as reported by the Chicago Standard, and copied into the Religious Herald of Sept. 22, 1892: "I suppose there is not a denomination—I speak in no fulsome praise but literally—I think there is not a denomination of evangelical christians that is throughout as sound theologically as the Baptist denomination. I believe it. After carefully considering it, I believe I speak the truth. Sound as my own denomination is; sound as some others are, and I do not cast unfriendly reflections upon any particular denomination, I do say, in my humble judgment there is not an evangelical denomination in America to-day that is as true to the simple, plain gospel of God, as it is recorded in the word, as the Baptist denomination."

Those are noble words of praise coming as they do from one of another faith.

This same distinguished man gave utterance also to the following words in The Interior, (as copied into the Western Recorder August 11th, 1892): "Furthermore, let it in favor be it said, they have proved, beyond peradventure, that narrow church doctrine and severe communion conditions do not keep people out of the christian church. The Baptists have no chaptered creed, but the unwritten creed, as England's unwritten nstitution, is more insurmountable than e Thirty-nine Articles of Episcopacy, or e ponderous chapters of the Westminster onfession.

Against chaptered creeds the complaints e so urgent that Congregationalists have ecently made a new one. You may safely er a dollar for every new convert which e been captured by that new creed who herwise would not have been secured. nd now the Presbyterians are wasting aps of hard-earned money, (contributed uch of it by God's poor for better pur-oses,) and are stirring up bad blood be-ween the brethren in an attempt to smooth f and sweeten up their creed. The claim that we keep people out of the church, d candidates out of our ministry with ch strict conditions as now exist. It unds like arrant nonsense in presence of e fact that the Baptist church is the rictest church we have; and yet it is grow-g, not as a weed, but as the word of God promised to grow. There is no church, far as we know, into which it is more dif-cult to enter than the Baptist through eological, ecclesiastical and ceremonial nditions. And yet there are throngs essing through its narrow threshhold. . . . . The Baptist church is in repute r thorough going piety; a piety which kes the Bible as God's book rather than as book with some stray breaths of God rough it, no one being sure where to find em; a piety which grasps the doctrines of stifying and sanctifying and glorifying ace with a grip which holds as a vice; a iety which one hundred years ago, before y other Protestant soul or society began , arose to the divinest enterprises of chris-anity, the enterprise of sending the gospel all the ends of the earth. It was Baptist iety which did that. . . . . What a urch it is to the glory of the Son of God d the good of this needy world!"

Yes, brethren, the word of God is our rength. Not the Bible tinkered by the igher critics; not the Book inspired in pots, and requiring an expert to tell us here the inspired spots are; but the old-shioned book which our mother read and ught us that it was the word of God; the ok that speaks with the authority of God; e book that shall stand unharmed when eaven and the "higher critics" shall pass way; like some granite peak around which e clouds have hung and lightnings flashed, hen the storm sweeps past, it will emerge om the darkness that enveloped it un-athed into the light of the sun.

This word of God it is that inspired Bap-ts to hope for the salvation of the heathen orld, and led them to inaugurate the reatest of all the enterprises of modern hristianity. The word of God it is that ends them down into the water to be buried with Christ in baptism," passing the more convenient but unscriptural act sprinkling. The word of God it is that uses them to withhold their infants from e ordinance. The word of God it is that akes them stand apart from those of other iths. Yes, and that makes them brave d bear the ridicule and reproach of nar-owness and bigotry, not only with forti-ude, but even with cheerfulness. When unted with a lack of charity, their answer the same as that given by Martin Luther o his adversaries at the Diet of Worms: 'Here I stand upon the word of God; I can o no otherwise; God help me!" Standing pon God's word is our strength. It may truly be said of a church as of a man, 'Therefore, whosoever heareth these say-ngs of mine, and doeth them, I will liken im unto a wise man which built his house pon a rock; and the rain descended, and he floods came, and the winds blew, and eat upon that house; and it fell not, for it as founded upon a rock."

III. ANOTHER ELEMENT OF CHURCH TRENGTH IS A CONSECRATED MINISTRY. "Like eople, like priest," is a scriptural adage. o church can be very strong spiritually ithout spiritual leaders. The ministry, hile not lords over God's heritage, are cer-ainly leaders. They are called shepherds n the word, and they are exhorted to "feed he flock over which the Holy Spirit hath made them overseers." A consecrated min-stry is a ministry anointed of God for the work. It is a God-made ministry as opposed o a man-made ministry. The bane of the church of Christ is a man-made ministry. A man made ministry "careth not for the heep;" "when he seeth the wolf coming, he leaveth the sheep, and fleeth, and the wolf catcheth them, and scattereth the heep." A man-made ministry seeketh good easy places; a man made ministry seeketh the loaves and fishes; a man-made ministry loveth the praise of men more than the praise of God; a man made ministry dabbleth in politics; preacheth pretty noth-ings; and intermeddleth not with sin; a man-made ministry is easily diverted from gospel work; a man-made ministry will give a church the "dry rot." Hence I say, for church building in a spiritual sense; for adding strength, vigor and life to the church; for sticking to the high and holy vocation to which God hath called them; for planting gospel truth; for caring for the souls of men; for laying down their life for the sheep, we need not a man-made, but a God-made ministry.

I believe we are in danger of introducing a man-made ministry into the church. There was a time when men were called of God to preach, when in their souls they heard the cry, "Woe is me, if I preach not the gos-pel!" Doubtless many to day come into the work with a thoroughly sound call ringing in their ears. But we have reasons to fear that many from merely temporal induce-ments are led into the ministry; hear a call, not from above, but from below, and respond to it. I have no suggestion to offer as a rem-edy for the evil, except to utter this note of warning—warning especially to the churches and pastors to "lay hands suddenly on no man." Be sure that a man is all right be-fore you recommend him to the Education Board. I feel sure that the chief responsi-bility rests with the churches and the pas-tors. The work of the Education Board is greatly damaged by every unhappy speci-men that represents its work. And how careful should Board managers be to dis-charge any man who, while at College, gives no evidence of earnest piety.

And should not our churches in the selec-tion of pastors seek diligently for a conse-crated ministry? Ought they not to be cau-tioned to judge a man not by his declama-tory powers, nor by the silvery tones of his voice, nor by the beauty of his diction, nor by the absolute accuracy of his grammar, nor by the grace and elegance of his pulpit manners, nor by the cut of his coat, nor by his power to draw a giddy audience? but should he not be judged rather by his spir-itual power? by his faithfulness to God's truth? by his willingness to come down to work? by his character as a man of God? by his sticking to work? by the confidence and esteem in which he is held by brethren? O how our churches all over the land do need the strength which comes from a consecra-ted ministry! Dr. Guthrie says, "The man who has adopted the church as a profession, as other men adopt the law, the army, or the navy, and goes through the routine of its duties with the coldness of a mere offi-cial—filled by him, the pulpit seems filled by the ghastly form of a skeleton, that in its cold and bony fingers, holds a burning lamp."

That holy man of God, M'Cheyne, tells us that "it is not great talents that blesses, so much as great likeness to Jesus. A holy minister is an awful weapon in the hand of God."

Our Saviour said, "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." Our Sa-viour said "pray" for ministers; we seem to say, pay for ministers. Our schools offer large inducements to young men to come and be educated for the ministry, and some of these schools take them and educate them clear away from a simple-hearted faith in God's word; stuff them full of Darwinism and rationalism—and then turn them loose to walk to and fro among the churches.

Brethren, the school that squints in the direction of either Darwinism or rational-ism, should either be purged of its corrupt teachers and teachings, or else with Bap-tists be forever doomed.

"Science," they say, "is the handmaid of religion." Yes; but what is science? "Sci-ence is profound or complete knowledge." Is the science of to day complete knowledge? Much of it is not even respectable guess-work. Why the other day, when we had the scare of cholera upon us, some scientific fellow discovered in some bank notes that came from Germany 18,000 cholera germs. If he had said 17,522, we might have given some credence to his wonderful discovery, but when he found even 18,000 germs wrapped up in bank notes, I could not pro-duce the faith to believe it. Surely no one in this scientific age should blame the scho-lastics of the dark ages for discussing the question as to how many angels can stand on the point of a needle. A distinguished educator, in an article not long since, spoke of centers of learning: "Where investiga-tion aims to promote speculative scepticism rather than avowed faith; where the teach-ing of the sciences; under the title of 'Ad-vance' suggests doubtful theories rather than established and practical truths, and where scores of trusting parents find their sons unfitted rather than fitted for success and usefulness—some of our seminaries, in this respect leading our colleges."

Brethren, our fathers in the gospel were like Peter and the Apostles, many of them plain men, but in God's hand, and filled with God's Spirit, they "out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens." Happy is the church that hath a consecrated ministry! That church is strong.

IV. ANOTHER ELEMENT OF CHURCH STRENGTH IS A CONVERTED MEMBERSHIP.

As we all know, Baptists have for long ages past held to the doctrine of a converted church membership. What is the doctrine? It is this, that no person has any right to be a member of the church of Christ until he has made a credible profession of faith in the Lord Jesus; or, put in another way, that no one should hold church fellowship unless born again. It was but a little over one hundred years ago, when Baptists stood alone on this doctrine. They alone held to a credible profession of faith as a prerequi-site to their communion. To-day this doc-trine has worked its way into almost every denomination, and is asserting its authority over the consciences of men even in spite of the degenerating tendency of infant bap-tism. Infant baptism is a deadly foe to the doctrine of a converted membership. It is easy to perceive that the spiritual strength of a church is only equal to the spirituality of its membership. If its membership is a converted, holy, saintly membership, there is spiritual strength there; but if its mem-bership is only professedly religious, devoid of piety, and full of formalism, there is no spiritual strength there.

Now so far as to professing to hold to the doctrine of a regenerated membership is concerned, our Baptist churches are all thor-oughly sound; but when we carefully exam-ine the practice of our churches, we have grave cause to fear that there are influences at work among us that are cutting at the very heart of the doctrine of a converted church-membership, and are pouring a flood of unconverted persons into our churches.

(1) One influence is the lack of care in re-ceiving members. I regret to confess that after protracted meetings there seems to be such eager haste on the part of all denomi-nations to hurry people into the church. In this way many are dragged into the church who are unfit for membership. The policy of undue haste may suit those who do not lay the stress we do upon a converted mem-bership, but surely, it is not a sound policy for Baptists. The churches, all of them, catch up a new professor of faith, and say to him, "Say now Shibboleth," and whether he say Shibboleth or Sibboleth, it is all the same, they pass him over the river of bap-tism into the Canaan of church membership. Brethren, if a man is truly converted, he will not need this forcing process; and if he is not truly converted, we ought not to have any room for him in our churches.

(2) Another influence that corrupts the doctrine of a converted church membership is what is known as "Professional Evangel-ism." There comes along a man who raises a perfect hullabaloo, bids everybody that wants to do better come and give him the hand, and then commands them to give their names to the pastors of the churches they wish to join. Religion made easy, especially when it comes with blowing of horns and firing of guns, takes mightily, and a sort of surface work is done that amounts to but little. Indeed, after you have gotten all the material from the so-called revival in, and after things have quieted down enough for you to investigate and learn how matters stand—you will be apt to find that the con-dition of the church after the revival is like the condition of the man spoken of in the Scriptures of whom it was said, "The last state of that man is worse than the first." I am a believer in meetings; I believe in some evangelists professional; but, brethren, there is a big danger right along here.

(3) Another influence damaging to the doctrine of a converted church membership is that when once a man gets into a church, it is well-nigh impossible to get him out. Our churches are not alive to discipline as they should be. I know we claim to teach that a church should exercise discipline, but is it not practically a dead letter? Now and then, we hear of a girl turned out for dancing, or a notorious drunkard cast out in a summary fashion, but is it not possible for a man that is thoroughly worldly, or signally dishonest, or without a sense of moral obligation to live all his lifetime un-molested in a Baptist church? Is it a strange thing for personal fuels to run through nearly a quarter of a century, and neither party while thus rending the vitals of the church be brought to answer for his grievous offence? Is not the lack of church disci-pline death to the doctrine of a converted church membership?

A converted membership is the only mem-bership that can become holy. How can a man without grace, "grow in grace"? "Ho-liness becometh thy house, O Lord." Church holiness of its individual members. Every man in a church that lives holily is a source of strength to the church. Every man in a church that leads a worldly, wicked life is a source of shame and weakness to her. An unconverted man in the church is a tremen-dous evil to the church. The church that is filled with unconverted material hath no strength in her.

V. ANOTHER SOURCE OF STRENGTH IS AN HUMBLE RELIANCE UPON GOD FOR ALL HELP. The Lord is the strength of his church; to depend upon him is to be strong. How the Scriptures abound with declarations of this precious truth! Samuel called God "The strength of Israel." David says "The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" "Blessed," says the psalmist, "is the man whose strength is in thee," Isaiah exhorts us, "Trust ye in the Lord forever; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." Paul, the great apostle to the Gentiles, when "a thorn in the flesh was given" to him, and he prayed the Lord thrice that it might depart from him, received this blessed assurance, "My grace is sufficient for thee; for my power is made perfect in weakness." And Paul tri-umphantly exclaims, "Most gladly, there fore, will I rather glory in my weakness, that the strength of Christ may rest upon me." Later in his ministry he adds, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." Yes, the Lord is his people's strength. But do they realize it? Are the eyes of God's people fixed upon him? Is it the song of Christ's people, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help; my help cometh from the Lord which made heaven and earth?" Let us take a look at things as they often are. Here is a church which has grown cold and lifeless. Congregations have fallen away. The prayer-meeting is a gathering together of "dry bones;" the Sunday-school is in the last stages of decline. Everything has become dilapidated and run down. What shall be done to resuscitate the church? The matter is discussed among the members. One brother says, "I will tell you what we ought to do; we need to repair our old house of worship, or build a new one." Another says, "Let us cushion the pews." Another advises, "Let us in-troduce into our worship more and more of the æsthetic element." Another adds, "We need a big pipe organ, and to improve our choir. If we could only get a big organ, and a first-class organist, and if we could secure an exquisite tenor a magnificent bass, with our elegant soprano and alto we could have such music as would fill our church at every service." "Nay," saith another, "what we need is a new preacher—a pulpit orator—one that can soar among the clouds, —one whose gestures and tones have the latest touch of the rhetorical art—one that can draw. That is what we need." With these improvements in the house, the wor-ship, the music, and the preacher, they hope to revive the church and bring back lost life. Alas! alas! all the life that such re-sorts can bring are but the same as the life imparted to a corpse by a galvanic battery. There may be a few twitchings of the fin-gers, and jerking of the arms, and kicking of legs, but it is only the activity of the dead.

This dependence upon human devices is so often seen when a church considers the propriety of holding a protracted meeting. How many are ready to suggest that the thing to do in order to have a revival is to send for this or that man to conduct it! I ask if there is a pastor in this house whose heart has not been saddened when his peo-ple plainly showed him that they were look-ing to the man who helped in the meeting rather than to the omnipotent Spirit of God for success and blessing? When will our churches fully realize that it is the revival that comes from above that they need? and not the revival which is as surely blown up by human devices as a blacksmith will blow up his fire with a pair of bellows? But step into the meeting with me, and see the means employed. Now the evangelist has the people "singing on their knees." Strange posture for song! Now he demands that they shall utter aloud "sentence prayers," out Phariseeing the Pharisees. Now he has three or four, or more, to pray in a gallop. Now on the slightest pretext he has the peo-ple shaking his hand, or standing up, or sitting down. When I see these things I cannot but feel that the pump is at work, and that the meeting is starting from below and not from above. I would not be misun-derstood. I am a believer in meetings. For humble reverence for the blessed Spirit's work I would be second to no man. I be-lieve that some of the methods resorted to when judiciously employed are helpful—but I insist upon this, that the power relied upon, sought after, and used mainly in too many meetings, is entirely of the earth earthy; that we have often forgotten that it is "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

I have never known a church to be pray-erful but that a blessing came. If we would ever bear this in mind we would cease striving to work up revivals, and we would endeavor more earnestly to pray them down.

And so too, it seems to me that we are de-pending too much upon machinery in all our work. Machinery may be necessary and helpful, but we should not depend on it. Our chief thought seems to be on men and means and machinery, as though, given these, the result is assured. We all feel that our foreign mission work has been pass-ing through a crisis for the last year or so. May it not be that God, seeing that he is ig-nored largely, is designing to teach us that it is "not by might, nor by machinery, nor by human power," but by his omnipotent Spirit?

But I have consumed already too much time. Let me briefly recapitulate: A church's strength lies in a definite creed—in a strong faith in an implicit obedience to the word of God; in a consecrated ministry; in a converted membership; but above all, in humble reliance upon the Spirit of the Lord God Almighty.

May God add his blessing to the word spoken. Amen.

After sermon, the Convention proceeded to organize.

Brethren T. M. Pittman, W. L. Poteat and C. A. Jenkens were appointed a com-mittee on Credentials. They reported 216 delegates present.

On motion, Dr. R. H. Marsh was re-elec-ted President by acclamation.

Brethren P. A. Dunn, John Mitchell and J. H. Lassiter were appointed a committee to nominate the other officers of the Conven-tion. Rev. H. A. Brown, T. M. Pittman and Rev. R. T. Vann were nominated and elected Vice-Presidents: N. B. Broughton and N. B. Cobb, Secretaries; W. N. Jones, Auditor; J. D. Boushall, Treasurer, and Dr. C. Durham, Corresponding Secretary.

By request, Bro. N. L. Shaw acted as As sistant Secretary.

Brethren J. L. Carroll, C. Durham and J. B. Brewer were appointed a committee on Order of Exercises.

Visiting brethren were invited to seats. Rev. A. J. S. Thomas of the Baptist Courier, S. C.; Dr. A. E. Dickinson of the Religious Herald, Va.; J. A. Speight of the Asheville Baptist; J. F. Edens of the Christian In-dex, Ga; Dr. C. C. Bitting of Philadelphia; Dr. W. E. Hatcher, Richmond, Va.; W. B. Bagby, missionary to Brazil; Dr. H. A. Tupper, Cor. Sec. Foreign Mission Board, Richmond, Va.; Dr. J. M. Frost, Cor. Sec. Baptist Sunday-school Board, Nashville, Tenn.; T. B. Thames, Danville, Va.; D. W. Herring, B. Cade and J. S. Dill responded. Rev. F. M. Jordan reported as a correspond-ing messenger from the Western N. C. Con-vention.

FRIDAY—SECOND DAY.

Prayer-meeting was conducted by Rev. H. A. Brown.

The address of welcome was delivered by Dr. J. J. Hall, pastor of the church in which the Convention assembled; and was re-sponded to by Bro. E. K. Proctor, Jr., of Lumberton.

The following committees were announced by the Chair:

On Place and Preachers for next session—W. J. Fulford, W. A. Parham, J. G. Fisher, C. E. Gower, Allen L. Byrd and R. R. Overby.

Baptist Orphanage—C. A. G. Thomas, G. W. Harmon, J. K. Fant, W. T. Jones, M. M. Landrum, and J. F. Spainhour.

Periodicals—R. T. Vann, G. W. Blount, W. C. Tyree, W. B. Morton, O. S. Hayes, and Rufus Ford.

The following additional visiting brethren were welcomed to the Convention:

Prof. A. T. Robertson of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky.; Dr. W. D. Powell, missionary to Mex-ico; Dr. H. M. Tupper of Shaw University.

The report of the Board of Missions was read by Dr. C. Durham.

That part of the report relating to Sunday-school Publications was spoken to by Dr. J. M. Frost, Cor. Sec. of the S. S. Board of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Dr. A. E. Dickinson spoke briefly on the point of reaching the children in the mis-sion work.

That part of the report relating to the en-largement of Foreign Mission work was spoken to by Dr. H. A. Tupper, Cor. Sec. of the Foreign Mission Board. Among other things, he said: "I feel myself happy in addressing a State Convention which has sent out a greater number of missionaries than any other State."

Bro. W. B. Bagby, missionary to Brazil, addressed the Convention on this subject in regard to his work in his own field.

Brother B. said: Brazil and the Argen-tine Republic are waiting for and longing for the gospel. Says he has never, in all his twelve years of labor there, found a single individual who had any knowledge of the plan of salvation. It is a common thing among those fifteen million of people to live in open concubinage—adultury is al-most universal. Many of the grossest sins, as we regard them, are not regarded as sins at all. The priests are dissolute and adul-terous. The progress of the work has been wonderful. The Lord has opened State after State, city after city, until we can go any where in Brazil. The Revolution there was a wonderful providence of God. The thought of Brazil is not Roman Catholic, it is anti catholic. The people welcome us every where. There are some fanatics ready to stone us, but the great mass of the people are always ready to hear us. The Brazilian Baptists are noble brethren. Our brethren are very careful on the subject of receiving members. We have no difficulty in making their people Baptist, as soon as they are converted they are ready to receive our views of baptism.

Dr. C. E. Taylor, statest hat a young brother was ordained at Wake Forest last Sunday who is thinking of that field.

Dr. W. D. Powell missionary from Mex-ico, spoke briefly and spiritedly.

Bro. D. W. Herring also spoke—discussed his cherished plans and methods.

The following additional committees were announced:

To nominate Ministers' Relief Board—Rev. Henry Sheets, E. T. Turlington, Rev. T. Dixon, D. T. Watson, A. F. Powell and Rev. D. W. Thomason.

To nominate Board of Education—Rev. J. B. Richardson, A. B. Adkins, M. C. Win-ston, C. P. Howerton, Rev. Thos. G. Wood, and T. B. Parker.

To nominate Board of Missions and Sun-day-schools—Revs. J. N. Stallings, J. D. Newton, A. W. Burfoot, and brethren T. F. Toon, R. W. Brooks, J. N. Jones.

Committee on Obituaries—Dr. Thos. E. Skinner, J. M. Goode, N. H. Gibbs, T. S. Sprinkle, Rev. G. M. Duke and W. G. Brinson.

On Religious Exercises—The pastors and deacons of the Baptist churches of Raleigh.

EVENING SESSION.

Prayer by Rev. A. J. S. Thomas of South Carolina.

Report on Education was read by Rev. W. R. Gwaltney, who also made some remarks.

The Convention was addressed by Dr. W. E. Hatcher. He spoke on the "Human El-ement of the Ministerial Call." The true minister of Christ is the man of God, and our fathers did well when they emphasized the Divine call. There must be a Divine call and a Divine preparation, but there must be a human preparation.

1 One thing we can and must do is to ask God for preachers. Quotes, "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his har-vest." Luke 10: 2. It is a great thing to pray for preachers. We must have a Sa-viour's heart of solicitude and sympathy and see the harvest as he saw it.

2. We can look for the men. We can go out and be the Lord's commissioners. It is hard for a young man to feel that he is one of God's ministers. It is a serious thing to look out the young men for preachers. Before you can do it you must get very close to the Lord's way of thinking. Dr. J. B. Jeter had declared that he was called into the min-istry by "Old Father Harris," who made an appointment for him to preach at a school-house and directed him to fill it. A church in a living, normal condition will produce preachers.

3. What is to be done with the young men after God calls them? We must aid them. Generally the boy whom God calls to preach comes from the country—poor, and knows but little. What are we to do with him? He is to be worked up and worked over. A young man was brought to Christ by his brother. To the young man Christ said, "Thou art Simon the son of Jona"—merely the son of his father—but "thou shalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation a stone." John 1: 42. Christ saw in Peter two men—the Peter as he then was, and the Peter that was to be afterwards. We should help the young men. There is marked im-provement in the material we now get hold of. Our beneficiary system is good. It will not help them at all, and some help them too much. Some schools offer board, tuition, clothes, a gold-headed cane, &c., but the education such schools offer is danger-ous, and should not be taken at any price. We ought to educate our young men in Bap-tist schools.

Dr. Hatcher, by request, takes a collection for the Education Board—pledges amount-ing to $505, payable by the first of next June.

Prof. A. T. Robertson of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary next addressed the body. He said: We have nearly 250 students. We have this year seventeen stu-dents from North Carolina. We have the elective system; we admit all who are li-censed by some Baptist church. We have rigid examinations. Students must have some of the qualifications that characterize every true minister of Christ. These are, first, they must be Divinely called. Second, they ought to be entirely consecrated to the work. There ought to be no mental reser-vation—"I will preach if I can get a good city church." Third, they must be edu-cated. Ministers must attain education somehow. The educated man can obtain more in a few years than the uneducated can dig out in a life time. Young men, give yourself a chance, and use your opportunity to the very best advantage. When we help the preachers, we help every enterprise. A collection was taken in behalf of education at the Seminary, amounting to $530.

SATURDAY—THIRD DAY.

Religious exercises were conducted by Dr. F. M. Ellis.

BY REV. D. S. WILLIAMS.

There were those in the times mentioned in article No. 1, for whom I felt truly sorry. Their forefathers had been in the early settling of the country, and shared in the persecution by the High Church zealots of Virginia. Taxes had been levied on them to pay the salaries of High Church ministers and to build houses of worship. The knowledge of these facts was derived from parents and grandparents, which united with the influences growing out of a wicked, selfish heart, led them for a time to oppose the mission of salvation to the people.

I have labored among these brethren and churches, and I know what I write. I have talked to them upon the subject of missions; and when explained to them, some will admit that they have been misled by their ministers. The Association had been troubled with this anti-mission spirit, and passed a resolution advising the regular churches to admit to membership the brethren in good standing belonging to the refractory churches on application therefor, as they could not get letters from said refractory churches. In accordance with the resolution, a great many brethren joined the mission churches, and peace and brotherly love were restored. The Association then moved forward in every good word and work, and God blessed the body.

The Association did every thing in reason they could to reform the anti-effort brethren and churches, but to no purpose, for they were controlled by their ministers. After the misguiding ministers passed away, the churches which they controlled died a natural death, unhonored and unsung.

The Baptists of the State seemed to take a fresh start in the great work of salvation and the betterment of mankind. The Baptist State Convention was organized at Greenville in 1830, and the Raleigh Association was a component member of that grand christian body.

And yet something was lacking. The Baptist Interpreter was established and issued monthly by Rev. Thomas Meredith. This publication did what it could, but was rather too limited for the needs of the denomination. In 1834 the editor and publisher, Elder Meredith, changed the monthly Interpreter to that truth-telling and God-honoring paper, the weekly BIBLICAL RECORDER, which has continued to this day, and is doing a good work for the Master. God grant that it may live on, and grow in power and in favor with all good christians. The Raleigh Association endorsed and aided in supporting its organ.

The Convention brought out the Interpreter, followed by the RECORDER; yet something else was lacking. The aforesaid enterprises brought out Wake Forest Institute, which in due time brought forth Wake Forest College, a child of prayer. That institution has educated many young men called of God to the ministry. Among the number was Matthew T. Yates, our great missionary to China.

The Raleigh Association, at its session held with the church at Spring Branch in Sampson county, adopted Brother Yates as its missionary to China and agreed to support him and his wife, he to report annually to the Association.

Bro. Yates left his native country some time in the spring following, and went to China, where he labored efficiently until his death some few years past. He and wife have been a blessing to the cause of missions. How long the Association supported Bro. Yates and his wife, I am not able to say, as I left the State in 1855.

In concluding my dots of the Baptists of the Raleigh Association and others of the State, it is well to note that the opposition they met with in their godly efforts was not from the unbelieving world, but came from those who called themselves Baptists; was not from the laymen of the churches, but from those who were called and bore the name of Baptist ministers. These ministers have passed away, and their work has passed with them, and their names have gone almost into oblivion.

Dear reader, I rejoice that I have been spared to see 1892, and to know that those enemies of christian effort have been disappointed in their predictions and prognostications; that christian effort and human development have succeeded to the glory of God and the upbuilding of his cause in our State and country. To God be all the glory.

From Asheville.

I was very much pleased a few weeks ago with an article in your paper on "Ice Cream Religion," and since, another headed "The Society Plan," just the thing to be written about for these times.

It does seem now that the church which furnishes the most (innocent?) amusement for its members is the one the young people are looking for, and I think the churches are responsible for this disposition by having organized so many societies within the churches.

I thought it might be of interest to some of your readers to know how at least one Baptist church has gotten along for more than half a century without having had a single ice cream or oyster supper, festival or fair of any kind to amuse the people and raise money to carry on the Lord's work.

We trust this large body of now more than eight hundred members has the same spirit that characterized their first leader, Rev. Thos. Pendley, and his faithful few, which was to glorify and honor God in all they did.

On the first day of the week, at the morning service, each member is expected to make a contribution, as the Lord has prospered them. They use the envelop system. In this way the pastor's salary and the incidental expenses are met.

A foreign and city missionary are supported by voluntary contributions from the members.

The ladies of the church meet once a week for an hour to study the word and contribute to some special object. At present they are furnishing a new church, which is no small job. Those who are not able or inclined to attend these meetings, either send their contributions each week, or allow it to be collected at the end of the month by some one appointed for that purpose. In this way nearly a thousand dollars has already been raised and paid out for furnishings. At the same time the poor and hungry are not overlooked. This is called the Ladies' Aid Society for convenience in making announcements, but really it is no organization. For awhile it had a president, secretary and treasurer, but this seemed too much like machinery, and now it has only a treasurer. They simply meet and let their prayers go up together.

Once or twice a year a sociable is given to the members and those accustomed to worship with them, which consists of a bountiful supper provided by the sisters free. The next one will come off about New Year's Day, to which the Editor of the RECORDER is invited, and it will be worth a trip all the way from Raleigh to see how they enjoy an evening shaking hands, and becoming better acquainted with one another as christians, at the same time partaking of a feast of good things for the inner man.

Some of the other denominations have said, "We like your plan and would like to adopt it, but don't believe it would succeed in our church." You see they have learned to depend on fairs, festivals, and the like, to raise money, and it is like all other habits, whether good or bad, hard to get rid of.

In conclusion, I would say, do all you can to stop the tendency to increase the number of societies in our churches, for the church is fast becoming the least among them with a great many. In my opinion the church organization is the only society necessary to carry on the Lord's work on earth; to this he left all his interests when he went back to heaven.

We do not know why Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil is so useful in those simple but varied conditions which you know as "having a cough." We cannot explain it; we only know the fact from experience.

It may be due to the combination of tonic effects of cod-liver oil and the hypophosphites; it may be partly due to the glycerine. There are many effects in medical practice the causes of which appear to be plain, but how those causes produce those effects we do not know at all.

A Young Lady in Search of Truth.

This was before the war. Eliza was from Maine, engaged to teach in the Masonic school. The president was a Baptist, the male professor was a Presbyterian, and Eliza was a Methodist. This was to satisfy all the denominations represented in the institution. Eliza was a highly accomplished young lady, gifted and brilliant.

During the summer there was a gracious revival progressing in the Baptist church. One night I preached on the necessity of regeneration. At the close of the meeting when an invitation was given to persons who desired to experience this change of heart, Eliza came forward for prayer. At the close of the meeting she said to me, "I have never before heard a sermon on that subject. I do not know whether I have ever experienced the change of which you speak. I wish you would come to my boarding house to-morrow and converse with me on the subject."

In conversation with her the next day I ascertained that she had been trained with great religious care, especially in morality and the love due to church worship and the house of God. She had been taught to love and respect the church and all good people. It was difficult to ascertain whether she was regenerated or not. When I asked her the question, "Do you reverence God in his sovereignty as you do in his love, in his justice as you do in his mercy?" She said, "No, I cannot bear the thought of the divine justice which inflicts punishment in the world to come. I would love God as a benevolent being, but cannot tolerate the thought of his damning even the wicked." I said to her, "I perceive, madam, you are in the gall of bitterness and the bonds of iniquity, without hope and without God in the world." She burst into tears and exclaimed, "Oh! is that true?" I said to her, "I do not say this to discourage you, but I must deal honestly with your soul. Humble yourself and confess your sins, Jesus is willing and able to save. The Holy Spirit can give you a new heart which shall reverence God in his sovereignty as well as in his love." That night she presented herself again for prayer. After the congregation was dismissed, she said, "Come and see me to morrow afternoon again, I have a faint ray of hope that God has forgiven me." I called according to her request. As she came to the parlor door and saw me she raised her hands and said, "I see God in everything, and I love him as much in his sovereignty as I do in his compassion. He is my Father and my Saviour."

Two weeks after this on a Sabbath morning after an early prayer meeting she took a seat by me and said, "I am sorry you Baptists are so narrow-minded and bigoted." I asked her, "Why do you say so?" She said, "Because you will not commune with us." I said to her, "If you believed that baptism by immersion were the only baptism, would you commune with those who have only been sprinkled?" She said, "No, I would not commune with unbaptized persons. Is that your reason for not communing with us?" I said, "Yes." She said, "I understand you now. Your error then is in baptism, and not in communion." I remarked to her, "I perceive you are thinking. I suggest that you read the New Testament carefully and prayerfully to ascertain what is taught there as baptism." She said, "I have read it through once already since my conversion. I have not found sprinkling, but I know it is there, for my father believes it and was himself sprinkled, and he is too intelligent and good a man to believe and practice that which is not in the New Testament. I shall find it at my next reading." I said, "When you do, come and show it to me, and I will go and join the Methodist church with you."

I did not see her again for two weeks. In the mean time there was much talk in the town of her joining the Baptist church. Her own people were agitating the subject. I called again to see her and to ask her if she had completed another reading of the New Testament. She said, "Yes, and I have found nothing but immersion. I wrote to my father last night, that he was wholly mistaken, that there was 'one Lord, one faith, one baptism.'" Then I said, "You will come and join my church, and let me baptize you?" She said, "No, I will wait until I return home and be baptized in my own beloved Kennebec." I said, "Do you fear persecution? Christ bore more for you than he requires you to bear for him, however great may be your trial." She burst into tears and said, "You do not know the bitterness of the persecution which I have borne. Look at that pile of tracts on my mantel-piece from my pastor, he who ought to have sympathized with me in my struggle to know the truth as it is in Christ has been my bitterest persecutor. Judge B. has told me in person that if I dared to join the Baptist church he would call a meeting of the Board and have me dismissed immediately. Mrs. W. came to me (she was the leading female member of the Methodist church) and said to me, "Daughter, let me take your mother's place and advise you not to join these Baptists. They are a contracted, sectarian, bigoted people, who look more to the ordinance of religion than they do to spirituality. You will be sorry if you join them."

"Notwithstanding these persecutions I will join your church and be baptized in the midst of them all." On our next Saturday's meeting she was present. Mrs. W. and perhaps fifty other Methodists were present at the meeting. This was very unusual. When the door of the church was opened, Eliza and a number of others presented themselves for membership. After telling her christian experience Eliza said, "Can I say something more?" I told her, "Anything you desire, speak." She said, "I do not join the Baptist church because I do not love the Methodists. That is the church of my father and of my mother, the church around which all my early recollections cling so fondly; but I join the Baptist church because I cannot obey my Saviour without doing so." The effect upon the congregation was really thrilling, for she spoke it in such an audible voice that all could hear it distinctly.

I might say she was not dismissed from college, but the "Board of Examiners" unanimously recommended her continuance as a teacher on the ground that her classes were the best taught in the institution. The result of this christian heroism upon her part was that her new church relations were very happy indeed. She seemed to enjoy communion with Christ as a perpetual feast to her soul. "The doer of the word shall be blessed in his deed."—W. W. E., an Old Pastor, in Central Baptist.

Missionary Calendar.

The Woman's Foreign Mission Society of the First church, Augusta, have decided to issue a Calendar for 1893, which they hope will be, in many respects, an improvement upon that of last year. It will be ready Nov. 20th, and it is earnestly desired that a copy may find its way into every home within the Southern Baptist Convention.

To show how great a comfort these Calendars have been, we copy a few extracts taken from private letters. A missionary in South China writes:

"The Calendar came while our three children were ill, one desperately. You can see what a world of comfort the Calendar was to me and how each day the passages of Scripture seemed especially for me. God bless you for thinking of sending it, and may its blessed influence be felt in every Baptist home in the South."

Mrs. Pruitt of North China writes:

"The Missionary Calendar proves itself both a means of education and a means of grace. It helps to teach us how and for what we should pray."

This is from our beloved Mrs. Brunson, recently missionary in Japan:

"The Missionary Calendar is a potent factor in the advancement of the mission cause, because it disseminates knowledge concerning the work and the workers. It fosters a spirit of daily prayer for the toilers in the far-off vineyards and the success of their undertakings—thus bringing them and their work into closer sympathy and union with the christians at home.

Here is a word from one of our frontier missionaries, Rev. T. F. Medlin, of Oklahoma, Indian Territory:

"I am so glad you are thinking of your home missionaries. It strengthens us to feel that while we are battling with difficulties, the christians at home are praying for us and our work. Pray that we may win and hold this new country for Christ."

ANNIE W. ARMSTRONG.

Copies may be obtained from the Maryland Baptist Mission Rooms, No. 9 W. Lexington street, Baltimore, Md., and from the American Baptist Publication Society, No. 66½ Whitehall street, Atlanta, Ga. Price 25 cents, postage 2 cents.

Cuba.

If we should look up at the sky some night in Cuba, we should see something that none of us had ever seen before—the Southern Cross—a beautiful group of stars that never rises into our northern firmament. The familiar Great Bear, or Dipper, would be there, and other groups that we know at home, but they would look different somehow—the very moon looking a little strange. The atmosphere is so clear that the stars, instead of seeming to be pasted flat against the sky, stand out brilliantly from the clear purple-blue heavens; and the moonlight almost dazzles one with its brightness.

The glittering of thousands of large bright fireflies adds to the beauty of the scene. A traveller in Cuba says that the pale, greenish light of the cucullo is so strong that it may serve as a candle. Children catch them and keep them in little cages of reeds. These little pets are carefully washed, morning and evening, and fed with sugar-cane—not sugar; for if they were fed with sugar and any of it happened to cling to their legs or bodies, they would tear each other to pieces.

These beautiful nights do not come as ours do—stealing on through twilight. Following the wonderful sunset, almost as if a curtain had dropped and shut out the light, comes night and starlight.

The vegetation of the island would also be strange to us. Many of the most beautiful woods that we use, grow here,—such as mahogany and rosewood. The cactus grows to an enormous size; and many plants which we have only seen in hothouses, grow wild in the fields and hedges. Stately palm trees, plantains, mangoes, orange trees, are on every side. It is here that the pineapple is in its full glory. Some one tells us that the pineapple of Cuba is an altogether different thing from that "sour, stringy, indigestible thing" which we have at home. On the whole, however, our fruits—our apples and peaches and pears and strawberries—are better than those peculiar to the tropics.

We have the advantage of the Cubans, too, in our singing birds. Except for a few visitors from the coast of Florida, the birds of Cuba are songless. Tropical birds, as a rule, are beautiful and brightly colored but unmusical. To one accustomed to our own songsters, the silence of a Cuban forest is almost oppressive. The occasional scream of a parrot is all that breaks the stillness.

Perhaps, after all, nothing would seem as strange to us as the people and cities. The foreign tongue, the quaint sights, the curious customs—all would make us feel very far away from home. This feeling, however, would die out when we found ourselves, as we surely would, some Sunday morning, in a Baptist church. Though the words of hymn and, prayer and sermon would be strange to us, the home feeling would be there as we worshipped God in the midst of our brethren.—Annie Winston, in Kind Words.

Diaz Persecuted in Cuba by Roman Catholics.

The spirit of persecution is active in Cuba, under the guidance of the Roman Catholic priests. In a published statement, our missionary, Rev. A. J. Diaz, tells of some of the persecutions thus:

"My brother and I went to a town near Havana, one evening, to hold a meeting. We found but one place vacant and that was a store. The priests had been ahead of us; however, and had told the people not to rent any place to us. At last, we found a place with the roof crumbling and almost in ruins. Now the law requires that we hold meetings inside of a building, but does not say anything about a roof being on it, so we took the place and prepared to have our meeting. Soon we had a large congregation, and then we began to preach and to sing. We were the only Baptists in that town, and the mob cried out they did not want any Protestants there, and did all it was possible to disturb us. In the course of the tumult we heard the report of a gun, and a little boy sitting up in front was shot dead. We afterwards learned that the priests had gone up into the tower of the church, and had tried to shoot me through a hole in the wall, which was at my back. The soldiers came and put the mob out of the building, and my brother put me into a room and told me to hide there while he kept the crowd away. After five or six minutes the noise stopped and I went out to see where my brother was. We were roughly handled by the crowd; they tore our clothes and slapped our faces, and we were about pulled to pieces when the guard came to take us to the mayor.

When we were presented to him, he asked us the usual questions as to where we were from, what we had been doing, etc. We told him we had come from Havana to hold a meeting, and had been prevented from doing so by the mob, and that we were American citizens, and produced our papers of citizenship. When he learned that we were American citizens, he was very profuse in his apologies and allowed us to go free."

She survived her beloved husband about nine months. In every relation of life she was an ornament of her sex, and died lamented and beloved by all who knew her. She left three children, all of whom are grown. Alas, for the world when such treasures are removed from it.

JOHNSON—The death and experience of a young man on the 12th inst. in Duplin county, to wit: Ashby E. Johnson, aged sixteen years, may be of inspiration to young men at least. While living he witnessed for Christ to even his home people. It is rare that a boy will do this. He said his hope of heaven was strong, and for twelve months he has been in feeble health. He departed for his long home in triumphant faith. His people have many good evidences that he is with the Saviour he talked so much about.

I buried him just at sun-down on Sunday evening, Nov. 13th, to await the resurrection.

The American Baptist Publication Society has published an improved edition of the Revised Bible Union Testament. The work has been carefully edited by Drs. Henry G. Weston, John A. Broadus, and Alvah Hovey. The exact meaning of the inspired text is translated by corresponding words and phrases, as far as they can be found, in the present state of the English language. The editors have freely availed themselves of the earlier and later English versions and revisions, as well as the original text. Inasmuch as differences of opinion exist as to the displacing of words used in the commonly received version relating to the ordinance of baptism, two editions of this revised version are published; the one retaining the words "immerse," etc., employed in the Bible Union Version, and the other the words "baptize," etc., found in the commonly received version, but in all other respects the two editions are alike.

The Convention was then called to order by President Marsh.

The report on State Missions was read by Dr. C. Durham.

The following interesting and encouraging facts appear in the body of the report:

The results of this year's work can only be indicated in part by the following figures: Sermons, 11,486; mission churches supplied, 228; out stations supplied, 427; baptisms, 1,142; added by letter, 1,294; churches organized, 62; Sunday-schools organized, 63; houses of worship finished and occupied, 28; cost of these twenty-eight houses of worship, $33,600; houses of worship being built, 87.

Many of the places aided this year have become self-sustaining, and will no longer need the aid of the Board. The average cost of the buildings has been about $1,200. Thus it will be seen that the church property acquired for the denomination through this departmentis worth more than double the cost of the entire State Mission work for the year.

The results of the work done through this Board for the year ending May 1, 1892, can only be indicated by the following:

Missionaries, 365; weeks of labor, 10,640; churches and stations, 1,324; sermons and addresses, 46,866; prayer meetings, 14,042; baptisms, 5,274; received by letter, 5,973; total additions, 11,785; Sunday-schools organized, 342; teachers and pupils, 17,785; religious visits, 54,336; churches constituted, 179; houses of worship built, 80; Bibles and Testaments, 4,304; pages and tracts distributed, 919,472.

Dr. Chas. E. Taylor, by request, spoke to the report. He said the report was the best which had ever appeared upon this feature of our work; and that the Convention now in session was an inspiration to us all, and that in point of ability it was equal to the Southern Baptist Convention which met in this city twenty years ago; that he was rejoiced that so much of this work mentioned in the report was done by preaching. The number of sermons preached by brethren at work under the State Board would, if all were listened to by one man, every day in the year, consume more than thirty years of his life. Thirty years of solid preaching! The thought is overwhelming. He was gratified that a large part of the progress in religious work is seen in this Southland; that he had thought it might be, after all, that the Lord would in some way recompense the Southern States for the suffering and losses which came to them through the late war. In other sections we find an abundance of money and pensions, but along with their religious thought a great deal of dry rot. He was glad that such a large proportion of this work was done in the country; we will never get the towns until we get the country. We meet here in this city where the Baptists are recognized as strong and influential. It was not through the work of the men who have been located here, though they have done their work well that such is the case, but rather we owe it to the labors of such men as Bro. Patrick Dowd and Bro. John Purefoy, who spent their lives in preaching in Chatham and in Wake, and under whose ministry large numbers were converted who afterwards made their homes in this city.

Dr. Taylor said there was a spirit of enthusiasm which pervaded the entire report. No change in the methods of doing the work. No step backwards.

The work of the State Mission Board, while performed in North Carolina, has been fertilizing and fruitful in many States and in many lands. Streams of usefulness have flowed from their labors which have not exhausted themselves within our State, as a Dead Sea which receives but never gives forth. Its influence has been like North Carolina's beautiful rivers. All of these, except two or three on the northern border, flow from North Carolina into other States. Ask the clear flowing waters in the valleys of Watauga whither they are going; ask the French Broad, the Yadkin, the Catawba, and they will all tell you that they are going to gladden the fields of Virginia and Tennessee and South Carolina. Just so have unnumbered currents of fertilizing and spiritual influence—of spiritual energy—flowed for a century and a half into the West and South, and to heathen lands, from the sacrifices and labors of Baptists in the Old North State.

Dr. Taylor was listened to with much interest from the first to the last of his admirable address, of which the above is a very imperfect outline.

Dr. Taylor was followed by Dr. C. Durham, Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Missions, who stated that taking all of our work together, we had expended more than $21,000 more than had ever been raised by the denomination in any year of its history in the State. And in all of this not a cent was included which has been expended in church building. Seventy new houses of worship are in course of erection, and twenty-eight had been completed during the year at a cost of $33,000. No part of the work had been pressed at the expense of any other part, but that the object had been to develop the work in all its varied forms and interests.

At the close of Dr. Durham's speech a collection was taken, and the Convention raised in cash and pledges $450.

At the close of the discussion on State Missions the Centennial of Missions was taken up and ably discussed by Dr. F. M. Ellis of Baltimore, who was here by special invitation to speak on this subject. He discussed the subject in a most learned and elaborate manner. This address was embraced under two or three general divisions. First, the evangelising the nations. Second, their baptism and chiefly the teaching of the nations thus evangelized and baptized. Dr. Ellis was unusually strong, clear and forcible in his style, and made a fine impression upon the audience.

Dr. Ellis was followed by Dr. W. D. Powell, who is, so to speak, an ecclesiastical cyclone. He puts all of his soul and strength in all he does or says. He meant business, and asked for $15,000 for the centennial of missions. He made a superb effort, and received in pledges about $7,000.

NIGHT SESSION.

The Convention met at 7:30 p. m., and after prayer by Rev. J. B. Harrell, the report on the Thomasville Orphanage was read and discussed by W. A. Montgomery, Esq., J. H. Mills, superintendent, and Dr. W. E. Dickinson. At the close of these admirable addresses a cash collection was taken amounting to $225.

Our Young People.

There can be but one opinion about the American Baptist Publication Society's paper, Our Young People. It is excellent, and will be invaluable to those for whom it is designed. It is well that the Publication Society is taking the lead in providing a literature for the youth of our denomination that will aid in their cultivation in knowledge, piety and activity. Our Young People is the cheapest paper of its class published. It is issued fortnightly. Price, only 40 cents in clubs of five copies or more. So far as we know, the Baptists do not publish anywhere any other paper of this grade.

A post mortem examination held yesterday over Wm. Tillman, colored, who was shot and mortally wounded last Friday night by Ben Huskins, revealed the remarkable fact that the bullet, a (thirty-two calibre) had passed through the negro's heart, notwithstanding which he lived from Friday night until Tuesday afternoon. The bullet, Dr. Wilder says, passed through the right ventricle of the heart. Such an occurrence has been known in medical science but rarely—never before in this country. The negro was up and walking about the morning after he was shot.—Charlotte Observer, December 1.

He Died for Me.

When time seems short, and death is near,
And I am pressed by doubt and fear,
And sins, an overflowing tide,
Assail my peace on every side,
This thought my refuge still shall be—
I know my Saviour died for me.

His name is Jesus, and he died,
For guilty sinners crucified;
Content to die that he might win
Their ransom from the death of sin;
No sinner worse than I can be;
Therefore I know he died for me.

If grace were bought, I could not buy;
If grace were coined, no wealth have I;
By grace alone I draw my breath,
Held up from everlasting death;
Yet since I know his grace is free
I know the Saviour died for me.

I read God's Holy Word, and find
Great truths which far transcend my mind;
A little do I know beside;
This is my best theology—
I know the Saviour died for me.

My faith is weak, but tis thy gift;
Thou canst my helpless soul uplift,
And say, "Thy bonds of death are riven,
Thy sins by me are all forgiven,
And thou shalt live, from guilt set free,
For I, thy Saviour, died for thee."

—Dr. Geo. W. Bethune.

How a Soldier Ran Away to Sea.

One hundred and nine years ago, in the month of February, 1777, a young French guardsman ran away to sea.

And a most singular running away it was. He did not wish to be a sailor, but he was so anxious to go that he bought a ship to run away in—for he was a very wealthy young man, and, though he was only nineteen, he held a commission as major-general in the armies of a land three thousand miles away, a land he had never seen and the language of which he could not speak. The King of France commanded him to remain at home, his friends and relatives tried to restrain him, and even representatives, or agents, of the country in defense of which he desired to fight would not encourage his purpose. And when the young man, while dining at the house of the British ambassador to France, openly avowed his sympathy with a downtrodden people, and his determination to help them gain their freedom, the ambassador acted quickly. At his request, the rich young enthusiast was arrested by the French government, and orders were given to seize his ship, which was awaiting him at Bordeaux. But ship and owner both slipped away, and, sailing from the port of Pasajes in Spain, the runaway, with eleven chosen companions, was soon on the sea, bound for America, and beyond the reach of both friends and foes.

On April 25, 1777, he landed at the little port of Georgetown, at the mouth of the Great Pee Dee river, in South Carolina, and from that day forward, the career of Marie Jean Paul Roch Yves Gilbert Motier, Marquis de La Fayette, has held a place in the history of America, and in the interest and affection of the American people.—St. Nicholas.

The Waning Year.

The year is waning. But a few brief weeks remain of the twelve-month which, so short a time ago, we hailed as the "new year." The reflection naturally comes, "What have we accomplished in the months and weeks past? How nearly have we realized our purpose formed, devoutly and prayerfully no doubt, at the beginning of this new stage of life?" In nearly every case the answer must be one mingled with remorse and regret, for such is the weakness and insufficiency of human nature that few of us ever realize fully, or even approximately, the ideals we set before us. And yet if the direction of our lives has been toward good rather than evil, if we have made some progress, however small, in righteousness and spirituality, let us rejoice. If we have rendered some service to the cause of Christ, though it be but the giving of a cup of cold water to a thirsty soul, we have helped on by so much the kingdom of our Lord. Let the thought that we have endeavored, check the feeling of despondency which comes over us when we measure our accomplishment by standards we fain would have reached.

And let us not forget that there is still opportunity to round out a year of imperfect service by new consecration, by more devoted labor. Shall we not try to "redeem the time" which yet remains to us? Some soul may yet be reached; some neglected task may yet be completed. Even if the page before us is blotted with sins and faults, there is time to make it fair and clean, by seeking God's forgiving mercy and walking henceforth in purity and singleness of heart. "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise him for the help of his countenance."—Zion's Herald.

Excellence of Salt.

If the feet are tired or painful after long standing, great relief can be had by bathing them in salt water. A handful of salt to a gallon of water is the right proportion. Have the water as hot as can be comfortably borne. Immerse the feet and throw the water over the legs as far as the knees with the hands. When the water becomes too cool, rub briskly with a flesh-towel. This method, if used night and morning, will cure neuralgia of the feet.

[illegible] may be greatly brightened by first washing thoroughly and then going over [illegible] with a clean cloth and clear salt and [illegible]. Use a cupful of coarse salt to a large [illegible] water.

[illegible] as a tooth powder is better than almost anything that can be bought. It keeps the teeth brilliantly white and the gums hard and rosy.

If, after having a tooth pulled, the mouth is filled with salt and water, it will allay the danger of having a hemorrhage.

To clean willow furniture, use salt and water. Apply with a nail-brush, scrub well and dry thoroughly.

When broiling steak, throw a little salt on the coals and the blaze from the dripping fat will not annoy.

Damp salt will remove the discoloration of cups and saucers caused by tea and careless washing.

Brass work can be kept beautifully bright by occasionally rubbing with salt and vinegar.

Wash the mica of the stove doors with salt and vinegar.

Salt in whitewash will make it stick better.—Selected.

Barley in the South.

Barley as a regular grain crop is but little known in the South. It is, however, one of the standards in various parts of the world, in the old world especially. All over the Pacific coast of North America the grain is extensively grown, taking the place of our Indian corn as an element of food for horses and other live stock on the farm or ranch. The California crop of barley is immense, there being, as a rule, no corn cultivated in that State except on a small scale in a few localities; and then the product is confined almost exclusively to the roasting ear patch. Not one horse in a thousand in California knows what corn is.

It is a little remarkable that our Southern people have so long neglected this valuable grain. It is more valuable as a horse food than corn, and it is far more easily cultivated. There is also more economy in growing barley. With the majority of our Southern farmers, corn is one of the most troublesome and expensive of all the grains to cultivate. To grow it successfully requires long and close attention, the season of its culture and harvesting stretching from February to November. With the same expense of cultivation and labor generally put into a barley crop the barley yield will be worth largely more to the Southern farmer than the corn crop gives on our average land, while the period of cultivation and harvesting embraces only a few days each in the fall and summer.

One of the great advantages barley has over corn is that it enables the farmer to dispose of the employment and feeding of hoe hands through the long months of summer. Another advantage lies in the fact that one of the most valuable features of the barley crop comes in the rich pasture, or soiling, which the plant affords in the winter time when green food is scarce and important. Experiments made by some of our most progressive farmers in Georgia in the cultivation of barley shows that it can not only be grown with success as a grain crop here, but those experiments have demonstrated clearly also that it is one our most valuable plants for soiling purposes.

The season of the year is now approaching for sowing barley. We would advise our planters who have not heretofore had experience in growing the grain to plant a few acres as an experimental crop. The ground should be well prepared, well fertilized and plowed deeply; and then the grain sowed very thickly and harrowed in, leaving the land so that a scythe or mowing machine can easily run over it.—M. V. M., in Houston Post.

Dickens' Advice to his Son.

The following is a portion of a letter written by Charles Dickens to one of his sons when the latter left home for school. It is from the pen of Mamie Dickens the novelist's daughter, and was written for the Ladies' Home Journal:

"I have put a New Testament among your books for the very same reason, and with the very same hopes that made me write an easy account of it for you when you were a little child. Because it is the best book that ever was or will be known in the world; and because it teaches you the best lesson by which any human creature who tries to be truthful and faithful to duty can possibly be guided.

"As your brothers have gone away, one by one, I have written to each such words as I am writing to you, and have entreated them all to guide themselves by this book, putting aside the interpretations and inventions of men. You will remember that you have never at home been wearied about religious observances or mere formalities. I have always been anxious not to weary my children with such things before they are old enough to form opinions respecting them. You will, therefore, understand the better that I now most solemnly impress upon you the truth and beauty of the christian religion as it came from Christ himself, and the impossibility of your going far wrong if you humbly but heartily respect it. Only one thing more on this head. The more we are in earnest as to feeling it, the less we are disposed to hold forth about it. Never abandon the wholesome practice of saying your own private prayers night and morning. I have never abandoned it myself, and I know the comfort of it. I hope you will always be able to say, in after life that you had a kind father."

No other remedy is so reliable, in cases of sudden colds, or coughs, or for any and all derangements of the throat and lungs, as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. This wonderful medicine affords great relief in consumption, even in the advanced stages of that disease.

Great Feats of Memory.

Idiots have been known whose memory for names and words was so retentive that they could repeat a sermon verbatim and indicate where the preacher blew his nose and coughed while delivering it.

Cardinal Mazzofanti, the linguist, who is said to have known a hundred languages, declared that he never forgot a word he once learned. To a friend who had congratulated Leyden on his remarkable memory, he replied that he often found it a source of great inconvenience. On the friend expressing surprise he explained that he had often wished to recollect a particular expression in some thing he had read, but could not do it until he had repeated the whole passage from the beginning to the expression he desired to recall.

An English clergyman mentions a man who could remember the day of the burial of every person who had died in the parish during thirty-five years, and could also repeat the name and age of each deceased person, and the names of the mourners at his funeral, but so weak was he intellectually that he could not be trusted to feed himself.

Dr. Moffat, the distinguished African missionary and father in law of Dr. Livingstone, once preached a long sermon to a crowd of negroes. Shortly after he had finished he saw a number of negroes gather about a simple-minded young savage. He went to them and discovered that the savage was preaching his sermon over again. Not only was he reproducing the precise words, but imitating the manner and gestures of the white preacher.—Household Monthly.

A Tennessee farmer, the subject of the accompanying portrait, gives the following remarkable statement which our readers are requested to show their friends:

JACKSBORO, TENN., August, 1891.

I was affected with Catarrh for ten years. The principal trouble, the first two years, was the formation of scabs in my nostrils, stopping of one or both sides, a dryness in my throat, a dull, heavy aching in the front part of my head, a tendency to take cold more easily than common, and continual roaring, buzzing and ringing sound in my ears. At times the sound would be like distant bells ringing, or cracking, pricking sensations in my ears, which were a constant and great annoyance to me. After the disease had run on about two years my hearing commenced to fail, and for seven years I was so deaf that I could not hear ordinary conversation, and was all the time growing worse. I had spent a great deal of money for relief and had tried all remedies in my reach, with no effect until I used the Aerial Medication in June, 1888, and the very first application opened out my ears and restored my hearing fully; and a continuation of the treatment for several weeks entirely cured me of the Catarrh, and fully restored my general health, which had become impaired, and for three years I have been entirely free from Catarrh, and my hearing has been and is still perfect.

BAPTIST STATE CONVENTION.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

MONDAY—FOURTH DAY.

After religious exercises, the Convention was called to order by President Marsh.

At the close of the reading of Saturday's proceedings, Prof. F. P. Hobgood moved a reconsideration of the resolution passed on Saturday authorizing the State Mission Board to borrow money to pay the salaries of State missionaries when due.

The motion created some discussion by members of the Convention, but upon vote the motion was lost.

Dr. J. D. Hufham, by a vote of the body, was asked to make a statement in reference to the work in Tarboro and in Edgecombe county, which he did. Then followed the regular order of business.

We take the following from the report of J. D. Boushall, Treasurer of the Baptist State Convention, showing the amount which has been expended during the year for the different objects of the Convention: For State Missions, $14,272.95; for Colportage, $515.11; for Foreign Missions, $10,247.72; for Home Missions, $7,218.82; for Board of Education, $3,731.56; for endowment of Wake Forest College, $48.75; for Robeson Institute, $3,600; for Baptist Female College, $15,207.40; for South Aid Fund, $118.12; for Orphanage, $11,866 30; for Ministers' Aid Fund, $1,075 05; for Church Extension, $499.03; for Sunday-schools, $7,019.10; total for all objects, $76,420.81.

After the reading of this report Dr. J. S. Dill of California addressed the Convention on the subject of Home Missions. He expressed great pleasure for the opportunity of addressing the North Carolina Baptist State Convention after having been away from the State for some years. He was specially delighted to see the increase which had marked the work upon which he was asked to speak. He said the work which has been accomplished, and for which we are profoundly grateful, must not suffice; we must still press on, and let its future be more glorious in its extent than what has already past. He said he was rejoiced at the interest which the Board had shown among the colored people in holding institutes for the special instruction and improvement of the colored ministers in the South.

At the close of Dr. Dill's address the report on Wake Forest College was read by Dr. C. Durham.

Dr. Taylor, President of Wake Forest College, was asked to lead the discussion on this subject. He said that of the colleges and institutes for higher education in the United States eighty-seven were State or undenominational schools, and represented 10,000 students, and that there were 259 denominational colleges, and were represented by 40,000 students. He said he was going to claim, in the first place, that these denominational colleges had a right to exist, and while this seemed at first thought evident, yet to all minds it was not evident, as was shown in the strong opposition they had met by men who thought all education ought to be furnished under the direction of the State. From 1830 to 1840 was the college building era; it was during this period that Wake Forest had been built. The building of these colleges was the legitimate outcome of the opposition to the connection between Church and State. What a different country this is to what it would have been, to what it could have been, without these colleges. He was a friend to our own University, but wanted to see it move up so as not to be in competition with our other institutions. In the second place, our denominational colleges were entitled to a generous equipment. My first duty is not to my college, but to my boy. And if I cannot offer to my brethren as good or better chance at my own college, I cannot afford to ask them to send their boys there. You have put money at Wake Forest, but I want to tell you, you have just begun, as compared with what we need and must have to do our best work, and to obtain the highest possibilities of the institution.

In conclusion, Dr. Taylor said our denominational college was entitled to the patronage of its own people; that he had heard it said that young men who were educated at Wake Forest were not likely to share many of the honors and emoluments of office. If that were so, if our people will support and sustain Wake Forest as they may do for the next five years, this state of things will forever disappear.

Dr. Thos. Hume said he wanted to vote for this report, but he could not do so without some modification of that clause in the report which stated that the amount of work which entitled a student to the A. B. degree at Wake Forest and Chapel Hill was practically the same. He said for his part he did not think this was true, and it could only be decided by experts; he said he was a Baptist, and at the same time was a University man; that he loved Wake Forest and honored and loved its worthy president, and that he thought the feature of the report was unwise, inasmuch as it could not be settled here.

Dr. J. L. Carroll thought that the part of the report which assigned as a reason for a less number of students at Wake Forest this year than were there last, as being owing partly to the sharp competition between the University and Wake Forest, ought to be left out, but on hearing the report re-read he withdrew his opposition.

Mr. T. M. Pittman said the University was ours, and that Wake Forest was ours, and that there ought to be no misunderstanding on this question in the Convention; that Dr. Taylor had been misunderstood, and that while Dr. Taylor had said that certain conditions had existed at the University sixty years ago, he also expressly said he was glad they did not now exist as then.

At this point Dr. Hufham obtained the floor. He said the Baptists had always entertained the best feeling for the University. When the University had been gutted, and its walls were silent, it was a Baptist who first took steps for its reorganization; the Baptist Convention lent its aid, and the Baptists have always had the kindest feelings, but we want the University to move up out of our way so that there shall be no competition between it and Wake Forest College.

The committee to nominate a Board of Missions and Sunday schools reported the following named brethren to compose said Board:

J. C. Scarborough, Chairman; C. Durham, Secretary; N. B. Broughton, W. H. Pace, G. M. Allen, C. T. Bailey, T. H. Briggs, J. M. Heck, J. N. Holding, W. N. Jones, J. D. Boushall, G. W. Sanderlin, R. NIGHT SESSION.

Report on the Baptist Female University was read by Dr. C. Durham, and by request Dr. Pritchard spoke to the report. He said we were just coming to appreciate such an institution, and that we must, as Baptists, educate our girls in our own institutions.

He was followed by Dr. Thos. Hume of Chapel Hill, who strongly and in the most beautiful and chaste language advocated the building and equipping an institution such as was outlined by the trustees and friends of this enterprise.

Dr. L. G. Broughton of Winston read a resolution looking to the opening of correspondence with other towns with a view of changing the location of the school, but the resolution failed to meet with much favor in the Convention.

Rev. J. B. Boone thought that Raleigh had not done as well by the enterprise as she ought, and if the enterprise could succeed elsewhere better, Raleigh nor no other town ought to stand in the way.

Dr. T. E. Skinner said the grip had to a large extent interfered with the progress of the institution, and that we ought to regard it now with higher and better motives than the mere fact of which town in the State would pay most to have it located there.

Dr. Durham said there was nothing the matter with the location nor with the work, nor anything else connected with the enterprise. That all the conditions had been complied with, and that the balance of subscriptions would be forthcoming by or before the time they were due.

At this point the previous question was called, and the report of the trustees accepted by the Convention.

The report of the Woman's Mission Union was then taken from the table, and Dr. F. M. Ellis of Baltimore addressed the Convention for ten minutes.

The report on Periodicals was read by Rev. R. Ford, and adopted, as follows:

We cannot overestimate the value and importance of a denominational organ. It is the medium through which the Baptist homes and churches must be reached. It is the vehicle for the dissemination of Baptist doctrine and religious literature. It is the means for conveying general and denominational information. It unifies our people and concentrates our forces. We are to be congratulated that we have such an excellent State paper. The BIBLICAL RECORDER for a half century has faithfully and efficiently served us as our State organ, and we most heartily commend it to the confidence and patronage of our people and suggest that pastors endeavor to enlarge its circulation in all our churches.

The Foreign Mission Journal and the Home Field are very important agencies for arousing a deeper and wider interest in the mission work and should be widely circulated in all our churches.

Charity and Children is intended to keep our people informed about our Orphanage and in thorough sympathy with this institution so dear to our people.

The Wake Forest Student is one of the best college journals in the South. It is an honor to the institution. Besides containing much valuable literature, it conveys much interesting news and information about the college which every Baptist ought to know.

The following is the report of the committee appointed at Goldsboro to investigate and suggest means to increase the circulation of the BIBLICAL RECORDER:

Your committee appointed last year at Goldsboro with instructions to examine and report upon the best means of increasing the circulation of the RECORDER, and as to when the subscription price could be reduced without injury to the standard of the paper, respectfully report that, through the courtesy of the editor, we have had the opportunity to examine the subscription and advertising list, and the income and expenditures of the editor in publishing the paper, and in the opinion of your committee, after an examination of the books, etc., above named, and from such other information as now received, that the price of the paper, with its present amount of advertising and reading matter and circulation, the subscription cannot be reduced and give to the editor the proper return for the labor and capital invested in the enterprise. We believe that the hearty co-operation of the pastors of the churches as recommended in the report on Periodicals is the most effective means of increasing the circulation of the RECORDER.

The following was adopted:

WHEREAS, The Institutes held during the past summer for the purpose of training colored preachers seem to have done much good; therefore

Resolved, That we instruct the Board of Missions to continue the work, and, if possible, enlarge it; that the churches connected with this Convention are hereby requested to take one collection during this Conventional year for this work.

The committee to nominate a Ministers' Relief Board reported the following which was adopted:

W. C. Tyree, C. A. Woodson, W. A. Albright, H. A. Reams, T. E. Cheek, J. L. Markham, T. H. Pritchard, F. P. Hobgood, W. N. Jones.

The Convention adopted a resolution of thanks (offered by Dr. Hume) to the pastors and members of the Tabernacle and First churches for the comfort provided for the Convention; to the pastors and members of other denominations for their christian courtesy; to all who had contributed to the gracious entertainment of members of the body and visitors thereto; to the newspapers for full and accurate reports of proceedings published, and to the railroad companies for special rates to delegates.

Dr. J. J. Hall, the pastor of the Tabernacle church, expressed the great gratification the church felt in having the Convention meet with them.

The following were appointed as the Centennial Committee:

T. H. Pritchard, chairman; C. Durham, J. L. Carroll, R. VanDeventer, J. D. Hufham, J. H. Edwards.

The Convention at 10:45 o'clock, after short but appropriate talks from Drs. Hume, Hufham and Sanderlin, adjourned to meet next year with the church in Elizabeth City.

Duties of the N. C. Baptist Historical Society to the Early Baptist Preachers of the State.

I wish to call attention to two things which, I think, the Society ought to do in regard to these pioneers of the denomination in North Carolina:

1. To collect and preserve, as far as possible, all the important facts and incidents of their lives. I would like to see the materials gathering for such a work as Taylor's Lives of Virginia Baptist Ministers. Such a book by Dr. J. D. Hufham, or some other brother of like gifts, perpetuating the names and labors of the early Baptist ministry of the State is imperatively demanded at the present time. These brethren rendered invaluable service in laying the foundations for the establishment of the kingdom of Christ and of our denominational prosperity in North Carolina, and these labors ought not to be overlooked and forgotten. The story of their toils and sufferings ought to be gathered up and preserved for the use of the future historian. The truth of history demands it. Already matters of interest in Baptist history are being criticised as doubtful because a faithful record of them has not been made up and preserved. And the sooner special effort is made in this direction, the better. Already many of our old church-books have been destroyed, and the brethren whose recollection could supplement them are passing rapidly away. Already much valuable information has been irrecoverably lost. Shall this loss be increased by longer waiting for something to turn up?

2. To ascertain and mark, as best may be done, their last resting places. It is sad to think that many of these graves are unknown, and that many others of them are unmarked, and will soon be unknown also. How rapidly are we losing sight of them! To my mind there is something very pathetic in the babe idea.

"Beneath" some rugged oak, some pine-tree's "shade,
Where heaves the turf in many a mouldering heap,
Each in his narrow cell forever laid,
The" pioneer Baptist preachers "sleep."

Their toils ended, their sufferings over, they have passed into that long sleep which knows no earthly waking.

"The breezy call of incense-breathing morn,
The swallow twittering from the straw-built shed,
The cock's shrill clarion, or the echoing horn,
No more shall rouse them from their lowly bed."

While engaged in their Master's service, they were often away from home on long missionary journeys, requiring days and weeks, and some times months, cheered, however, and sustained in their arduous labors by the thought of duty done, of souls saved, and of a bright and cheerful welcome on their return to the loved wife and children left behind. But

"For them no more the blazing hearth shall burn,
Or busy housewife ply her evening care;
No children run to lisp their sire's return,
Or climb his knees, the envied kiss to share."

These quiet, humble homes, the abode of conjugal and parental love, and of domestic happiness, were the sunniest spots on earth to them, however unpretending they might seem in the eyes of people in higher life and of ampler means. And so

"Let not Ambition mock their useful toil,
Their homely joys and destiny obscure;
Nor" Culture "hear with a disdainful smile,
The short and simple annals of the poor" uneducated Baptist of the long ago. With better advantages they would, perhaps, have filled a larger space in the public eye and accomplished more for God and humanity.

"Perhaps in these neglected spots are laid
Some hearts once pregnant with celestial fire;"
Tongues that great congregations "might have swayed,
Or waked to ecstacy" th'angelic choir,

as they looked upon multitudes of penitent sinners turned to God by their improved powers of argument and appeal, had their opportunities been better.

"But knowledge, to their eyes, her ample page,
Rich with the stores of Time, did ne'er unroll;
Chill Penury repress'd their noble rage,
And frose the genial current of the soul."

There were few colleges and seminaries in their day, and had there been, most of these men had not the means of enjoying their advantages and privileges. So "Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife,

Their sober wishes never learn'd to stray;
Along the cool, sequester'd vale of life,
They kept the noiseless tenor of their way."

And theirs was the common lot of the great majority. The brightest and the best are not always the favored ones in the public eye. 'Twas ever so.

"Full many a gem of purest ray serene
The dark unfathom'd caves of ocean bear,
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air."

And so after living in comparative obscurity, life's labors being done, most of them have passed away into unknown or unmarked graves.

"Nor you, ye proud! impute to these the fault,
If memory o'er their tomb no trophies raise,
Where, through the long-drawn aisle and fretted vault,
The pealing anthem swells the note of praise."

No, it was no fault of theirs. They desired not, they dreamed not, of such tokens of remembrance. Such a pageant was not for the like of them. But who will undertake to say that they did not, now and then, cherish the hope of being kindly remembered when gone, by the brethren and friends and loved ones left behind? Does not human nature instinctively shudder at the thought of being forgotten? And does not sanctified human nature find a well-spring of comfort in the divine promise, Ps. 112: 6, "The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance?" And all because it satisfies one of the innate longs of the soul.

"On some fond breast the parting soul relies;
Some pious drops the closing eye requires;
E'en from the tomb the voice of Nature cries;
E'en in our ashes live their wonted fires."

Such is the yearning of humanity. There is scarcely an exception to the rule.

"For who, to dumb Forgetfulness a prey,
This pleasing, anxious being e'er resign'd,
Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day,
Nor cast one longing, lingering look behind?"

Yes, the desire for affectionate remembrance dwells immortal in the human breast. Quite sure am I that the fathers in our Baptist ministry felt many a time this longing. And yet how little have we done to perpetuate the memory of their names and their labors. How poorly "mindful of th' unhonored dead" have we been. True it is that the times are hard, and many requisitions are made upon our generosity, and all that;

"Yet e'en their bones from insult to protect,
Some frail memorial erected nigh,"
By plain, but kind and loving architect,
"I' invite the passing tribute of a sigh"

from those who in the shifting scenes of life may perchance pass by their humble graves, seems not an unreasonable boon to ask in their name and on their behalf. Surely we can do that much. I appeal, then, for an honest effort on the part of the Society, and those in sympathy with its work, to perform the two duties herein indicated. Let sketches of the important facts and incidents in their lives be made and preserved for history, and their graves be appropriately designated. Then we may with propriety

"No longer seek their virtues to disclose,
Or draw their frailties from their dread abode;
(Then they alike in trembling hope repose,)
The bosom of their Father and their God."

One Cause of Want of Respect for Teachers.

BY ARACHEL.

The present generation of boys is controlled very much by the impressions made upon it by the fathers. The boy of to-day starts to school with an idea that part of his school life is to be devoted to outwitting the teacher. He has obtained this idea from narratives of school life given by his father. Rarely does the parent try to inculcate in his boy's mind the idea that his teacher is his friend—that he is one to be respected and obeyed—that he is one ready to help the boy at any time—whose whole business, in fact, is to do good to the pupils, and good only.

Some boys learn this, in the course of time; but, strange to say, they seldom impart this information to their fellow-students. Many boys never learn it—and go through their school career with the false impression that the teacher is a quasi enemy.

The father seldom ascertains how his boy behaves towards his teacher—or with what feelings he regards him. Were he to talk with his boy and manifest an interest in his educational welfare, he would be agreeably surprised to see the improvement in his son's studies.

But the boy, left to his own crude notions and swayed, consciously or unconsciously, by the tremendous power of the opinions of his fellows gets farther and farther away from the truth—and eventually reaches the point where the desire for education ceases. Then the demon of unrest enters—finds a congenial home—and the last state of that boy is worse than the first.

Though the cause for this sad condition rests, to some extent upon the shoulders of the teacher, yet by far the larger part of the burden of responsibility is with parents, especially fathers. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred, when the boy goes wrong, the father sends him "to the dogs." He bewails and laments too late. His laziness and indifference in his boy's early years have done the work.

Again. The father, seventy-five out of a hundred, does not look after his boy in regard to the quality of his companionship. Often, oh how often! is the boy either sent from his home or allowed to go, unquestioned, in order that the parent may have a quiet time. Human nature is—well, human nature. The boy seeks unlawful pleasures—and finds them ready to hand. The companions of his pleasures are not of the kind that love restraint. A restless desire to be free from all control grows stronger and stronger. And during the hours of school attendance he frets and worries till the hour of release comes. Not being fond of his lessons, he dislikes any one who attempts to force him to prepare them. Hence the want of respect for his teacher.

The literary beauty of the Bible has won it many admirers, but it is its Divine authority which makes it what it is. It commands belief and obedience, and compels admiration.—United Presbyterian.

TWO THEORIES OF THE CHURCH.

Among professed christians there are two principal theories that prevail in regard to the constituency of the churches, of Christ. One is that the churches should be composed alone of converted material; the other is, that the churches may be composed of converted and unconverted material, especially when the latter are received with the desire on their part, and with the intention on the part of the church, to use the church as the means of developing them into christians.

It requires only a slight study of the Scriptures in order to see that the first of the above theories is scriptural, and the other unscriptural. There are many passages in God's word that fortify this assertion. In Matt. 16: 18, Christ speaks of a rock, on which he would build his church; and whether we suppose he referred to himself or to Peter's confession, it is evident that a wise builder like Christ would use only suitable material, that is converted material, for the spiritual structure he intended to erect. We would call an earthly architect very unwise to use untempered mortar and rotten material in the erection of a structure intended for the habitation of men; and it is indeed quite a reflection upon the wisdom of the Saviour to suppose that he uses, or intended to use, unsound material for the great spiritual temple that he came to erect among men. Again, notice Acts 2: 47, "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved, (or the saved.") Here we are plainly taught that God adds to his church only saved, (and of course converted), people. Who can improve the divine plan? Who has the authority to attempt it? Has man found a better way than God's?

In Eph. 5: 23 Christ is called the "Head of the church," and in Eph. 1: 23 the church is called Christ's body. To attempt to make Christ the Head of unconverted and sinful people, or to attempt to incorporate such in his body, is blind folly and sacrilegious presumption. Peter, in addressing ancient christians, says, (1 Pet. 2: 5), "Ye also as lively stones, are built up, a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. And again, in the ninth verse of the same chapter he says, "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light." This language will apply to the collective body of christians called the church of Christ, or with equal force to local bodies of christians scattered through the land called the churches of Christ. Peter spoke of inspiration, and if we admit that the church should be, and is composed of both converted and unconverted material, then we have an inspired man addressing unconverted people as a holy nation, a royal priesthood; and this would bring about a confusion of ideas, of which an inspired man could not be the author. In addition to the passages quoted, notice Col. 1: 18, 24; 1 Cor. 15: 9; Gal. 1: 13; Acts 16: 5; Rom. 16: 14, 15; 2 Cor. 5: 1; 1 Thess. 2: 14; 1 Thess. 1: 4, etc.

Before we dismiss this particular part of the discussion, let us notice that Paul's letters were, in the main, addressed to local, individual churches, such as the church at Rome, at Corinth, at Ephesus, &c.; and in his letters he is constantly giving directions and commands to these earlier christians and churches that only converted people had the power, or the will, to comply with. Could not an inspired apostle see the inconsistency and uselessness of commanding unconverted men and women to "let love be without dissimulation;" to "abhor that which is evil, and cleave to that which is good?" Was he open to the charge of sacred irony in advising the church at Rome to rejoice in hope, to be "patient in tribulation," to continue "instant in prayer," and in giving a great many other similar commands? Nay, we are fully persuaded that Paul in his epistles often gives such commands to the christians composing the churches to whom he wrote as to enable any unconverted people that had crept in unawares to realize their inability and unwillingness to comply with them, and hence, that their proper place was out of, and not in, the church.

As to the second theory mentioned, that the church is, and should be composed of converted and unconverted material, it is safe to say that it will not stand the test of Scriptural analysis. Weak and unscriptural as this theory is, however, it has many modern supporters. It is a well-known fact that John Wesley did not contemplate the separation of himself and his followers from the church of England when he and his co laborers first organized religious societies in England. The prime object of these societies was to develop and improve the christian graces of the converted people who united with them, and also of such unconverted people as joined them, with the ultimate hope of being developed into christians. As the local society did not claim to be a church, they saw no inconsistency in receiving any who desired to unite with it simply for the moral and religious culture such society might afford them. This was all well enough, while those societies continued to exist as societies. People of all kinds now join benevolent societies that they may enjoy the social, benevolent, or even religious culture they may derive from them. By a sudden metamorphosis the societies organized by Mr. Wesley ceased to be societies, and were resolved into local churches, the collective body of which are called the Methodist church. Nobody can dispute the right of Mr. Wesley's followers to organize themselves into churches. That great organization called the Methodist church contains a great host of christian people. Some of our true and tried friends are among them; but we are pursuaded that they will suffer a friend to say that it would have been, we think, better for them and for the world if they had dropped the society plan when they organized their local churches, because, according to that plan, not only converted people are encouraged to join their churches, but unconverted men and women are warmly welcomed to their fold, if they simply express a desire to flee from the wrath to come, or in other words, if they simply promise to try to reform. Any people who adopt this plan of receiving members are forced to adopt the second theory mentioned; and hence, to regard the church as not only the receptacle and home of regenerated people, but also the means of transforming and transferring men from nature's darkness into the marvellous light of the gospel. We may get no thanks for expressing this opinion. Many of our worthy Methodist brethren may claim that this is not exactly their theory of the church. We are aware of the fact, moreover, that some, perhaps many, of their best preachers rather discourage the idea of unconverted people joining their churches simply as seekers of religion; still we contend that said custom is only the logical outcome of the society plan which has been engrafted into their system of church work.

As proof that we have not misrepresented our brethren of that denomination, it is often the case that one meets men and women who are connected with their churches who do not profess to be converted. We are informed by the best authority that one of their most noted evangelists opened a sermon before a large audience in a North Carolina city with these words: "The worst man in this house to-night ought to join the church;" and so far as we have heard, not the least dissent was expressed by any one among the large number of intelligent members of his church who heard the remark. We are not so oblivious to facts, however, as to claim that the followers of Mr. Wesley are the only people who virtually hold to the second theory mentioned. Said theory is as firmly held by some other denominations as by our Methodist brethren.

In conclusion, we must add, with brotherly charity for all, that we can but think that the general adoption of the first theory mentioned, to the exclusion of the second, would result in a much better state of things religiously, and relieve the church of Christ of much of the reproach she is bearing on account of the inconsistencies and sins of professed members.

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK.

This will be the last issue of the Biblical Recorder for 1892. Our printers, in common with the balance of the human race, desire, and are entitled to, the Christmas holidays. The next issue will be out on January 4th, 1893, (D. V.)

We are in receipt of the "Improved Edition of the Revised New Testament of the American Bible Union," brought out by the American Baptist Publication Society, 1420 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia. The committee of revision were Alvah Hovey, D. D., John A. Broadus, D. D., and Henry G. Weston, D. D. This edition is published in two forms, one of which retains the American Bible Union translations of baptize (immerse, &c.,) the other has the anglicized form of the Greek word (baptize, &c.) Our copy is in the former.

A church that is "liberal" in its theology is never liberal in its contributions to missions.

REPORT ON BIBLICAL RECORDER.

The following is the report of the committee appointed at Goldsboro to investigate and suggest means to increase the circulation of the Biblical Recorder:

Your committee appointed last year at Goldsboro with instructions to examine and report upon the best means of increasing the circulation of the Recorder, and as to when the subscription price could be reduced without injury to the standard of the paper, respectfully report that, through the courtesy of the editor, we have had the opportunity to examine the subscription and advertising list, and the income and expenditures of the editor in publishing the paper, and in the opinion of your committee, after an examination of the books, etc., above named, and from such other information as now received, that the price of the paper, with its present amount of advertising and reading matter and circulation, the subscription cannot be reduced and give to the editor the proper return for the labor and capital invested in the enterprise. We believe that the hearty co-operation of the pastors of the churches as recommended in the report on Periodicals is the most effective means of increasing the circulation of the Recorder

J. C. Scarborough,
E. K. Proctor, Jr.,
R. D. Fleming,
Committee.

The above report was made at the late session of the Baptist State Convention in accordance with a resolution passed at the Convention which met in Goldsboro in November, 1891.

Some brethren in the State were of the opinion that no such committee was necessary. Others who were just as much interested in the success and prosperity of the Recorder favored the appointing of the committee on the ground that if nothing else was accomplished it might result at least in satisfying those of our brethren who have supposed that a paper like the Recorder could be printed for less than two dollars a year. We hope the report of this committee, which is just what we have been telling the brethren for the past sixteen years, may not only put to rest the notion that such a paper can and ought to be made cheaper, but that the facts as found by this committee may create in the brethren a more active and zealous interest for an increased circulation of the paper.

We have just a word to say in reference to the brethren whose names are at the bottom of this report: The integrity and business capacity of the men are a guarantee that an honest and faithful investigation has been made, and that the findings set out in their report are strictly in accordance with the facts. It is with peculiar satisfaction that we refer to this feature of the transaction.

We cheerfully turned over to the members of the committee all books, papers, and other evidences of credits and indebtedness in order that their work might be complete and their report satisfactory to all concerned. Our desire is, as we have often said before, to serve the denomination in the greatest and best manner possible. We would like to do it better than ever before. The Recorder has not reached that ideal which we had in our mind from the day we assumed control of the paper. We have done the best we could with the means at hand. May we not indulge the hope that our brethren—the pastors of the churches especially—will, during the incoming year, make a special effort to increase largely the circulation of the paper? Much depends upon the efforts which they put forth in this direction. If these brethren will help us to increase our list with new subscribers, and if those of our brethren who are behind—so far behind, a great many of them—will be good enough to pay up, then they will have just ground to expect even a better paper than they now get—and you shall not be disappointed.

He has accepted a call to Mount Tabor, and will preach there every third Sunday morning and Saturday before. We congratulate the Baptist congregation on their success in effecting a plan by which they can increase the number of services at the church, and the Mount Tabor people in securing Mr. Wood as their pastor. Rev. A. Cree has been called to the pastorate of the church at Jackson.—Murfreesboro Index, Dec. 9.

....After Dr. Frost had made his speech before the North Carolina Convention, representing the Sunday-school Board, Dr. A. E. Dickinson, editor of the Religious Herald, arose and addressed the Convention. He spoke about as follows: "Let me say a word if you please. Here are on this floor thirteen Baptist weekly newspapers, and every one of us are anxious to get the news which our Mission Boards and our Sunday-school Board want to put into the hands of our people, young and old. If one-tenth of the labor spent in preparing matter for the Foreign Mission Journal and the Home Field were given to supplying such matter to the Baptist weekly papers, it would be far better for the Boards and for all concerned. Why keep up these monthlies when the work could be done far better by the weeklies? I am not saying this because I happen to be connected with one of the latter, but because in my inmost soul I believe that we are making a great mistake in this matter. Think of it, brethren, and let us do what is best to be done." Dr. Dickinson is not alone in these views. Other wise brethren have expressed themselves in like manner. Some of its readers speak of Our Home Field as the Baptist "College Bulletin."—Baptist Courier. This has been our position ever since the meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention in Charleston, S. C., in 1875.

C. W. Blanchard, for Com.

The second annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Societies convened in the First Baptist church of Raleigh on Friday morning, Dec. 9, 1892.

The devotional exercises were conducted by Miss Fannie Heck, president of the Woman's Missionary Union.

Mrs. T. Henry Briggs extended the hospitalities of the city to the visiting ladies, Mrs. Battle of Durham responding in their behalf.

Mrs. J. W. Carter was called to the chair, and the meeting proceeded to the election of officers, which resulted as follows:

President—Miss Fannie E. Heck, Raleigh; First Vice-President—Mrs. Hartwell Edwards, Goldsboro; Second Vice-President, Mrs. R. T. Vann, Scotland Neck; Secretary—Miss Evabelle Simmons, Wake Forest.

The president submitted her annual report, showing progress along every line of work.

The report of Mrs. J. A. Briggs, secretary of the Central Committee, showed a total of $3,916.85 contributed by the Woman's Missionary and the Sunbeam Societies during the year.

The president stated that the secretary's reports for the past two years show an increase of one hundred per cent. over the work of previous years.

There were present representatives from twenty-six Societies, and these, with few exceptions, reported increasing interest in missions, and all expressed a determination to "go forward" with greater zeal and earnestness during the coming year.

The meeting was characterized by a spirit of earnestness and consecration, and those present seemed to feel that they were more than rewarded for the sacrifices they made in the reflex influence on their own spiritual life.

The meeting reassembled at 10:30 o'clock Saturday morning.

After devotional exercises conducted by Mrs. Roddick of Winston and Mrs. Hartwell Edwards, Rev. W. D. Powell of Mexico delivered an interesting address. He emphasized the importance of woman's work as one of the principal factors in the consummation of the great work of evangelizing the world, and dwelt upon the necessity of organization in accomplishing this end. He wished to offer a word of cheer for the grand work which had been undertaken and carried forward in the face of discouragement and opposition. A century plant, which formed a part of the floral decorations of the church, afforded him an opportunity of describing something of the Mexican mode of life, this one plant being applied to forty-seven different uses, as food, clothing, shelter, etc.

In closing, an earnest appeal was made to the women to assist in raising North Carolina's quota of the Centennial Fund.

The recommendations of the Woman's Missionary Union concerning the Centennial movement were read and adopted.

Mrs. Hartwell Edwards read an essay on "Prayer in and for the Society." The importance and efficacy of prayer were emphasized. Our meetings were intended for the dissemination of missionary information, for the collection of contributions, but primarily for prayer for missions and missionaries. She urged the duty of daily prayer for the missionaries, the Boards, and the Societies, and requested special prayer for Miss Anna Hartwell who had recently sailed for Canton.

An essay on the "Christmas Offering" was read by Miss Riggsbee of Durham. [This essay appears in full on the fifth page of this paper.]

The president called attention to the envelopes for the Christmas offering, and asked that the Baptist women of North Carolina send one missionary to Japan.

The meeting was then addressed by Dr. Frost of Nashville, representing the Sunday-school Board—his subject, "Missions in the Sunday-school." He believed that the most promising field of mission work was the Sunday school. He considered the missionary enterprise the biggest, grandest thought of the ages. To be a christian was to be a missionary. The young mind grasped this thought more enthusiastically and was more easily imbued with the spirit of missions. The Sunday-schools were to furnish the future church members, preachers, and missionaries.

The President explained the constitution of the Sunday-school Missionary Society, and asked that it be given a careful consideration.

The meeting was adjourned with prayer by Mrs. Winston.

An informal meeting of the Societie's was held in the Infant Class Room of the First Baptist church, at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon. Meeting old acquaintances, forming new ones, and discussing, in an informal way, matters pertaining to the work rendered the occasion both pleasant and profitable.

On Sunday afternoon, a general mass meeting was held in the First Baptist church. Addresses were delivered by Dr. H. A. Tupper, of the Foreign Mission Board; Rev. J. S. Dill, representing the Home Mission Board; Rev. W. B. Bagby of Brazil, and Dr. F. M. Ellis of Baltimore.

Perhaps the most inspiring meeting of all was that held on Monday morning. Hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds," was sung. The devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Martin of Lumberton and Mrs. Henry Briggs of Raleigh.

The President urged the sending of boxes of clothing to the frontier missionaries. A graphic description was given of the homes of some of their missionaries, their hardships and privations, their heroism and self-sacrifice.

"How to Make a Mission Band Interesting" was discussed by Mrs. Roddick. Special stress was laid upon the value of music and the necessity of varying the programs as much as possible. A study of the lives of the missionaries, the countries in which they live, and the manners and customs of the people was recommended. Blackboard analysis and short missionary stories were advised, as aids in securing the attention of the uninterested and inattentive.

Mrs. Chas. E. Taylor of Wake Forest read an essay on "How to make a Missionary Society Interesting." On motion of Mrs. Henry Briggs, it was decided that this admirable paper should be published in tract form and sent to every Woman's Missionary Society in the State, Mrs. Harrell of Weldon kindly offering to defray the expense of publication.

The question box was next opened, the questions having been sent in at a previous meeting. Among those discussed were the following: "Is it proper for ladies to lead in prayer (in ladies' meetings?)" "How shall we interest ladies in missions?" "How shall we secure attendance in a young Society, uninformed and uninterested?" "How shall we prevail on our members to lead in prayer?" "Is it right to raise money by lawn parties, ect.?" "How shall we overcome prejudice against working with the Central Committee?" (The answers given to these questions will be reported in the minutes of the meeting.)

Dr. Ellis then resumed the discourse which the lateness of the hour had prevented his finishing Sunday afternoon. It is impossible, in a brief outline, to do justice to his address. The following is a resume of the leading thought: The Jordan winds its way to the Dead Sea, a world-renowned but useless stream. The Merrimac, apparently insignificant, is yet of vast importance to manufacturing interests. Such are human lives. The primary object of human life is not to be happy but useful. The royal word of life is duty. One of the marvels of mission work is God's distinguishing blessing upon the work of christian women. While we discuss what women are doing for missions, we may well consider what missions are doing for women, in developing the highest type of womanhood. Two-thirds of the membership of our Baptist churches are women. It is not right that this great work should devolve entirely upon the other third. The church is beginning to realize the importance of woman's work, and the obstacles and opposition against which she has so long been working are gradually being removed.

The first missionary society was composed of women in Galilee, who "ministered" to our Lord. Women first announced his resurrection and first received the commission to "Go and tell." It is nonsense to speak of woman's usurping man's work. She does not want it. She has sufficient responsibility devolving upon her in the performance of her own God-given duties. The condition of woman in heathen lands is an irresistible appeal to christian women.

There are 100,000,000 women in India, in a state of almost brutal degradation. Of these 16,500,000 are widows, of whom 100,000 are under twelve years of age. Yet, in this country, $7,000,000 are spent for kid gloves and $5,000,000 for Foreign Missions. In the light of these facts, the question of dress—extravagant dress—becomes a matter for serious consideration. The heroism and consecration of female missionaries should inspire others to emulate their spirit. Ann H. Judson unlocked the kingdom of Assam by translating the Scriptures into that language. Adelia Fisk, in Persia; Florence Nightingale, in the Crimean War; and Mary Lyon, founder of Mt. Holyoke Seminary, are familiar instances of female heroism. Those who become thorough imbued with the spirit of missions are more consistent in their home life and more earnest workers in their own community.

In conclusion, he offered special prayer for woman's work in North Carolina.

Mrs. C. E. Taylor delivered a message from Mrs. Duggan, expressing regret at her inability to be present.

A letter was read from Miss Lottie Moon, requesting that one missionary be sent out from this meeting, to assist Miss Fannie Knight.

A season of silent prayer was followed by several sentence prayers.

Mrs. J. W. Carter thought that the meeting should not close without some practical expression of the determination to make larger sacrifices during this Centennial Year. The scene that followed cannot be described. Gifts cherished for the sake of dear departed ones and gifts of self-denial were made, amounting to $532.00.

After singing "More love to Thee," the meeting adjourned, to meet in Elizabeth City, during the session of the Baptist State Convention, in December, 1893.

EVABELLE SIMMONS.

Dr. MacArthur's Remarks.

Several brethren—among them Bro. J. L. Carroll of Chapell Hill—seem disposed to criticise Dr. MacArthur of New York for saying on thanksgiving day, "This painful lack of decoration is due to the election of Mr. Cleveland."

Some of our good people appear always ready to "fire at the Yankees," and usually they fancy they have some cause. But unless I greatly mistook the meaning of that thanksgiving episode, the recent peppering at MacArthur is the result of ignorance. One of the New York dailies reported MacArthur as making the remark attributed to him. It seems that there was something of a sensation. But the Doctor went on to explain that one of Mr. Harrison's admirers had promised to pay for the decorations in case his favorite was elected; Mr. Cleveland won, but no Democrat had stepped forward to pay for decorations, so there was a "painful lack due to the election of Mr. Cleveland." This, however, is a very different matter from that indicated in Dr. Carroll's note. Let us not be too righteous.

Treas. Bap. State Convention.

Raleigh, Dec 19, 1892.

Comprehensive and Complete.

The Senior Quarterly, edited by Dr. A. J. Rowland, and published by the American Baptist Publication Society, is in every way worthy of editor and publisher—clear, comprehensive, complete, giving the rich results of the highest learning without the laborious process. It should be in the hands of all our older Baptist scholars. It is furnished at six cents per copy.

The Convention Series.

We have received specimen copies of our Convention Series, and are pleased with them. They meet the wants of the several grades of classes in our Sunday-schools, and are excellent in themselves, and cheap in price. Dr. W. R. L. Smith expounds the lesson admirably in the Advanced Quarterly, making it an admirable help for advanced scholars and teachers. The Convention Teacher is superb, and the best scholars expound the lessons in it, and the best writers contribute to it. In fact all the publications of the Sunday-school Board are just what our Sunday-schools need. Send orders with cash to the Sunday-school Board, Nashville, Tenn.

Letter from Bro. Britton in China.

Dear Recorder.—Perhaps your readers would like to have an account of some experiences which we have had since returning to our work here about the first of September, as they have been somewhat new to us and encouraging. On Sunday, October 2d, three persons came to this place from Quinsan to be baptized. This is the second time I have had the privilege of baptizing since coming to China. In the summer of '91 I baptized a lady, who seems to be a faithful member among us. Of these whom I baptized this fall, one was a daughter and another was a son of members of the church, and the other was a gentleman from outside whom one of the brethren had led to Christ while they worked together as tailors. Thus we see that the Lord is still blessing the labors of Dr. Yates who was God's agent in establishing that church, and of the native pastor who worked there several years, both of whom are now gone to their reward. The advancement of our cause in that city reminds us forcibly of the Scripture, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." They are supplied with preaching only once a month from Shanghai and Soochow, and I think only three of the members can read and only one of the three lives there.

About the middle of last month we had a three days meeting of our mission, composed of Mrs. Yates, the Bryans, the Tatums, and ourselves. There had been only one short meeting of that kind in our mission for many years. It was held this time at the home of the Tatums, who are always only too kind in caring for their friends when in Shanghai. We talked over a great many things pertaining to our work, and it was especially gratifying and helpful to Mrs. Britton and myself, since we so seldom have the opportunity of consulting the other members of our mission on questions that arise for decision. Among many things upon which we were all agreed, there are two to which I wish to call special attention. All were decidedly of the opinion that the next missionaries who are sent to Central China ought to be a family to join us at Soochow. We have been pleading three years for co laborers to unite with us in trying to preach the pure gospel to the hundreds of thousands in this city and the country around, and not a word do we hear of any one to come. Our plea is still before you, brethren, reinforced now by at least all the members of our mission, and we pray and hope and wait. What will you do?

It was also decided that we would ask the Board to send us two young men to open up Woosih. This is the city on the grand canal, thirty miles from Soochow, for which I asked our people at home to send laborers about two years ago. Since that time the Presbyterians and Methodists have entered it. And it is exceedingly desirable that we have workers to settle there, and work in that and the next large city on the canal, thirty miles away, together with the large number of towns and villages around.

We are encouraged in our usual work of study, daily preaching, etc. Last Monday I engaged in selling books and preaching outside one of the city gates, where is an immense suburb of many thousand people, in which there is not a single regular preaching place as I know of. The same day a man from that section came to our chapel and heard preaching. When the preacher received the people in his study for conversation, this man asked him if he could not come to his part of the city and preach, as they had no chapel there. He seemed anxious for his aged parents at home to hear the gospel. Our native preacher went to see him this afternoon, and we hope that it may be an opening given us by the Lord to begin some special work in that very destitute region.

After preaching in the chapel to-day, a poor man asked me if a man who had no money could become a christian. You must know it was a joy to me to tell him that the Lord makes no difference between the rich and poor, and that salvation is without money and without price.

There were two European steamers wrecked on the coast of China in a typhoon on Oct. 10th. And the kindness of the natives, from the poor fishermen on the coast up to the officials, shown to the few persons who escaped, was quite phenomenal. They waded deep into the water to save those who were almost dead, cared for the wounded, gave them clothes and food, and offered to give up their only beds to them. One official, after taking care of several Englishmen for sometime in a most hospitable manner, gave two hundred dollars and seven tons of coal to help them get home, and absolutely refused to receive any pay for it. It is remarkable how kind the Chinese often are.

With christian greetings to all the brethren and sisters, Fraternally,

T. C. BRITTON.

If you would like to purchase a good house and farm, well located, and in all respects desirable, don't fail to read the notice in this paper of the sale of the well known property of the late Geo. W. Thompson, situated in Wake Forest township, Wake county. This property is very desirable because of its healthy location and its accessibility to Wake Forest. A well of excellent water is near the residence. An opportunity to secure such a desirable piece of property, is not offered every day. It [illegible] many years may elapse before you will [illegible] such another chance as this to secure a home. Remember the sale takes [illegible] January 2d, 1893.

Letter from the Seminary at Louisville.

Editor Recorder:—Since I wrote last we have had another interesting meeting of our Missionary Society. I doubt if we can appreciate fully the benefit to be derived from these monthly meetings until we leave here. We learn more from them than we at the time suppose. Besides the facts learned about missions, we come to have a greatly increased interest in this important subject, as the direct result of this Society.

If the missionaries who have at one time been members of this Society were asked for their experience, I believe many of them would say that they received impressions here which very much helped them to a decision of the question. Indeed I doubt if the number of those who received their first convictions of duty from this Society would be very small. I remember hearing a brother who is now one of the most prominent pastors in the western part of the State say that when he was a student at the Seminary, he would almost decide every "Missionary Day" that he must go to the foreign field. This is only one instance out of what I believe to be many of a similar character, and goes to show something of the benefits gained from connection with our Missionary Society. Of course, all the students who come here will not go to a foreign field, and they ought not to go, as I think. But this much is true that no student who attends this Seminary and puts himself in a right attitude towards the Missionary Society, whether he goes to a foreign field or not, can go out from here without carrying with him an increased enthusiasm for missions that will be lasting and that will have its influence on his preaching ever afterwards.

At our last meeting, the special subject was the work among the Telugus in India. The speaker appointed was Bro. John Newcomb, who has been for several years laboring among the Telugus under the direction of the Missionary Union. He is here with his wife in attendance upon the Seminary. He briefly reviewed the work of Baptists among the people from its commencement and showed how signally God had blessed the efforts of the missionaries who have labored there. The work was at first very unpromising, so much so that the question was raised as to whether it had not best be abandoned. It was mainly through the influence of one great man, who had great faith in God, and whose name is inseparably connected with the success of this mission, that it was not given up. The result has fully shown the wisdom of the course pursued, and is an unmistakable evidence that God was in it all and directing all. Bro. Newcomb's account of the vast numbers turning to the Lord and being baptized the same day, sounded very much like a re-enacting of the scene on the day of Pentecost.

After speaking to us in the morning, by special request of the "Missionary Band," Bro. Newcomb gave an illustrated lecture that evening, showing us places that he himself had seen. At the close of the lecture, Mrs. Newcomb sang in the Telugu language the song "Jesus loves me, yes, I know," &c., with which all are more or less familiar. It was very much enjoyed.

Bro. Newcomb had with him a large bundle of walking canes which he brought from India. They were from the genuine coffee tree. He offered them to the students for a few cents apiece, and it need scarcely be added that they were not long in being disposed of.

A word of explanation as to the "Missionary Band" to which incidental reference was made above, may not be out of place just here. This is in no sense meant to take the place of our regular monthly Missionary Society. It was originally composed of only those who had decided to go to a foreign field. The constitution as it then was admitted to membership only those who had decided the question. But some time last year, it was decided, and I think wisely, to strike out this restriction and admit as members any who were interested in the great subject of missions and desired to learn more about it. This Band meets for an hour on Monday night of each week, at which a paper is read by some one [illegible] number on a subject which has been assigned. After this, any member is free to ask the brother reading the paper any question pertaining to the subject under discussion he may like to have answered.

The work of the various Baptist churches here, so far as I know, is moving on well. Two very important ones of them are, however, still without a regular pastor. Broadway, which was made vacant by the removal of Dr. H. A. Tupper, Jr., to Baltimore, and Twenty second and Walnut Street church, whose pastor, Bro. J. G. Bow, resigned a few months ago. The latter is supplied temporarily by one of the Seminary students. It is one of the most important fields in the city and offers a wide field for usefulness.

Prof. Robertson left a few days ago in response to a telegram summoning him to the bedside of his mother. He will attend the Convention in Raleigh if his mother's condition is such as to allow it. The Baptists of North Carolina and Wake Forest College have, in the person of Prof. A. T. Robertson, a representative in the Faculty of the Seminary, of whom they have just reason to be proud. He is thorough and scholarly in his work, and, so far as I know, is giving entire satisfaction. He is Professor of Biblical Introduction, and Assistant in Greek and New Testament English.

The scheme of intermediate examinations has already been posted. These interesting special interviews of professors with students usually continue through January for the Intermediate, and through May for the final. During these months, besides getting ready for the interviews referred to, we have the special privilege of carrying on our regular work. If anybody is disposed to doubt this does not mean sure enough hard work, he need but try it to be convinced of the contrary. And, while I am reminded that the great Baptist host of North Carolina are assembled, in the persons of their representatives, in the capital city of the State, to consider the interests of the denomination in the State and to devise measures for the further spread of the gospel in their own and in other lands. There are about seventeen of us here who would be delighted to be present; we envy the Wake Forest boys their privilege in this respect. We anxiously await the report of the proceedings in the RECORDER. Very truly, J. I. K.

Pure, Fresh and Attractive.

In the Intermediate Quarterly for 1893, which has been greatly enlarged, Mrs. M. G. Kennedy furnishes the exposition of the Sunday-school lessons of the quarter, in her pure, fresh and attractive style, which is sure to win the attention of its class of readers. Much information, historical and other, connected with the subjects of the several lessons are interwoven in addition to the exposition, analysis, questions, etc. Each lesson has an illustrative engraving. This Quarterly has attained such popularity that it has already reached a circulation of nearly a quarter of a million copies per quarter.

Gather the Fragments.

Be careful with time. Time is money, and more than that. It is the stuff that eternity is made of. Be, therefore, misers of minutes. We talk of "off hours" and "spare moments," but we have none to spare. True, we need recreation, relief from the daily pressure of care. Sleep cannot be safely shortened. Rest is a necessity, not a luxury. Overwork is a sin against the body. We owe it to ourselves to keep the body in its best physical condition. We are gathering up the fragments in so doing. But the point to be remembered is the value and significance of all our hours as related to the aim of life. This understood, we shall be frugal of our scanty and lessening store.

Fragments of time saved will rapidly accumulate wealth—material and spiritual. Kind words and deeds that take but a moment of time may be like fruitful seeds, the harvestings of which may be rich in this life and in the life to come.

Oh, the joy of memory that comes from using up fragments of time. They enrich alike the life of him who serves and that of him he serves. What we need is a strong purpose followed out by regular and persevering effort day by day.—The Sunlight.

The S. C. Baptist Convention.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—The South Carolina Baptist Convention has closed and the delegates have returned to their homes, full of purpose to make the next year more fruitful in consecrated work than the year whose results have been recorded.

The entire session from its opening to its closing was uplifting, both on account of the presence of the Holy Ghost, and high order of speeches delivered by brethren who took part in the discussions. Dr. W. D. Powell, the model missionary, was with us and succeeded in accomplishing the end for which he came. He speaks like one who had been storing up missionary zeal for a hundred years.

Dr. Whitsitt came to our feast and passed around the ripest and sweetest fruits of the season. I am here reminded that the North Carolina Convention meets in Raleigh on the 8th, when the brethren of our sister State will take their survey of the past year and encourage each other for the grander work of the next. The desire to be with you and to look once more into the faces of those with whom I counseled and labored still remains. As you shall meet them in your sanctum, extend my fraternal greetings to them.

But this is a business letter, so give me your ears. A large number of papers are coming into my study and newspaper reading is becoming a dissipation. I am sometimes at a loss to know where my information was gathered. It is a settled question, that some of this multitude must stop their visits. The BIBLICAL RECORDER is not in that number. Fraternally,

J. A. MUNDY.

The Faith Delivered to the Saints.

"Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

Thus wrote Jude, in the third verse of his epistle, about the year 66 A. D.

He speaks of the faith "delivered to the saints," not that delivered to the W. C. T. U., nor that to the Y. M. C. A., nor that, even, to the B. Y. P. U., nor to any other society or combination which has any number of letters as initials of the alphabetic name which it may bear. Christians in our churches unite with members of other churches and go vigorously to work in the new combination—then complain that their church is doing nothing.

Let us go back to the old paths.

Let us go back to the old book.

Let us have the old gospel preached.

Let us try condensation instead of rarefaction.

Let us work toward the centre, instead of flying off at a tangent.

Let us pray for the early coming of our Lord. Oh! may he come before our churches become simply names and bands of non-workers. SMITH.

Teach Girls Business Habits.

Under this head the Philadelphia Times gives some very good advice, which we hope will be read and followed by all those persons who have the care of young people in their homes.

Whether a woman is poor or rich, it behooves her to acquire methodical business habits, keeping her little accounts accurately, and knowing to a cent just what she does with her money. An allowance is the first step toward this end, if at the same time it is impressed upon her that every sum spent should be set down with unfailing regularity.

In black and white, one notes how much more easily the money can be spent, how quickly it goes, and just what foolish little nothings have lured it from our pockets. Without setting down each item, it is ten chances to one that you will conclude you must have lost some money when you cannot see how that ten dollar bill went, when you only bought such a very few things.

The neat little figures are a genuine restraint, beside instilling a habit and system that will be of great value if ever fortune smiles and a great estate comes to your hands, and still greater if economy is a necessity, and the dollar has to be forced into doing duty for two.

Unless the accounts are kept accurately and the cash made to balance every evening, you had better not attempt any bookkeeping at all, for slipshod methods are worse than none, and only confuse everything rather than help matters.

If anything is worth doing at all, it is worth doing well; and there is nothing so productive of future good as the habit of looking carefully out for the pennies when school-days are the only trials, and the allowance of fifty cents a week goes for candies and pickles. If this plan is once established in childhood, the girl will grow to womanhood with a clear knowledge of where her money goes and what she has to show for it.—Exchange.

Too Game to be Healthy.

"The weapons of our warfare are not carnal." Some christians are too game to be healthy. They are never satisfied but when in the cock-pit of theological contention. They wear gaffs so constantly that they get chafed, and finally become nothing more or less, than high-pressure religious cripples. It is better to suffer a hundred wrongs than to offer one; better to be a useful, quiet, inoffensive chicken, than a thorough-bred English game, with steel spurs, growing to hoarseness, in quest of something to fight. To "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints," is simply to speak the truth in love.—Rev. St. Clair Lawrence, in Texas Baptist.

Some Thoughts for Young Christians.

1. Do not consider the christian life completed now, but only begun.
2. Do not depend upon your emotions for evidence of your piety.
3. Do not expect your experience to be just like that of some one else.
4. Do not expect the fulfillment of all the promises at once; "Patient continuance in well doing" is a necessary virtue, and will find its reward.
5. Do not expect to be a successful christian without observing the injunction, "Watch and pray."
6. Do not expect to be really happy unless you are diligent in the master's vineyard.
7. Do not accept any standard as worthy of imitation, save that of Jesus Christ.
8. Do not be a periodical christian; your privilege, as well as your duty, is to be "always abounding in the work of the Lord."
9. Do not fail also to incite others to diligence in the Master's work; the King's business requires haste. "Do with thy might what thy hands find to do," etc.
10. Be not discouraged, although you are deficient in all these things; the province of the christian is to overcome.—Rev. S. H. Potter.

Everybody knows that the conditions for health are not favorable when the stomach, liver, and bowels are disordered. In such cases, headache, indigestion, and constipation are the result; for all which ailments the proper remedy is Ayer's Cathartic Pills.

Staying Where we are Happy.

Much of the world's disquietude comes from the fact that it will not take the advice of my English friend of many years ago. Queen Mary was fondled and caressed in France. Courts bowed down and worshipped her beauty. But she went to Scotland, and Elizabeth cut the poor thing's head off. Why did she not stay where she was happy? Walter Scott had a good home in Castle street, Edinburgh; no debts to pay, all the world bringing offerings to his genius. But he went up to Abbotsford; must have a roof like Melrose Abbey, and the grounds extensive as a king's park. He sank his fortune and roused up a pack of angry creditors, each one with his teeth at his throat. How much better for his peace if he had continued in the plain home. Why did he not stay where he was happy? Maximilian had the confidence of Austria, and the richest of all earth's treasures—the love of a good woman's heart. He gathered up all that he had and went to Mexico. A nation of assassins plotted for his life. He fell riddled with a crash of musketry, and his wife, Charlotta, goes back a maniac. They had enough before they went. They wanted more. One dead! The other crazy! Oh, that they had been wise enough to stay where they were happy.—Dr. Talmage, in Ladies' Home Journal.

Why throw away your money for every new cough syrup, when you can buy that standard remedy, Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup?

It would be idle to expect others to look up a position for one who makes no attempt to look himself; for in this as in many other departments of life, it is the diligent seeker that secures the reward.—Selected.

Preventing Good.

It is said of Lord Elgin that he "prevented more good than he ever did." There are christians that prevent good. Critical christians prevent good. Inconsistent christians prevent good. The best way not to hinder good is to do good. Take hold and help. Do the next thing. "Why stand ye here all the day idle?"

Canon Wilberforce says that a christian's duty is to admit, submit, commit and transmit. You admit the truth of Christ, you submit your will to Christ, you commit your soul to Christ, but what do you transmit to others? Begin now to do some personal work for Christ and souls. The Lord is watching to see you work. "Let every hearer become a herald."—New York Evangelist.

The Christmas Offering.

READ BEFORE THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE W. M. S. ON DECEMBER 10.

What a great object we have before us. It is two-fold in its greatness. First, it is a work for Christ; and secondly, it involves love and duty.

The Christmas Offering carries with it many beautiful and inspiring thoughts. The chief one, to my mind, is that God, our Heavenly Father, gave to this sinful world on Christmas day Jesus Christ, his only and well beloved Son. Then, Jesus was a gift—a Christmas gift, or offering, to us. This being true, there is presented to us the sublime and lovely thought of presenting an offering on Christmas day to God for the gift of his Son. Of course, whatever may be given is very small indeed compared with the gift of eternal life, which comes with and through our Saviour Jesus Christ.

In what better way can we give to God than by saving souls for him? It is just this work we do when we give our time and money to the sending forth of missionaries. This is a work, and such a pleasant one that every Woman's Missionary Society should be interested in it. And, my friends, the way to get the Society interested is to get every individual of that Society aroused and ready for the work.

This offering should be a sweet pleasure to each one of us. After having received bountifully from the Lord during the whole year, what a precious privilege it should be to us to give to Christ a gift. If you will visit some pleasant home a few weeks before Christmas you will find nearly every member of that household busily preparing gifts for the family and other friends. We find it a pleasure to give to our earthly friends. Why not deem it a pleasure to give to Christ, our heavenly friend? He has said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." As we anticipate the approach of Christmas there are many bright and tender thoughts that come to our minds. And it will do us good if we will think of that connection between the earthly gifts which give our friends pleasure and God's great Christmas gift the source of endless joy to the world.

This Christmas offering is womans part in sending forth the one hundred missionaries in this our Centennial year. We have a right to be encouraged in this work. At first the offering was small—so were we. You will find that each Society that has given to the Christmas offering has had an increasing interest in missions, and every heart engaged in that work has been greatly benefitted. This is our opportunity. Remember, an opportunity is a responsibility. Let not the golden moments of doing good slip by. At the happy Christmas tide bring thy offering to the Lord. It may not be much, but then it is something for Christ. For four years our offering has been for North China Missions, and much good has been accomplished in that heathen country. This year the Foreign Missionary Board has suggested Japan as the field to which we shall send our Christmas gift.

Japan is our "baby mission," and does it not seem just and right that we should in this way aid our youngest and weakest mission? Picture to yourself our noble band of four in the midst of nine million souls, asking and praying that we should send them seven missionaries to help them in the great work of saving souls. Let their pleadings and prayers be not in vain. But let us be up and doing, with a strong determination by God's help to send forth the seven, even more, to help in this island of the sea. Men are perishing, souls are dying, and shall we not reach out our hands and save them? By all means we will gladly help in this work. It is necessary that we hasten with our help to Japan. Wait not, a delay would be dangerous. Let every representative and visitor here go home with her heart full of this work. Let her tell others of it, and there will be a greater offering this year than ever before. The amount given will be in proportion to the effort made. May each of us on Sunday, Christmas day, be enabled to say,

An offering now, O Lord, we bring
To thee our Saviour and our King,
Accept the gift in love we give,
And help us e'er for thee to live.

If there ever was a more energetic, restless, tireless and "fetching" worker for success than the celebrated Ludden & Bates Southern Music House, history has forgotten who it was. For twenty-two years L. & B. has been yearly coming to the front with some attractive special offer—always new, and always satisfactory to its thousands of customers. This time it is an offer to present an elegant brass extension Piano Lamp to every customer who buys a Piano up to January 15, 1893. This very useful and exceedingly ornamental present retails at about fifteen dollars, and as Ludden & Bates Southern Music House is know to be a strictly one-price house, the buyer is actually getting a discount of the value of the lamp. As the offer is strictly limited to January 15, 1893, all interested should write at once, addressing either the music house at Savannah, Ga., or any of its many agencies.

Week-Day Work for the Sunday-school Teacher. By J. J. Hall, D. D. With an Introduction by N. B. Broughton. Price per copy, 10 cents, or $1.00 per dozen.

This is a choice booklet for every Sunday-school teacher. A suitable but inexpensive gift from pastor or superintendent to the teacher. Send orders to the Baptist Supply Store, Raleigh, N. C.

The Homiletic Review for December will prove helpful and interesting to ministers. All of the departments of the magazine are well filled. Subscription one year $3.00; to clergymen $2.50. Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York.

A notable feature of Outing for December is a description of "Canadian Winter Pastimes," by Ed. W. Sandys, who draws a pleasant picture of winter fun and frolic among our hardy northern cousins. The magazine is beautifully illustrated and contains a number of very interesting sketches. The Outing Magazine Co., New York.

The North American Review for December, contains a paper by T. D. Crothers, M. D., on the question, "Is Alcoholism Increasing among American Women?" He takes the view that it is not, but he graphically depicts the evils of drink indulgence. Mr. E. L. Godkin, contributs to this number an account of quarantine methods in the port of New York, under the title of "A Month of Quarantine."

The Treasury of Religious Thought for December closes the year richly freighted with good things. Its full Sermons, Timely Service Sermons and in Leading Thoughts are excellent, and admirably adapted to aid the host of readers of this magazine. Yearly subscription, $2.50. Clergymen $2.00. Single copies, 25 cents. E. B. Treat, Publisher, 5 Cooper Union, New York.

The January St. Nicholas will contain the opening paper in a series that magazine is to print on leading American cities, illustrated. In this article Colonel T. W. Higginson describes Boston in a way to interest boys and girls in the literary history of that city. For future numbers of St. Nicholas, Dr. Lyman Abbott will write of Brooklyn, Edmund Clarence Stedman will describe New York, and other famous residents of the different cities will describe them.

The first of the unpublished material by Henry Ward Beecher, recently purchased by The Ladies' Home Journal, will appear in the January issue of that magazine, and presents, among other things, the great preacher's hitherto unprinted opinion on "Wine Drinking on New Year's Day." Two famous preachers have written striking articles soon to be printed, one by Rev. Morgan Dix, D. D., on "Are Society Women Insincere?" and the other by Rev. John R. Paxton, D. D., on "Are Women More Religious than Men?"

The Christmas number of the New York Ledger is a thing of beauty. The number contains a choice selection of bright and seasonable Christmas stories and poems; an eloquent sketch of "Columbus and His Great Adventures," by S. P. Cadman, and readable departments for women and children. Maurice Thompson, Miss Minnie Hauk, Hon. T. D. English, Mrs. N. S. Stowell, Isabella Castelar, Mrs. Southworth and Helen Marshall North are among the contributors. The issue contains twenty-four pages and several fine illustrations.

Death of John Thomas Turner.

John Thomas Turner was born March 23rd, 1858, and departed this life October 4th, 1892, at 15 minutes past 11 o'clock a. m., aged thirty-four years, five months and eleven days. He spent his life in Salem and vicinity. He was naturally industrious and manifested considerable mechanical skill. He was polite, accommodating and popular among his fellow-workmen. He had many friends who delighted to share his company during the early years of his life. Possessed of a retentive memory and fine conversational powers, he was capable of interesting and entertaining all who came in contact with him. Unfortunately, several years ago, he became a victim to a habit which brought trouble to himself and those who loved him. None saw it more clearly than he saw it in the last months of his life. None wished more ardently than he that he could begin life over again, that he might avoid the mistakes he had made. Very sorrowfully he looked back on the past and asked the Lord to forgive. He was several times impressed on the subject of his soul's salvation. He honored true religion and had great respect for the house of the Lord and the worship of the sanctuary. On several occasions he talked freely with the writer of this about religion. Once [illegible] for the purpose of receiving [illegible]. Once a few weeks ago we prayed together he was greatly affected and wished to be remembered by the Lord's people in prayer. Once when I addressed a letter to him concerning his salvation, he came to see me and thanked me for my interest in him. He said he was not afraid of death. He thought the Lord was very gracious and tender. Often he would say that the Lord knew how weak he was, how he had been borne down by unfavorable circumstances, and he hoped he would make allowance for him. As his disease advanced and he became more nervous and irritable, he would say things for which he would seem sorry afterwards. His illness was a lingering and painful one, which gave him time for much meditation. He prayed a great deal. He felt that in some mysterious way the prayers of his dear father were coming up before God in his behalf. He spoke of this again and again with confidence and seeming joy. As he drew nearer to the end, his manner changed. He spoke with hopefulness of the future. He became patient and kind. With his arms about his mother's neck and with words that were full of affection, he seemed to have lost sight of all that had been painful and distressing in the past. His childhood love came back once more and he kissed her as in the "long ago" when his heart was young and tender. Let us hope that the Lord in his infinite mercy was gracious to him at the last, giving him repentance and faith in answer to the many prayers that had been offered in his behalf, and that now he rests with "loved ones" on the other shore.

"We see but dimly through the mists and vapors,
Amid these earthly damps,
What seem to us but sad, funereal tapers,
May be heaven's distant lamps."

If you look at a dozen common lamp-chimneys, and then at Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass," you will see the differences—all but one—they break from heat; these don't; you can't see that.

Common glass is misty, milky, dusty; you can't see through it; Macbeth's is clear.

Tough, clear glass is worth fine work; and a perfect chimney of fine tough glass is worth a hundred such as you hear, pop, clash on the least provocation.

DIED.

CLEMENTS—Died at his residence near Holly Springs, December 1st, 1892, Mr. A. K. Clements, in his eighty-third year. He was a member of Salem Baptist church, and was a staunch believer in the faith. COM.

SCAFF—At her home in Moyock, N. C., Oct. 10th, 1892, Miss Mary E. Scaff, aged nineteen years. She was a member of Shady Grove Baptist church, and leaves a blessed assurance that she is at rest. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

ELLER—I. L. Eller died of typhoid fever, Dec. 3d, 1892, being forty-five years and three days of age. He was a good husband. He made a profession of religion a few days before his death, and seemed to die in happiness. The remains were buried at the Baptist church at Tusquitta, Sunday, Dec. 5th. Rev. W. G. Blackwell attended the funeral in the absence of the writer. May God bless the sorrowing ones.

H. C. STANDRIDGE.

HOWARD—In Manchester, Va., about five o'clock, Saturday morning, Dec. 10, 1892, Frank Howard, son of B. D. and Fanny W. Howard, departed this life in the 24th year of his age. He held a position on the R. & D. R. R., and was in the car yard making up a train for the south-bound trip, when, so far as can be conjectured, his foot slipped, causing him to fall between the wheels. When found, his body was cut in twain. The remains were brought to his home in Granville county, and interred in the presence of a vast concourse of people in the cemetery at Mt. Zion church where his family have long been useful and honored members. The sad intelligence of Frank's death reached his father while attending the Convention in Raleigh. The tender expressions of sympathy on the part of the Convention were touching and beautiful. The young man made a profession of faith in Mr. Fife's meeting in Oxford just one year ago. C. A. JENKENS.

PUGH—Died in Morrisville, on Nov. 30th, 1892, J. M. Pugh, aged sixty-five years. Mr. Pugh moved to this place soon after the close of the late war. He has been a successful merchant and a prominent citizen of this village. While he was not a member of any church, for several years he claimed a hope in Christ. The writer has had many talks with him on the subject of religion, for he was at any and all times ready and free to speak upon this subject. Not many days ago he told me he expected soon to be in a better world than this; and now as we write this we believe that he is resting "where there shall be no more death."

Mr. Pugh leaves a wife and seven children to mourn their loss. We cannot but hope that the heartfelt sympathy of many friends will not be deemed intrusion on their grief. It has well been said that "we weep for the loved and lost because we know that our tears are in vain." We would ease their sorrow but we know not how. We can only acknowledge that the affliction is God's, commending them to him who doeth all things well.

J. R. MAYNARD.

BOYCE—Died at the residence of her husband, Mr. Henry T. Boyce, on October 28th, 1892, sister Martha A. Boyce, in the sixty-sixth year of her age. Her funeral was preached at her home by Rev. Wm Grant of the M. E. Church, of which her husband is a member, it not being convenient to get a Baptist preacher at the time. Her remains were placed in the family burying ground beside several of her children who had preceded her to the better land. She was a consistent member of the church at Potecasi for many years. When Roanoke was organized very near her home she became one of its most devoted and useful members, ever ready with her means to help in all of the benevolent objects of her church.

She was also a faithful worker for the BIBLICAL RECORDER. After taking and reading it herself she would send it to some friend who could or would not take it. She said she thought every Baptist should read the RECORDER.

Our church has sustained a great loss, and not only the church, but the whole community, for surely she was one of the best of women. She leaves a bereaved husband, three sons and two daughters to mourn their loss. God bless them all, and may we all meet her in heaven.

Written by request of Roanoke church.

MARY A. HOLOMAN,
ROBT. W. FLEETWOOD.

ROGERS—William Cooper Rogers, in his eighty-first year, died at his home in Moore county, N. C., Nov. 25th, 1892. His wife, Jemima Rogers, preceded him to her reward about two years ago. He had been a faithful member of the Missionary Baptist church from early manhood, and sustained the reputation of being an honest, upright, consecrated christian to the end of life. For some time before his death, he often expressed a desire to go home if it was the Lord's will. He said nothing could induce him to want to stay here but to do good. He made religion his chief concern through life. For five years his consecration to the service of God caused him to attend his church regularly a distance of twenty-two miles; in fact, his seat at church was never vacant unless he was providentially prevented from being there. He was one of the originators of Crain's Creek church, for whose success he labored so ardently, and into whose fellowship he lived to see received from first to last about two hundred persons. He was a strong advocate of temperance and taught it both by precept and example. He raised six sons and four daughters, all "teetotalers." "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord"—"that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." RELATIVE.

WILLIAMS—Died in Bertie county, N. C., Nov. 25th, 1892, Jesse R. Williams, son of J. L. and Annie E. Williams. Jesse was four years old, and was a bright and cheerful little boy. On the evening before his death his parents left him with the baby and a two-years older brother in the house, when his clothes caught fire, and before the parents could reach him all were burned off. This occurred at four o'clock p. m., and he lived until six o'clock a. m.

All the care and attention that tender hands of relatives and friends could do was done. He was sensible to the last, and once or twice tried to sing a song. It was hard to give up "Judge," as we called him. But he is gone to live with Jesus. To his parents so bereaved, to his brother so lonely and sad, let me point them to him who has said all things worketh together for good to them who love and serve the Lord.

His body was laid in the new graveyard beside the mulberry tree, amidst a large host of relatives and friends.

Fond parents, no more will you hear little Jesse's voice, no more hear his pattering feet. He can't come to you, but you can prepare to go to him. He is now at the beautiful gate waiting and watching for you.

My knowledge of that life is small,
The eye of faith is dim,
But 'tis enough that Christ knows all,
And I shall be with him.

Our times are in thy hand,
Why should we doubt or fear?
A Father's hand will never cause
His child a needless tear.

AUNTIE.

Tributes of Respect.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." "In the dismemberment of kingdoms and the establishment of republics we hear the clash of arms, and many who bear the flag fall victims to death." So in the spiritual or christian warfare those who lift aloft the banner of Jesus, who cry aloud and spare not, ever shouting the battle cry, "Onward and upward," they too fall asleep in death. So it was with our beloved pastor, the Rev. James L. Cottingham, who died Oct. 8th, 1892, at Tatums, S. C., where he had gone by special invitation to assist in a protracted meeting.

WHEREAS, It hath pleased God to remove from our midst over the care and oversight of our respective churches our affectionate and much-loved pastor, we bow in humble submission to him who doeth well, and after the council of his own infinite knowledge and will; therefore be it

Resolved 1. That in the death of our brother our churches have not only lost a consecrated, faithful and devoted pastor, but the Baptist denomination has lost an earnest, efficient and successful worker.

Resolved 2. That we extend to his bereaved aged father and mother, to his grief-stricken widow and children our heartfelt sympathy in this their hour of sadness, trusting that they may find comfort in the promises of God's word.

Resolved 3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the record of each church of which he was pastor, and one each be sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER, Smithfield Herald and Wadesboro Intelligencer for publication, also one each to his aged parents and bereaved family.

Archer Lodge, N. C.

LINES ON THE DEATH OF REV. MR. COTTINGHAM BY MRS. MAMIE HATCHER.

The autumn leaves are falling 'round us,
The winds are murmuring through the trees,
The starlit nights are sadder, lonelier—
They seem to speak in words like these:
Our pastor's gone, he comes no more
To tell us of duties,
To warn us as in days of yore,
And share with us the falling tear.

We watch the golden sun that fadeth
Behind the western hills away,
And yet we know it still is shining,
But gives not us its brightest ray;
When memory takes us back apace,
And through the gloomy shades of night,
We seem to see that sun's bright face,
And Fancy lends its glowing light.

'Tis thus to-day with our dear brother,
Altho' his sun has seemed to set,
We know it shines far brighter, clearer,
Beyond the clouds of vain regret.
Yes, he is safe at home with God,
Where kindred souls will never part—
"'Tis dust to dust beneath the sod,
But there, up there, 'tis heart to heart."

A faithful toiler has departed,
A faithful soul has fought and won,
His hands were full of sheaves the brightest,
And saith the Lord, "Well done! well done!"
But still he lives in many a fold,
His pleading accents cannot die,
His precious songs will ne'er grow old,
Till we shall hear them sung on high.

'Twas "Jesus lover of my soul,"
He sang before he went to rest,
And "while the nearer waters roll,"
He always said "God knoweth best."
Hence, "other refuge" had he none—
He longed his precious Lord to see;
He sang, "O leave me not alone,
But still support and comfort me."

Then for his loved ones long he prayed
An earnest, anxious, yearning prayer;
His trust upon the Lord was stayed,
He cast on him his every care.
And "Hide me, O my Saviour hide,"
He sang—the storm had almost past—
Then "Safe into the haven guide,"
With "Oh, receive my soul at last."

The only son to father, mother,
The husband of a loving wife,
To sisters three, the only brother,
And to his children he was life.
Our words are vain—we can but say
We long to help them bear the rod,
Yet, for the ills of life to-day,
There's but one healer, that is God.

The loss to churches, friends and loved ones,
Is greater far than we can tell.
'Tis his the joy, and ours the sorrow,
Hence, we must say that ALL IS WELL,
For him, with heavenly joys to share,
We would not feel e'en one regret,
We would not rob those mansions fair,
Of one bright star that will not set.

The two soles of the W. L. DOUGLAS $3.00 Shoe when worn through can be repaired as many times as necessary, as they will never rip or loosen from the upper. The Home Circle.

The Happiest Birthday.

The birthday of a friend we love
Is ever welcome, ever dear;
And yet, all other days above,
Through the glad circle of the year,
Is this one, crowned with Christmas cheer.

And centuries have rolled along,
And other days, forgotten, glide,
While this is kept with joy and song.
The dust of ages cannot hide
The birth-time of the Crucified.

We love the day, the happy day,
In which the fair and holy Child
In Bethlehem's manger cradled lay;
We love the mother, pure and mild,
Who looked upon his face and smiled.

But most we love, we worship him,
The Prince of Peace, the Saviour, slain.
Our eyes with grateful tears are dim,
We weep, remembering all his pain;
We hope, because he rose again.
—Mrs. McVean-Adams, in The Companion.

Hanging the Christmas Stocking.

When the presents are chosen and safely housed, the next question to be answered is, how shall they be given? writes Elisabeth Robinson Scovil in the Christmas number of The Ladies' Home Journal. Shall the children hang up their stockings, and keep up the fiction of Santa Claus, or shall the gifts be hidden under the napkins on the breakfast table, or shall they be placed on a Christmas tree? Like most earthly plans, each has its advantages and counter-balancing disadvantages. In some families their are circumstancies that answer the question, and leave no choice, while others are free to choose whichever seems best.

So much poetry clusters about the legend of Santa Claus that the ideal celebration of Christmas must include the filling of the stockings. First, there is the delicious ceremony of hanging them by an open fireplace, if possible, on Christmas eve; the procession of father, mother and happy children, each child with a stocking, all eager to find a good place to deposit them where Santa Claus, when he comes down the chimney, cannot possibly overlook them; the important business of fastening them securely so that they will not fall with their precious burdens; the lingering glances of the children as they go to bed picturing those limp, dangling receptacles filled to overflowing from that wonderful sleigh the tiny reindeer is bringing nearer and nearer. Who would relinquish all this? If the older members of the family are wakened at an unreasonably early hour next morning, by whispers and irrepressible gurgles of delight, is it not Christmas, the children's day?

True Christmas Charity.

"There is a tendency at each Christmas-tide for writers to urge too strongly, I think, the beauty of Christmas giving, by donation or distribution among the lowly and the very poor, writes Edward W. Bok in the Christmas number of The Ladies' Home Journal. No charity can be more beautiful, more typical of the Christ spirit than for those who can afford to do so to send a glimmer of light into the lives of thousands in our great cities who can only eke out a bare existence. And it speaks volumes for the generosity of our wealthy classes, and heroic work done by our charitable organizations, that in no other nation on the globe are those who live in poverty and want so well remembered on Christmas as are the poor classes of America. But there is a class which is not reached by the donations of the wealthy, or by the work of charitable organizations. There are in this country thousands of homes into which reverses of fortune come each year, where death or business failure causes the keenest heart anguish and the severest self denial. These homes contain sensitive natures which shrink from the outstretched hand of charity. Poor and proud is the name the world has for them. Perhaps; but let me tell you, my friend, it is not easy to receive charity when all your life you have dispensed it. A reversal of fortune is the hardest thing in this world to bear. The poor know not its tortures. It is the keenest kind of poverty. Into such homes would I direct, at Christmas-tide, some loving kindness. In this country where one is up to-day and down to-morrow, there is not one of us but who, in his or her acquaintance, knows of an instance of reverse fortunes. Let something from you go into such a home. The born poor will be remembered by others; the newly made poor may be forgotten.

How to Give the Present.

Says Miss Thoughtful: "How shall I give my Christmas gift?" I answer: "Do not give it, my dear, send it; or if you are in the same house with those for whom you have prepared something, put it where it may be found when you are not about. Of course, you are going to make every gift have a holiday air. That is, some of the pennies will go to buy sheets of white, yellow, brown, pink and blue tissue paper, and more pennies will go to buy some pieces of Tom Thumb ribbon to tie them up with. Use yellow ribbon on the brown, white on the yellow, blue on the pink, pink on the blue, and if you should get a scarlet paper, though I do not think it is so very pretty, make it gorgeous with gold thread.—Ruth Ashmore, in The Ladies' Home Journal.

The Age of Decay.

Birth, growth, maturity, decay, death—such is the natural history of man. The three periods of life should sustain a certain proportion to each other—twenty years of growth, sixty years of maturity, twenty years of decay. This is what might be counted upon as the ordinary course of human life, but for the fact that we labor under a load of ancestral transgression of physical and moral laws, supplemented and intensified by our personal delinquencies and follies.

How pleasant is the picture! Twenty years of happy childhood and youth, sixty years of intellectual progress and achievement, with domestic and social joys, and then twenty years of slow, almost unconscious decay, characterized by serenity of mind, pleasant memories and joyous anticipations of a grander life beyond the grave.

Sadly different is human existence as we see it. We look with wonder upon Gladstone, past eighty, still vigorous in mind and body, still strong and wise to lead the great Liberal party of England. We accept three score and ten as life's natural limit, and expect only labor and sorrow if this limit is passed.

We are doomed, we think, by our inheritance, and to some extent this is true. But we should remember the law of recuperation. The torn flesh heals, the broken bone reunites. Diseases tend toward recovery. The weary toiler rises from sleep strong for new labors. The wise physician bases his hope upon this law.

And this tendency of nature to heal herself may be greatly assisted by careful and intelligent living, so that it is always possible that the man of unfortunate ancestry may secure for himself a good old age, and start his posterity upon an ascending plane.

Do what you will, however, life must have its end. When the age of decay is reached hidden changes are going on, the culmination of which is the last great change. The muscles shrink; the brain shrivels; the nerves lose their sensibility and active power; the arteries, perhaps, become chalky or fatty; the heart is weakened; the circulation enfeebled and at last an end comes.

During this final period, then, we must take things calmly; avoid excesses of all kinds; guard against exposures; keep up a degree of mental activity; cultivate cheerfulness and look forward with hope.—Youth's Companion.

A Labor of Love.

In the archives of the British and Foreign Bible Society may be seen a curious copy of the New Testament, whose production was indeed a labor of love. It is all written by hand, but by no means elegantly done; the crude cramped chirography betraying the toilsome patience of one little used to the pen, rather than the rapid dexterity of a professional copyist.

This singular volume is the work of a poor Irish laborer, whose education was better than his advantages, and whose thirst for the word of God conquered every difficulty to obtain it.

In the county of Cork, when copies of the Scriptures in the native language were a novelty and a rarity, a Protestant peasant learned that one of his neighbors, a country gentleman, owned a copy of the New Testament in Irish, and went to his house to ask the loan of the book.

"What would you do with it, my man?" asked the gentleman, kindly, but in some surprise.

"I would rade it, sir; and if ye'd let me 'ave it that long, I'd write it off, an' be kapin' a copy o' me own."

"Why, how could you possibly do that?" exclaimed the gentleman, still more surprised.

"I can rade and write, sir."

"But where would you get the paper?"

"I would buy it, sir."

"And pen and ink?"

"Faith, I'd buy them, too, sir."

"But you have no place nor convenience to do such work. How could you manage that?"

"Ah, thin, where there's a will there's a way. Maybe your honor wouldn't be willing to lind the book?"

"Well, really, my man, I don't know where I could get another copy, and I should feel reluctant to let the volume go out of my house, especially for a long time. You might come here and read it, you know."

The poor peasant was evidently disappointed. But he made one more appeal.

"Beg pardon, yer honor, but if ye'd jist allow me to sit in yer hall now, I cud come up whin me wurruk's done in the day, and write it off in the avenin's."

The gentleman was so struck with the pious sincerity of his humble neighbor that he was granted his request, and for months a candle and a place in his hall were allowed the poor man, till he actually copied every word of the New Testament.

Let any of our readers try the same task, and then say if aught but pure love for the precious word could supply the zeal and patience necessary to finish it.

Years afterward a printed New Testament was presented to the christian peasant, when he gave up his manuscript copy to the society, which has since kept it as a relic.—Young Reaper.

Taught a Lesson.

A man with large business interests and a handsome income married a lady, says the Youth's Companion, who, unaccustomed all her previous life to the luxuries of wealth, had never formed any clear conception of the worth and purchasing power of money. For some months the indulgent husband gratified his wife's every whim.

One day the lady, to gratify some caprice, asked for a check for so large a sum that the gentleman was disturbed. He saw that such prodigality, if persisted in, meant ruin, but not wishing to grieve his wife by a downright refusal, he determined to give her a lesson in finance. He therefore smilingly remarked that he could not give her a check as usual, but would send up the money from his store.

About noon the promised money came, not in crisp bills, as was expected, but in silver dollars, the sum total filling several specie bags.

The wife was at first vexed, then amused, and finally, as the afternoon wore away, became deeply thoughtful. When her husband came home to supper she took him gently by the arm, and leading him into the room where the ponderous bags of specie were still standing, said:

"My dear, is this the money I asked you for this morning?"

"It is, my love," was the reply.

"And did you have to take this money all in, dollar by dollar, in the course of your business?" was the next question.

"Yes," he answered, gently; "it represents the results of many weeks of hard labor."

"Well, then," she said, with tears in her eyes, "send a man to take it back to the bank in the morning. I can't use so much money for so trivial a purpose. I didn't understand about it before."

A Little Girl.

The daughter of J. B. Cox, a leading merchant of Big Island, Va., who had an alarming cough, baffling the skill of the physician, was cured by the use of Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein.

It is not unusual for mothers to pass over the disobedience of their children so long as it has no unpleasant consequences, but to be severe so soon as the results are troublesome. For instance, a child is told not to play with water. He disobeys and, though his mother sees the wrongdoing, she says nothing while he succeeds in keeping his clothes clean and dry. When, however, he comes in with his pretty suit wet and muddy he is severely punished. The boy may not understand the inconsistency of his mother's conduct, but he feels it and it affects his character. Some day, when people suddenly discover that the man whom they trusted has been guilty for a long time of dishonest practice, they wonder at the contradictions of his nature. They do not know the experiences of his childhood, when he learned that it was only unsuccessful disobedience which was punished.—Exchange.

Knowing and Known.

In a deep, true sense the Bible is God's book, but it is also man's book. As Jesus is a manifestation of God in the form and feeling and thought and life of man, so the Bible is a revelation of divine thought through the processes and forms of human thought and experience. The pure spiritual communications that find utterance in the Bible are from God, yet that book, more than most books, was born out of the passionate, struggling, aspiring heart of man.

Every man who comes to know Jesus, the Living Word, feels a certain inevitable kinship with him, for "he was made like unto his brethren"; so, too, every soul that comes to know the Bible feels a certain personal proprietorship in it, as if something of his own life had contributed to its story.

This marvellous book glows with the light of a divine and far-excelling wisdom, yet it throbs with a deep and persistent human feeling. It articulates man's cry to God as surely as it voices God's message to man. This genuine humanness of the Bible is seen, not only in the way in which it fits into all the manifold intricacies of human experience and need, but also in its wonderful recognition of all human conditions. How unerringly it expresses the nature and tendencies of human sin! With what fulness and accuracy it delineates all human sorrow and weakness and desire! No book searches the heart of man like the Bible. Here is every man's spiritual biography.

In no respect does it more clearly manifest its insight and practical wisdom than in its constant recognition of the imperfection of human knowledge and the limitations of human capacity. The mystery of life and of God appears in these pages as surely as that mystery appears in our experience. Over against God's absolute knowledge of man is ever set man's little knowledge of God. "Canst thou by searching find out the Almighty to perfection?" asks a seer. "He knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust!" exclaims a Psalmist. In the New Testament, Jesus is constantly recognizing and taking account of the ignorance and inaptitude of his disciples. "O foolish ones, and slow of heart to understand," he cries, in strong yet gentle reproof of their dulness.

The imperfection of human knowledge, most deeply felt by the wisest, the poets and seers of the race, appears

THE MYSTERIES OF PROVIDENCE.

1. In our little understanding of the ways and purposes of Divine Providence,

> "We have but faith, we cannot know,
> For knowledge is of things we see."

Mainly our effort to understand the ways of God is a blind, often blundering, "feeling after him if haply we may find him." Here and there, in the long procession of the centuries and ages, is a rare soul who is called to be, in eminent degree, an interpreter of the Divine will to men. Such seem lifted suddenly to a height of insight and knowledge which the rest of the world attains slowly and painfully and through many trials. Such were Moses, and Isaiah, and Micah, and John the evangelist, and Paul the apostle, and others whose record, or whose utterances, is preserved for us in the sacred Scriptures. These all came, though not in equal degree, to a perception and grasp of spiritual truth that makes them spiritual leaders of the race. They are the "prophets" or speakers for God. But all these attained their eminence of spiritual understanding only by a way that, if short, was costly. God has delivered a great message to the world through no one whom he has not prepared by ample and searching discipline. We read in that 103d Psalm that "God made known his ways unto Moses, his acts unto the children of Israel." Is there not suggested a difference between God's "ways" and his "acts," or "exploits," as Cheyne translates? The suggestion is strengthened by the prayer of Moses recorded in Exodus 33: 13, "If I have found grace in thy sight, make known to me thy way, and let me know thee." Moses was called to be God's interpreter and teacher to Israel, and so by his training he was brought quickly into the current of the Divine thought and purpose. But the Israelites were schooled, through years and even centuries, by the wondrous "acts" of God which illuminated their history, and made it forever glorious. How slow they were in learning is seen in Isaiah's complaint, "Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider," and in a later prophet's pathetic cry, "Lord, who hath believed our report?"

The slight, and but slowly growing knowledge of the disciples, under the tutorship even of Jesus himself, is betrayed again and again in such words of Christ's as these, "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter"; and "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." Still, after many centuries of teaching, the world learns but slowly. Our knowledge of nature grows with ever increasing rapidity. With ever clearer eye and more precise judgment, we read the word of God written in star and rock and flower and fossil. But the Divine ways and purposes on the higher place of human life and destiny baffle our minds, and we walk in the dim twilight, led by the hand of one whom we see only as a vast and undefined shadow. Of God's will we may know, we do know, enough for faith to thrive upon and for dutiful will to work out, but of knowledge, in the usual sense, how little we possess! The recognition of our limitations is often accompanied, in our minds, by an involuntary protest. The inscrutableness of Providence, continually baffling our endeavors to understand, again and again confounding all our theories, stirs us to complaint and even resentment. Why is it? Is Providence a sphinx? But let us not forget that the limitations are not upon him, but upon us. It is not that he does not speak, but that we do not hear. Slowly the spirit develops, and strives upward into the realm of the highest truths. Slowly we learn, because, in order that knowledge may increase, capacity must grow to the height and breadth of that which God would make known to us. Imperfect knowledge means imperfect capacity and undeveloped power. We shall know as fast as we are able to receive. Even now, spirits that > ——"muse and pray,

> Behind creation's throbbing screen,
> Catch movements of the great Unseen."

KNOWLEDGE OF MAN.

2. How imperfect is the knowledge that we have of our fellow men! We know but little even of those whom we love best and to whom we are nearest. We know the exterior of the lives about us. We know something of that hidden life which goes on within and finds an imperfect expression in speech and in conduct that we can observe and analyze. But how frequently we have to revise our impressions and shift our point of view. Some new and deeper glimpse into the life of another overturns opinions that had crystallized into convictions. How often, through defect in our knowledge of others, we are led into injustice to them. Sometimes we condemn where, if we were wiser, we should approve, and approve where, with keener insight, we should condemn.

Still, though we often err through imperfection of knowledge, it is better that our knowledge of others should be imperfect, while we have so little capacity of love and sympathy, without which capacity in large measure judgment is sure to be both superficial and cruel. Jesus Christ could know all that was in man, and not be shocked out of his sweet composure and steadiness of purpose to do good to man. But it was because he had an infinite capacity of love. Him has God appointed to judge the world, because he loves the world. Knowledge without love makes a Mephistopheles, a Satan, not a just judge and saviour. Indeed, without love, there cannot be the deepest knowledge. If there could be, it would be ill both for knower and known.

With our slender capacity for loving holily, and our consequent imperfect power of righteous discrimination, it would be ill, both for us and for others, if we knew more deeply than we do the innermost secrets of human life. As we cannot look steadily into the eyes of God and read in their infinite depths the reason and method of his dealings with us now, neither can we explore the depth of the human soul by our side and know all the strengths and weaknesses of that unfolding life.

3. How imperfect is our knowledge of ourselves! Our growth from infancy onward through youth to manhood and womanhood is a process of self-discovery. We first arrive at self-consciousness. This experience comes so early that few remember the moment when they first knew themselves as self-conscious personalities. Richter, if we can accept his own testimony, was singular in this respect. He says of himself: "Never shall I forget the phenomenon in myself, never till now recited, when I stood by the birth of my own self-consciousness, the place and time of which are distinct in my memory. On a certain forenoon I stood a very young child, within the house door, and was looking out toward the wood-pile, when, in an instant, the inner revelation, 'I am I,' like lightning from heaven, flashed and stood brightly before me; in that moment had I seen myself as 'I' for the first time and forever." With most of us the rising of self-consciousness is like a gentle dawn; we do not know the precise moment when day began. Our early life is a process of self-discovery, with reference to the possession and use of our physical members. As life goes on we come by degrees to a knowledge of our various faculties of mind and heart. Thus, too, there is growth in conscious knowledge of our moral capacities and of our moral state. Conscience reveals itself as a power within us. There is the religious instinct and the capacity of faith, the sense of justice, the perception of truth and the sentiment and passion of love.

THE REVELATION OF THE SPIRIT.

The awakening of our hearts by the Spirit of God, which marks the beginning of conscious spiritual life, is a great leap in the process of self-knowledge. But how meagre, after all, is the knowledge which we clearly possess of our own natures. All profoundly religious natures, especially when experience has given them a strongly introspective cast, feel this. We have but a dim perception of our capacity for self will and selfishness and manifold lust. The Psalmist speaks not for himself alone, but for humanity, when he cries out with passionate fear: "Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults. Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins." He is in terror before the possibility that through very ignorance of himself he may plunge into presumptuous and inexpiable guilt. So, too, the writer of the 139th Psalm prays: "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." Many times we have made these utterances our own. We know little of our capacity for sin and folly. Sometimes a peculiarly trying experience has given us a deeper glimpse into our natures than we have had before, and we have been startled out of our complacency and conceit, and have prayed as only those pray who struggle back in shuddering recoil from the crumbling brink of some unfathomable abyss.

It is not an evil thing that our self-knowledge is imperfect now, and that the process of self-discovery is slow. God is good in this, as in everything, that he leads us gradually into the knowledge of our own natures. We could not bear to know ourselves as he knows us. We have not love enough for a true self knowledge. When God has wrought his perfect work in us we shall know as we are known, without shame and without fear; and we shall look back upon our past life, with all its follies and sins, as we now look back with a smile of tender compassion on the petulances and foolishnesses of our early childhood.—Rev. Dr. Philip S Moxom, in The Watchman.

Letter from Asheville.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I am rejoiced to hear that your health is almost entirely restored. May the Lord's blessings rest upon you. The RECORDER comes as a weekly visitor bringing tidings from friends below the Ridge. It was a great sacrifice not to meet with the brethren in the Convention. But my pastoral duties were too exacting this time to allow my absence.

The work here is exceedingly encouraging. The Lord adds to us constantly those that are making useful workers. I have baptized almost every Sunday night. Professions of faith are frequent. A great many are received by letter. I have been here just ten months, and the Lord has added to the church 140 members, the majority by baptism.

We have decided to organize a new church first of next year. We will dismiss for this purpose nearly a hundred members; but in lengthening the cords we will strengthen the stakes.

Our new house of worship is a thing of beauty. It is said by competent judges to be the most attractive house in the State. It certainly has the largest seating capacity, this being 1,200; but by crowding and using part of the wide aisles, 1,500 can be accommodated. It has but one gallery, which is over the vestibule. The accoustics are good. We hope to dedicate early next summer at which time I should be glad to see several of the brethren from the State Convention.

It is needless to begin to speak of the royal and loyal membership. Their many tokens of appreciation shown the pastor have completely won his heart, and to them he is trying to give his best service. When I came I found every one ready to extol the excellencies of my predecessor, Dr. W. A. Nelson, and give loving testimony to his unswerving fidelity as a man of God. When I heard how kindly they mentioned him, I felt encouraged to believe that they would love me, too; for it is a good sign to hear kind words from the brethren about the pastor resigned.

Asheville is filling with visitors. They are coming earlier than usual. Dr. Skinner in his speech before the Convention gives Bill Nye as authority for saying that Asheville is the coldest place in the world. Let the Doctor come and get a taste of this climate summer and winter, and he will retract, Bill Nye to the contrary notwithstanding. Asheville is unsurpassingly beautiful for situation and unexcelled in climate.

But enough. Let me invite the brethren to come over the Blue Ridge and see us.

Fraternally, J. L. WHITE.

"Infant Baptism."

Here are some of the various conflicting and contradictory reasons given by other writers, when eagerly hunting for some reason to bolster up this unscriptural practice. Look at the following:

1. The Catholics, High Church Episcopalians and John Wesley taught that infants must be baptized in order to regenerate and save them. See Wesley's Doctrinal Tracts, published by the Methodist Book Concern, pp. 250, 251.

2. Dr. Hibbard and some other Methodist writers contradict Wesley and say infants are born regenerate and should be baptized, because they are regenerate. Hibbard on Baptism, pp. 5 and 89; also Gregg on Infant Church Membership, pages 196, 246.

3. Drs. Wall, Hammond and others, base infant baptism on proselyte baptism.

4. Drs. Owen, Jennings and others repudiate proselyte baptism and base infant baptism on circumcision.

5. Beza and Dodridge taught that children were federally holy, on account of the faith of their parents, and hence should be baptized.

6. Others baptize them because they are unholy, to wash away their original sin.

7. Burder, Dwight and their class baptize them because infants of believing parents are born in the church; are members, and entitled to baptism.

8. Baxter and Henry baptized them because they are not in the church. They must be baptized to bring them in.

9. Evangelical Episcopalians baptize them on the guaranty of their sponsors, which Gregg, another advocate for infant baptism, calls a solemn mockery.

10. Calvin and Melancthon taught that infants had a kind of faith, and therefore should be baptized.

11. The Christian Union bases infant baptism on household baptisms, thinking it likely there were infants among them. But nearly every Baptist church has in it more baptized households of believers than all the baptized households mentioned in the Bible. I once had the jailer and all his household in my church in Metamora, Illinois. They were all believers and no infants.

12. Some declare Apostolic Tradition the basis of infant baptism.

13. Others baptize them to make them disciples.

14. Others to dedicate them to the Lord. They should call it dedication, not baptism.

15. Others, to bring them into the Abrahamic covenant.

16. Others, because they are already in the Abrahamic covenant.

17. Others, in order to give them a name.

18. Others, to secure burial in consecrated ground.

19. Others, to give the parents the consoling pledge that their dying infants are saved.

20. Others, like Henry Ward Beecher, because he thinks it practically useful, while he admitted that the apostles did not baptize infants.

Here are twenty different and many of them contradictory reasons for infant baptism. Is there any such conflict as to authority for believers baptism? No. It is as clear as sunlight. It is commanded by the Saviour, taught and practiced by inspired apostles.

THE DECLINE OF INFANT BAPTISM.

The latest statistics which I have seen show that while Episcopalians and Roman Catholics generally continue the practice, many Lutherans in this country, nearly half of them, practically omit it. About two-thirds of the Presbyterians fail to have their infants baptized, four-fifths of the Methodists, and seven-eights of the Congregationalists fail to practice it. The more the Bible is studied the less it will be practiced, and the true gospel baptism of believers will take its place. And when intelligent Bible readers choose for themselves, they will more and more come to be "buried with Christ in baptism."—G. S. Bailey, in Herald of Truth.

The Bible.

Who composed the following description of the Bible was never known. It was found in Westminster Abbey, nameless and dateless.

A nation would be truly happy if it were governed by no other laws than those of the blessed book.

It is so complete a system that nothing can be added to it.

It contains everything needful to be known or done.

It gives instruction to a senate, authority and direction to a magistrate.

It contains a witness, requires an impartial verdict of a jury, and furnishes the judge with his sentence.

It sets the husband as a lord of the household and the wife as a mistress of the table; tells him how to rule, and her to manage.

It prescribes and limits the sway of the sovereign, the ruler, and authority of the master, commands the subjects to honor, and the servants to obey, and promises the blessing and protection of the Almighty to all that work by its rules.

It promises food and raiment; and limits the use of both.

It points out a faithful and eternal guardian to the departing husband and father; tells him with whom to leave his fatherless children, and whom his widow is to trust, and promises a father to the former and a husband to the latter.

It teaches a man to set his house in order and know his will; it appoints a dowry for his wife; and entails the right of the first born and also shows how the young branches shall be left.

It defends the right of all, and reveals vengeance to every defaulter, overreacher and trespasser.

It is the first book, and the oldest book in the world.

It contains the choicest matter, gives the best instruction, affords the greatest pleasure and satisfaction that was ever enjoyed.

It contains the best laws and most profound mysteries that were ever penned; it brings the best comforts to the enquiring and disconsolate.

It exhibits life and immortality from everlasting, and shows the only way of glory.

It is a brief recital of all that is to come.

It settles all matters in debate, resolves all doubt, and eases the mind and conscience of all scruples.

It reveals the only living and true God, and shows the way to him, and sets aside all other gods, and describes the vanity of them who trust in such; in short, it is a book of law, to show right and wrong; a book of wisdom that condemns all folly and makes the foolish wise; a book of truth, that detects all lies and confronts all errors; and a book of life, that shows the way from everlasting death.

It contains the most ancient antiquities, strange events, wonderful occurrences, heroic deeds, and of unparalleled wars.

It describes the celestial, terrestrial and infernal worlds, and the origin of the angel myriads, human tribes and devilish legions. —Ex.

Ordination of Rev. A. J. Taylor.

Pursuant to appointment, and by request of Third Baptist church of Durham, brethren C. W. Blanchard, A. A. Butler and J. F. MacDuffie were asked to examine and set apart Bro. A. J. Taylor to the gospel ministry, Oct. 16, 1892. Bro. Blanchard acted as chairman on examination.

After giving his christian experience and call to the ministry and doctrines of the Bible, the presbytery found Bro. Taylor well qualified on these points, and proceeded to set him apart. Bro. Butler preaching the sermon, Bro. MacDuffie offering the prayer, and Bro. Blanchard delivering the charge.

We commend Bro. Taylor to the brethren, and pray God's blessing upon him and his work.

Thanksgiving.

Editor of Recorder:—May I be granted the pleasure of speaking a few words to my brethren and sisters and fellow-ministers concerning the thanksgiving season.

I have many reasons whereby I can rejoice in seeing the old year take its flight and the ushering in of the coming new year. But the greatest reason of all is, my being called to the work of the gospel ministry.

I am a young man of twenty-three summers, engaged in teaching school near Harrellsville, Hertford county, N. C., and I most humbly solicit the prayers and sympathies of God's people everywhere.

As I reflect on the good, old days of yore, I am carried back to my child-home on the hill; and I am more than glad that I've been reared in a land where peace and quietude reign supreme and none dare to molest or make afraid.

As we look over the broad expanse of this land of ours, we see the short crops that people have made; but we should be very grateful that the omnipotence of God's hand has not inflicted us with a fatal epidemic or sent on us much bodily suffering.

We should be thankful, too, that God has spared our lives, while he has removed by death many as good by nature as we and perhaps better by practice.

The greatest reason of all for thankfulness is, that the present is the season which brings to our minds the time in which God sent his Son to shed his life's blood for our salvation.

Fraternally, REV. GEO. W. WHITE.

Something About True Religion.

One of the marks of true religion is continuance in our appointed course in spite of all difficulties. Paul pressed toward the mark of his high calling, but we know not how much he had to overcome in his upward race. If the race of Christ truly dwells within us our record will be even in our weakness, "Faint yet pursuing." It is those who seem to have little strength and yet keep themselves unflinchingly to their appointed course who win our respect and whom Christ honors. "He that endureth to the end shall be saved."—Christian Inquirer.

In Christ's name you must go down to people in order to raise them up. This what Jesus Christ himself did. He down to us that he might raise us to self. The teacher always goes down to pupil. The parent always goes down to child. The strong must go down to weak if ever the weak are to be lifted strength. Ye know the grace of Lord Jesus Christ, who, though he yet for your sakes became poor.

If the christian course had a path of roses, would of christianity have been with thorns?—F. Myer.

A SIGNIFICANT LETTER.

The Society of Jesus, (the Jesuits), recently elected a new General to serve as the head of their order. The Pope wrote him a letter of congratulation, in which we find the following significant words: "As you are aware, we have always entertained great affection for the Society of Jesus, to which we are indeed bound by bonds of gratitude, considering its many meritorious acts, and its perfect obedience and zeal for this See of Blessed Peter."

In the above quotation the italics are ours, and we have used them to call special attention to the words and phrases italicized as throwing a great deal of light on the spirit and genius of Romanism. It is a well-known fact that the Pope, in the opinion of Catholics at least, speaks "ex cathedra;" and hence, we suppose, he is here speaking, not only for himself, but for the Popes that have preceded, and for those that may follow him. "As you are aware," says the Pope, "we have always entertained great affection for the Society of Jesus," &c. Now, considering the eventful history of the Jesuits; how they have more than once been virtually suppressed by the Popes themselves; how they have often been banished from different countries, as political intriguers, and disturbers of the peace; how that some of the most relentless persecutions and slaughters of the ages inflicted on innocent Protestants or dissenters may be justly laid at their doors, the above words are indeed remarkable, and quite suggestive, if not portentous. If it be claimed that the present incumbent of St. Peter's chair is speaking only for himself, and not for his predecessors—especially for those who suppressed or banished the Jesuits of other centuries—the language is still remarkable. The present Pope is considered an able and astute man. He is doubtless far above the average of the Popes that reigned in the centuries when the Jesuits had reached the zenith of their power. He is therefore without doubt well acquainted with the history, both religious and political, of that zealous and crafty order, and yet, facing boldly the intelligence, the humanity, and the piety of the nineteenth century, he expresses in no uncertain terms his great affection for it.

Well, there is food for serious thought here. Much allowance is usually made for the religious opinions and practices of men who lived in the darker ages of the church, and the Jesuits of the present day would be fairly entitled to the benefit of such allowance if that Society showed now, even in enlightened England, Germany, or America, a policy and a spirit markedly different from those shown in their earlier history. Their more recent expulsion from Germany, however, and their political intrigues in China, and other heathen nations, where they have obtained a foothold, not to speak of their inveterate opposition to Protestantism, and with it, civil liberty, in such countries as Italy, Spain, Cuba and Mexico, demonstrate beyond a doubt that no change of policy or spirit can be justly claimed for that order. Notwithstanding the temporary checks, disappointments, and even persecutions, experienced by that great Society, they have exhibited such elasticity and perseverance, and their principles after all are so thoroughly in accord with Romanism in general, that they may be said to have dominated that system; and we can hardly be accused of stating anything but a historical fact when we say that the spirit of Jesuitism is the spirit of Romanism, and in this sense the greatest of all the Popes was Francis Loyola, the founder of Jesuitism.

The Pope takes occasion to say that he is bound to the Society of Jesus by "bonds of gratitude." This is interesting reading again. For what particular work of this Society is the present Pontiff so grateful? Does he refer to some of their recent work in France, Germany, or America; or to their general work all over the world? Or does he refer to such interesting episodes in their history as occurred in connection with St. Bartholomew's day in France, Torquameda's [illegible] in Spain, or the Duke of Alva's exploits in the Netherlands? These questions would [illegible] answer, for the Pope, like his [illegible] to whom he is so grateful, whose [illegible] are at the bottom of the above [illegible] the habit of "keeping his own [illegible] is just possible that he is [illegible] special obligations to be grateful to this order for the determined struggle they are making in Germany and France against the policy and progress of enlightened government, and against civil and religious liberty. Or, it may be, that sundry oppositions and persecutions to which our missionaries, and those of other faiths, have been subjected, partly by the machinations of this order, have fanned the flame of gratitude in the Pontiff's heart. Be the cause or the date what it may, all this is interesting—quite!

The Pope next gives the reasons for his strong affection for the Society of Jesus when he alludes to their many meritorious acts and their perfect obedience to what he calls the "See of Blessed Peter." Whether an act is meritorious or not, depends largely upon the nature of the act and the end it is designed to accomplish. The words used at the close of the quotation that stands at the head of this article, however, throw a flood of light on what the Pope and the Society he so heartily commends regard as meritorious acts. In this case they seem to be acts that show perfect obedience to the See of Rome. Aha! now we strike the key-note of the Romish system; that is, perfect and unquestioned obedience to the Pope rather than obedience to Christ and his commands. The Jesuit is expected to render perfect obedience to the General of his order, and that General is expected to render the same kind of obedience to his master the Pope. This wheel-within-a-wheel arrangement, all guided by the hand of the Pope, seems to confer great joy to the occupant of St. Peter's chair. That the Jesuits have performed a good many meritorious acts, even when judged by proper standards, no well informed reader of church history can deny; but that they have always rendered perfect obedience to the Pontiff does not so readily appear; if so, how can we account for the bulls of Alexander VII., (1659), and Alexander VIII., (1690), that were fulminated against them, and their total or partial temporary suppression by other Popes.

The true history of Jesuitism and Romanism cannot be written without bearing in mind the fact that when the founders of that order render perfect obedience to the Pope they are in high favor, and when the contrary is true, the thunders of the Vatican fall upon them, and they are threatened with banishment or extinction. The history of the Jesuits also furnishes instructive reading as to the ultimate tendency, at times at least, of strong societies within the church. When such societies are composed of converted people, and they are strictly subordinate to the church, having mostly local influence, there may be no real danger of the Society usurping the functions and attempting the control of the church. It certainly suits the genius of Romanism and the policy of the Popes to have within the church over which they preside large and strong societies such as the Dominicans, Jansenists, Jesuits, &c., to which the Pontiffs are willing to commit work for which the church at large is not willing to be responsible, and on which they can conveniently throw the odium caused by the blunders and excesses of such societies. The truth of it is, the Popes have been alternately castigating and caressing the last mentioned society ever since its organization by Loyola. The language used by some of the present Pope's predecessors in denouncing them, when placed by the side of that used by him in the letter referred to, furnishes strong proof of the correctness of this remark. The whole thing is unsatisfactory, and makes one sigh for the candor of the spotless Nazarene.

WE MUST EDUCATE OUR PEOPLE.

The necessity for Baptists to educate their children was never so apparent as now. That we have become a great spiritual force in the State,—and in fact, wherever we have gone to the people and preached the truth as we hold it—is obvious to all. The fact that they know no master but Christ, no other law in religion than his law, and the independent government of their churches by the churches themselves, have tended to commend the Baptist churches to the American people, whose history stands for the freedom and independence of all mankind.

But what we started out to say is on somewhat a different line. For while we have had the most unmistakable evidences of God's approval in the great and unequalled success we have had in the ingatherings of our churches, as an educational force the Baptists have fallen far below what has been accomplished by some other religious denominations.

We might stop here and recite some reasons for this state of affairs, for reasons do exist; but for the present we pass on to notice how the present situation may in the future be changed. In the first place the Baptists having more in numbers, must do more educating than other denominations in order to make a comparative showing with these other denominations. It will be remembered, too, that our people live largely in the country, and are dependent for the education of their children upon such schools as the country has afforded, which in the main have been few and lamentably inefficient.

Before the war the very best schools were to be found in the country, where boys and girls could receive a good practical education and thorough preparation for college, but the want of interest on the farm has not been more clearly marked anywhere than in the almost entire obliteration of these schools. The farms, to a great extent, have been abandoned by their owners, who have themselves gone to town for business, and to avail themselves of the schools in the towns for the education of their children.

We call attention at present to three sources to which we may look for the improvement in the education of our people. We ought to appreciate the provision which the State is making to furnish primary education for the children in our public schools. This, while at present small and inefficient in itself, might be so supplemented by individuals who are able to run a school in each neighborhood of four or five months in the year. This would not only secure a longer school term, but it would at the same time insure more competent teachers than have heretofore been obtained. Then again, we ought to encourage the establishment of more schools like the Robeson Institute, which was established by the noble benefactions of Bro. Melke, who has since gone to his reward. With a proper effort more men can be found in our State like Bro. Melke, and more towns and neighborhoods can be found which will gladly supplement such a donation as Lumberton and the Robeson Association have done in the establishment of this school.

Finally, we ought to realize that the Baptists have a college of their own. One, too, worthy of the hearty and loyal support of all our people. Whatever the college may still need in the way of a greater endowment or better equipment, we ought to see to it that it is forthcoming. This is the way, and the only way, the college will ever be able to attract and hold the best and most progressive element of our own people. We not only want to send out from the college each year ministers and teachers, but we want to see the alumni of Wake Forest in all the trades and professions in such numbers as will secure to us the recognition to which we are entitled. One of the most eminent statesmen who ever figured in the history of his country, on one occasion, in answer to his own question, "What constitutes a State?" declared it was nothing but men.

The same is true of a college. You may heap up endowment till it reaches hundreds of thousands, and even millions of dollars, and added to this you may possess everything in the way of buildings and apparatus—and these are wholly indispensable—but after all, the living, growing, prosperity of a college is vested in the lives of the men who go out from its walls and are ever ready to do duty for the progress and success of their alma mater.

This is no after-thought on our part. The files of the RECORDER is so much testimony of what we have felt on this subject. We want to see our people wake up in earnest to the possibilities which are still ahead of them; but let us stand on sure footing so that there may not be in the future any changing of front nor stacking of arms.

I was sorry to miss the State Convention, but could not leave my work. The RECORDER is a very welcome visitor in my home. May the Lord bless and keep you, and prosper his cause in the Old North State."

....After sermon at night on Dec. 25th, 1892, by Dr. J. W. Carter, the pastor, in the First Baptist church of Raleigh, a collection was taken in behalf of missions to Japan. This effort for Japan was under the auspices of the W. M. S. of the church, and in accordance with the general plan of the Executive Committee of the Woman's Missionary Union that Christmas offerings should be made by the women's societies throughout the South to raise funds to send seven new missionaries to Japan this year. The subject of the Sunday-school lesson on Christmas day was Japan as a mission field. The same topic was discussed in the church prayer-meeting on the preceding Wednesday night. The subject of missionary study by the church and school for the present month is the island of Cuba. The custom is for one of the Sunday-school classes to present the topic by essay and address to the church prayer-meeting on the Wednesday night preceding the fourth Sunday when the subject is studied by the school.

The Editorial on Honesty and Brother Hardaway's Sermon.

Dear Recorder:—I am sitting in the corner nursing a sick foot. Having just read your editorial upon honesty and Bro. Hardaway's sermon, I feel like I want to express my thanks to you, while I give my hand to Bro. Hardaway. I am glad that you have struck that chord, and hope that you will strike it again, and strike hard, until its vibrations shall be heard and felt all through the land. Can there be a dishonest christian? Can a dishonest man be a righteous man? Can any but righteous ones go to heaven? Can a man who will not pay his just debts, when he has the means to do so, be honest, righteous, or go to heaven? You preach to thousands weekly. Help preach dishonesty out of the churches, out of the land.

Can't Bro. Hardaway's sermon be issued in pamphlet form and ten thousand copies sent over the land? The times demand, truth requires, and the need of the churches call for the plain outspoken truth. Breakers ahead! the white crest can be seen in the distance, as the waves roll over the bar which lies insidiously beneath.

Give us that sermon in a pamphlet, and put me down for—well, I don't know how many copies.

J. N. HODGES.

Consider what daily opportunities you have of serving him, whether by your own advance in holiness or by promoting that of your neighbor, and make a faithful use of all such.—St. Francis de Sales.

Letter from Wake Forest College.

"Man proposes, God disposes." One brother, who had planned a week of hard work "on the road," found his programme torn and scattered in shreds by the snow-storm of Tuesday. But, so long as there are books to be read, and letters to be written, and friends to see around hospitable firesides, such a disappointment can never be overwhelming. But the muse of Cowper would be needed, were one to attempt adequately to set forth the joys of the days—all too short—which many have been compelled to spend, snow-bound, in their own homes. The most notable subtraction from the pleasures of the week has been the failure of the RECORDER to drop in as usual to tell what the brethren are doing. But this will only help us to prize it more all the other weeks of the year. Blessings brighten in their absence, and this suspension of a week will satisfy all its regular readers that the RECORDER is worth $2.00 a year far more satisfactorily than the report of any committee could do.

Most of the students have spent the holidays at their homes. Many have already returned. Before this letter is printed, the fires will be aglow under the boilers, the bands will be on the wheels, and all the machinery of a great College will be in regular and active operation. Examinations are just ahead. Then, on Jan. 15th, begins the Spring Term. There are doubtless a large number of young men in North Carolina who could enter College at that time with great advantage to themselves. Many of them ought to do so. Eight or ten have written me that they will begin their course here in January. It may be that there are others who are considering the question, but are uncertain whether they can enter any of our classes. I shall be very glad to advise any of these, if they will inform me what they have already studied.

I have availed myself of some of these long winter evenings to make an analysis of the General Catalogue of the College, which has recently been published. The results may possibly be interesting to others, and at some early day I shall publish them in the RECORDER. Men have been educated at Wake Forest from eighty seven of the ninety-six counties of North Carolina, from eighteen other States, and from four foreign countries. So far as known, 331 ministers (317 Baptist), 259 teachers, 203 physicians, and 173 lawyers, have gone forth from the College.

What will the next General Catalogue show, if one is published at the end of another sixty years? It certainly ought to show far larger, as well as better work than has been done in the past. As to whether it shall do so or not will depend on the great host of Baptist people to whom it belongs. They have it in their power to make Wake Forest one of the most important and useful institutions of learning on the continent. If we all work together in hearty co operation, this will surely come to pass. But if we do not work, and work together, and work together with enthusiastic loyalty, we may see our beloved institution overshadowed and dwarfed and doomed to a hard struggle for existence. For one, however, I do not entertain these sombre views, but look hopefully for a future which will be far better and larger than the past has been. "Nulla vestigia restrorsum."

I have just written 1893 for the first time. The new administration shows itself capable and efficient, so far. In a few hours it has swept away the deeply drifted snow that '92 left behind, and filled the world with warmth and sunshine. All hail to the new regime, and a happy New Year to every reader of the RECORDER.

Letter from Rev. G. W. Greene in China.

ENGLISH SERVICES AMONG THE MISSIONARIES.

Many a struggling christian thinks that his pastor never has no struggles, that he always lives in the clouds of spiritual enjoyment, free from all temptations, and that his spiritual atmosphere never grows cold. Some, who have learned that this is a mistake, yet make the same mistake about missionaries, and think they live the right kind of life without any effort. But those who remember that missionaries are men and women, not yet etherialized, living on similar food, breathing the same air, subject to like temptations, yet in an imperfect state, even as other christians, will understand that they need the same constant struggle, watching and praying, to avoid falling into the same state of spiritual coldness and indifference as others. How often our hearts long for the simple, earnest, whole-hearted worship of the country churches where we went in our childhood. How much we should enjoy the warm hand-shaking of the brethren and sisters, such as we had in our riper years. As the day comes around for preaching at the churches where we have most enjoyed meeting with the Lord's people, we think of our dear friends meeting in the house so dear to us, and hearing the gospel, and worshipping together. Most of all, we miss the Associations and protracted meetings.

Feeling the need of the ordinary means of grace for their own spiritual good, and also with a desire to benefit other English speaking people resident here, the missionaries provide for regular services in English. On the English concession there is a house of worship of the Established Church, where there are services every Sunday at 11 o'clock. There is no resident Episcopal clergyman, so the service is conducted by one of the missionaries, nearly always a British subject, and more frequently one of the English Wesleyans than otherwise. They read the service from the prayer-book, and preach a very short sermon, so as to make the whole service last only an hour. As Baptists would not feel at home either in gown and bands or in the service of the prayer-book, they are not invited to conduct the service. These other brethren, moreover, meet the requirements only to a certain point; they may read the service and preach, but they may not "administer the sacraments," and on feast days they read the service "for the administration of the communion" only to a certain point, and then quit. This service is usually attended by from twenty to fifty of the foreigners resident in Canton. Adjacent to where we have lived this year is an elegant little Catholic chapel, in which frequent services are held, but they are Latin and French, and are attended by a number of Portuguese and a few French and Germans.

During the day the missionaries, for the most part, are engaged with the services for the Chinese christians. But Sunday night is given to a service in English, for the special benefit of the missionaries. In one of the residences built for the physicians of the Canton Hospital, there are two large rooms which can be thrown into one and will hold quite a congregation. Here the meetings are held, attended by the missionaries and a few other foreign residents. The missionaries take turns in preaching, so that each one preaches every two or three months. Occasionally a visiting brother comes by and preaches for us. The spiritual tone of the services is always elevating and helpful, the singing spirited and the prayers devout. Sometimes the preaching is of a high order; sometimes it is only ordinary. Most of the missionaries have preached but little in English, and many of them preach better in Chinese than in English. People at home ought to remember this when returned missionaries prove but ordinary speakers at conventions and associations. Just let them speak in Chinese if you wish to know what they can do.

The first Monday night in every month there is a prayer-meeting, observing the monthly concert of prayer for missions. These meetings are sometimes very profitable.

From the first Sunday in January to the second, the week of prayer is observed by daily services, some in the day, some in the night.

Every Wednesday night the members of the Baptist Mission have a meeting for prayer and Bible study.

Every Tuesday night a few missionaries and some others have a prayer-meeting at some private house in the foreign settlement, with the especial desire of reaching a class of young men in the Chinese customs service, who are largely destitute of religious privileges. Sometimes the attendance is not more than half a dozen, sometimes as many as twenty. These meetings are often very inspiring.

During the year I have been here while I am cut off from active work for want of the language, it has been a privilege to me to preach seven or eight times at these services, and to lead thirty or forty of the prayer meetings. G. W. GREENE.

A Word to the Churches About the Centennial.

Don't wait for the best time to do your part in this great enterprise. Appoint a time, work up to it and make it the best time. Last summer was declared a bad time to get money for any object. In one small country church in the Tar River Association in that most unpropitious time, over one hundred dollars were given to Foreign Missions. This was accomplished without injury to the other work, and done because the church had a mind to do it. I am not sure that everybody would agree that Dec. 25th was the best time for Christmas; but generally people are ready for Christmas because they prepare for it, though it may not come at the best time of the year. I believe a church can have a successful centennial meeting if they will set a time and prepare for it. Dear brethren and sisters, if you have been waiting for a favorable time, don't wait longer, but go to work and make the time what you will. Don't wait until everybody is in favor of the meeting.

You know, dear church, unless you are more highly favored than the average church, you have in your fellowship some who rarely favor anything that they do not originate; and as they are not very ingenious, they would never have thought of such a thing as a centennial of Foreign Missions. There are some who are not enough interested in any part of the work to oppose or favor it. There are some that don't believe in Foreign Missions; they can't take hold of anything so unselfish. So don't wait till everybody is favorable. Every moment somebody in the heathen world is dying without a hope in Jesus. Every step brings some soul to the grave, and the heathen tomb is so dark. Listen and you will hear the silent tramp of souls as they march to eternity without God.

Your pastor is interested in this work; he must be if he has the spirit of Jesus, and you believe he is a good man. He knows the needs of the foreign field; he can tell you about the destitution. He is acquainted with the literature on the subject of Home and Foreign Missions. He can do more than any other man because he knows the members, and they have confidence in his leadership.

Don't let criticism dampen your zeal. The utterances of some of the critics seem to be very weighty, but they have not a monopoly in wisdom. If somebody would puncture the bubbles as a distinguished professor in Virginia punctured the Bee Hive, it would be seen how specious they are.

Do see to it that every part of the church has an opportunity to help in this work, for the help of every part is needed. Let the pastors and superintendents see that this power is utilized.

The very fine showing of the woman's missionary societies ought to convince you that they have a capacity for work which the church can't afford to overlook. Are your women doing anything for the centennial?

Are our Sunday-school missionary societies and our young people's unions doing anything for the centennial? Don't let us say we cannot do this work till we have organized our forces, proved our ability and failed honestly trying to do it.

Let us remember that success is to be determined by what we do, not by what we say. If it is true that "we live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths; in feelings, not in figures on the dial"—if it is true that "he lives best who thinks most, feels noblest, acts best," it is also true that our interest in the work of the enlargement of the Lord's kingdom is to be determined by what we do. We have been talking much, we have said it over and over again, let us now show our faith in missions by our works. R. VANDEVENTER.

Board Meetings.

The Board of Missions and Sunday schools met Tuesday 10 o'clock a. m., Dec. 13th, 1892, the day after the Convention adjourned, and for four hours consulted about the entire work of the year, heard many statements by brethren representing mission fields in all parts of the State, and appointed three committees, viz., first, T. H. Pritchard, J. M. Heck and E. K. Proctor, Jr., to report on the plans of work in the remaining four months for the Centennial of Missions; second, J. C. Scarborough, J. B. Boone and C. Durham, to study, tabulate and properly arrange all applications for aid in mission work now in the hands of the Corresponding Secretary; and third, W. H. Pace, J. D. Boushall and Csrey J. Hunter, to see the city banks and report on the best methods to execute the wish of the Convention as expressed in the resolution directing the Board to borrow money to pay the missionaries the amounts due on salaries for the year ending Nov. 1st, 1892.

To give time for these committees to do their work, the Board adjourned to meet Dec. 20th, 7 o'clock p. m. The Board met according to adjournment.

1. The entire supervision in the prosecutions of collections for the "Permanent Fund" in the Centennial Mission work was given to five members of the committee named by the Convention on that work, viz., T. H. Pritchard, J. L. Carroll, J. D. Hufham, R VanDeventer and J. H. Edwards; and the prosecution of plans for the other part of the Centennial of Missions, viz., "The enlargement of the regular work of Home and Foreign Missions" was reserved to the Board to be done through the Corresponding Secretary of the Convention.

2. The committee to study, tabulate and arrange in proper shape the applications for aid, after a large part of six days given to this work, found that more than twenty thousand dollars, including Associations where fields had not been definitely arranged, had been asked from Executive Committees and from the Board. The Board by a unanimous vote, before it began its work on these applications, determined to limit the appropriations this year in State Missions, including the debt, to fifteen thousand dollars.

To one place only—Benson—was the appropriation larger than last year, to only six places were the appropriations as large, and out of 655 churches and stations aided last year, 242 were left to pay their own way. The most of these 242 mission churches and stations had been aided from two to six years. It is believed that at each place the work will continue to prosper and the brethren now made to feel more than ever their own responsibility and will continue to grow in activity and liberality.

Many of the applications—which said they were "bound to have all they asked for, could not do with a dollar less," and many which came from "one of the most important mission fields in the State," and not a few which came from "the most important field in the State"—had to be left to support themselves, and they will do it. A large number of real mission places, new, never aided before, and where the Baptists have never had preaching, were aided by the Board this time.

3. The committee on the resolution of the Convention to borrow money, reported as follows: "We, the undersigned, having been appointed a committee to ascertain how money may to borrowed to pay outstanding indebtedness of the State Mission Board respectfully submit the following: That we have seen each of the regular banks and ascertained that they will lend money upon personal endorsement of individual members of the Board. They will not loan upon a simple note given by the Board, as a Board, nor upon a simple note given by the Treasurer as Treasurer of the Board. The committee does not approve this course."

Thus it will be seen that the Convention directed the Board to do what it cannot, as a Board, do. Of course, the Convention had no power to direct the Board, as individuals, to borrow money.

The next meeting of the Board will be held Jan. 24th, 1893, 7 o'clock p. m.

The Tropic Land Series. By Mrs. S. B. Titterington. Ten volumes. Price, $3.00.

This is a series of little booklets on missionary topics, for our youngest readers. There are such subjects as these in it considered, "The Land of the Golden Foot," meaning Burma; "Leng Hang's Promise," having reference to work in China; "Little Chrysanthemum," dealing with Japanese scenes; and "Baby Ben's Memorial," telling how a little fellow gathered funds, which formed the nucleus of extensive missionary work. There are ten volumes in the series, and all of them we are sure will not only be instructive to our little folks, but full of entertainment as well.

Letter from Greensboro

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Things are moving finely in Greensboro. We have had to use chairs at every Sunday night service for several weeks. The Lord is with us in our work, and we hope for permanent results. The people are very kind to us. We have never lived among people more thoughtful of the pastor than these Greensboro saints. They pay the pastor's salary by check every Monday morning, and then remember him on Thanksgiving and Christmas with other substantial things. I hope every pastor in North Carolina has been remembered as kindly as the Greensboro pastor. The people came several days before Christmas with their good things in order that the pastor would not have to buy for the holidays and so that the pastor's wife would not be burdened with the usual preparation. We have lived among kind people all our lives, we always had the Warrenton saints standing at the head of the list, side by side we had put the Newport News, Caswell, and Elizabeth City people; but for thoughtfulness and consideration of a pastor's home needs, the Greensboro saints take take the lead. Truly in many respects "the lines have fallen unto us in pleasant places."

May God's blessings be upon the editor of the RECORDER, and may the RECORDER be a greater power in 1893 than in any year of its history. Fraternally,

Good Meeting in Durham.

We have just closed a good and profitable meeting at the Second Baptist church. We were not surrounded by very favorable circumstances; the factory worked every night till nine o'clock, and kept off a good portion of our congregation. But the meeting was by no means a failure on that account. The church is greatly revived, and in a good spiritual condition. Rev. F. M Jordan of the Western North Carolina Convention was with us and did some most excellent preaching. His farewell sermon last Sunday night was pronounced by all who heard it to have been the best preached in this city in many a day. The subject was "Paul's praying for the church at Philippi."

The house was crowded to its utmost capacity, and quite a number were turned away at the door for want of room. Brother Jordan is a wonderful and powerful preacher of the word.

Success to the RECORDER.

Yours in Christ, A. H BUTLER

The Blessings of Giving.

There must be something very good in human nature, or people would not experience so much pleasure in giving; there must be something very bad in human nature, or more people would try the experiment of giving. Those who do try it become enamored of it, and get their chief pleasure in life out of it; and so evident is this that there is some basis for the idea that it is ignorance rather than badness which keeps so many people from being generous. Of course it may become a sort of dissipation, or more than that, a devastation, as many men who have what are called "good wives" have reason to know, in the gradual disappearance of their wardrobe if they chance to lay aside any of it temporarily. The amount that a good woman can give away is only measured by her opportunity. Her mind becomes so trained in the mystery of this pleasure that she experiences no thrill of delight in giving away only the things her husband does not want. Her office in life is to teach him the joy of self-sacrifice. She and all other habitual and irreclaimable givers soon find out that there is next to no pleasure in a gift unless it involves some self-denial.

Let one consider seriously whether he ever gets as much satisfaction out of a gift received as out of one given. It pleases him for the moment, and if it is useful, for a long time; he turns it over, and admires it; he may value it as a token of affection, and it flatters his self-esteem that he is the object of it. But it is a transient feeling compared with that he has when he has made a gift. That substantially ministers to his self-esteem. He follows the gift; he dwells upon the delight of the receiver; his imagination plays about it; it will never wear out or become stale; having parted with it, it is for him a lasting possession. It is an investment as lasting as that in the debt of England. Like a good deed, it grows, and is continually satisfactory. It is something to think of when he first wakes in the morning—a time when most people are badly put to it for want of something pleasant to think of. This fact about giving is so incontestably true that it is a wonder that enlightened people do not more freely indulge in giving for their own comfort. It is, above all else, amazing that so many imagine they are going to get any satisfaction out of what they leave by will. They may be in a state where they will enjoy it, if the will is not fought over; but it is shocking how little gratitude there is accorded to a departed giver compared to a living giver. He couldn't take the property with him, it is said; he was obliged to leave it to somebody. By this thought his generosity is always reduced to minimum. He may build a monument to himself in some institution, but we do not know enough of the world to which he has gone to known whether a tiny monument on this earth is any satisfaction to a person who is free of the universe. Whereas every giving or deed of real humanity done while he was living would have entered into his character, and would be of lasting service to him—that is, in any future which we can conceive.—Charles Dudley Warner, in Harper's Magazine.

A Storm at Sea.

Dr. Arthur T. Pierson in a late sermon at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, closed with these striking allusions:

On my way across the ocean the "Etruria" struck on the fourth day out, one of the most violent storms that has ever swept across the Atlantic, a storm that reached from the coasts of Spain, where the "Roumania" was wrecked, to the coasts of Greenland; and that magnificent vessel ploughed through it for four days. Wednesday, Thursday and Friday and Saturday, until we landed at the quay of Liverpool. That terrible storm made it impossible that we should land our mails or passengers at Queenstown, and tossed us and rolled us to and fro without interruption. Next to the last day of the voyage, as we were coming near the Irish coast, and the men on the look out were anxiously peering through the mist to catch the first indications of approaching land, a sailing vessel passed within perhaps, two hundred yards of the "Etruria," and the first thing we saw as we were passing her were the signals raised from the mast, and I asked Captain Haines, "What do these signals mean?" He says: "She has lost her reckoning, and she wants to know what her longitude is?" She was in the midst of the violence of this storm making her way through the sea, and she knew the Irish coast must be not far off, with its terrible rocks and she dared not go forward without a knowledge of her longitude. It was just after Captain Haines, with his officers, had taken his observations with the sextant when the sun came through the clouds for a few moments, and revealed his shining face, and he knew just exactly where we were, the very degree and minute both of latitude and longitude. So he ran up immediately in answer to the signals of the other vessel, four flags on the "Etruria," and they told this sailing vessel just where she was, and gave her longitude.

LATITUDE AND LONGITUDE.

It was one of the most pathetic incidents that ever happened to me in crossing the great Atlantic Ocean, and I thought to myself, oh, how many souls there are that are at sea, and they don't know their longitude. The rocks are before them, and they know not with what suddenness and severity they may dash upon the rocks, and they dare not go forward; an awful storm is sweeping over them, they are plunging into the trough of the sea, and they run up signals, and if you only had your eyes open you could see the signals of many a soul in this house to-night—"I want to find my longitude and latitude. Where am I? I don't know myself; I have not seen the sun in many days, or the stars; there is an awful tempest on me; where am I? Are the rocks near by? Won't you tell me my longitude? Won't you tell me my latitude?" Ah, my friend, I can tell you what your latitude and longitude is. Blessed be God, I have taken my observation, I have caught a glimpse of that Sun, the Sun of Righteousness, and in the midst of all these clouds I have taken my observation. I bless God I know where I am. And I can tell you where you are—lost, without Jesus Christ; the rocks of the coast are just ahead; you don't know your way into the channel, you haven't yet found out where you are. Won't you hear the word of God and the voice of Christ? Won't you let him tell you as he has told me what are your latitude and longitude? Here this precious table of the Lord tells you what he did for you; it shows you the open way into the channel. Why, if you look to night you can see the Fastnet Light, it is just shining over those tempestuous waters through the mist—"Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world." May God help us to turn from sin and Satan to-night, and to accept him who brings God down to us and takes us up to God, and tells us God's truth with God's certainity, and out of the death of sin gives us the life everlasting!

Serve It Up Warm.

The gospel is heaven's food for man's soul. It is adapted to all his necessities, and is fitted to nourish and gladden. It is food that must be served by man to the fellow-man, and as God has given it to us. It comes to us from the very heart of God, warm with the blood of Christ and should not lose any of its heat when passing from man to man. Earthly food is generally not so palatable or nourishing when cold as it is when warm, and so it is with this food from heaven. Those who repair to God's house to sit at the gospel table provided by God should not have their food served cold by God's servants. They expect warm food, they will not be satisfied with "cold victuals." If their food is served without passing through warm hearts and without coming from lips that have been "touched with a live coal," the guests will attribute it to neglect or indifference, or laziness, or want of interest in the servants, and they will not likely relish their food nor be nourished properly by it. And if, by such service they are not utterly discouraged, even to the forsaking of the assembling of themselves together for their heavenly food, they will not show much desire for such repasts. Serve up the gospel warm.—The Treasury.

Walking by Faith.

"I like to see where I am going. I don't like the idea of groping about as if I was blind, as long as I have eyes. If God wants us to walk in a certain way, why doesn't he make it plain, so that we can walk by sight? This faith business that you christians talk so much about is unreasonable and absurd."

We were walking together on a road where neither of us had ever been before; we were going to a place that we had never seen. We took that road because somebody, who was an entire stranger, assured us it was the road to X. Just as my companion finished his tirade against faith, we came to where the road forked. Neither of us knew which was the right one. Nobody was in sight whom we could ask. But there was a post with two guide boards on it. The one that pointed eastward had on it the words, "To X, one mile." I said: "What shall we do? We can't see X, or wouldn't know it if we did. The roads are alike. There is nothing in their appearance to help us to a decision. Shall we trust in the guide-board? It may have been put up there just to deceive us; it may have been turned partly around since it was put up. I knew a case of this kind once. A storm prostrated a post with two guide-boards on it. A man came along who couldn't read. He set the post up wrong. People who looked to it for direction were misdirected, and it may be so here. What shall we do?"

"Why, trust to the guide board, of course. It is placed here for that very purpose, and there are a hundred probabilities that it is right to one that it is wrong."

"But wouldn't that be walking by faith, just what you criticise us christians for doing?"

"No; for I see the guide-board."

"True, and so we see our guide-board, which is the Bible. We read in it about the way to heaven; but we don't see heaven any more than you see X from this fork in the road. Our faith in the Bible is just like yours in the guide-board. We take the testimony of that which we see in regard to that which is invisible. We don't know that anybody has ever reached X by following the direction of the guide-board. But we do know that thousands, by trusting in the Bible, have attained to a peace and joy on earth which were the earnest and foretaste of heaven; and that while the neglecters of the Bible have died in darkness and fear, those who walked by faith in its teachings have been able to say, with Stephen: 'I see heaven opened, and Jesus standing at the right hand of God.'"

THE RR DGE.

A little beyond the guide board we came to a stream. There was a bridge over it. I stopped and said: "We must examine this bridge before we go upon it. We don't know that its piers are strong and its timbers sound. It may fall under our weight."

And then my companion laughed, and said: "See those wagon tracks. If scores of vehicles have gone over safely, we can."

"So you propose to walk over a bridge whose strength you have not tested, trusting in wagon tracks, and yet you refuse to accept of the gospel of Christ, which is God's great bridge, although you know of hundreds of men and women who by such acceptance have been made both better and happier. You see that the gospel sustains all the great institutions of modern civilization; that it has never failed, where it has gone, to elevate humanity, and yet you won't trust in it, because you can not see with your natural eyes all its spiritual truths."

We reached X in due time and went to the depot. My companion rushed to the window of the office and purchased a ticket to Y. I waited until he came back, and then said: "What is that you have in your hand?"

"A RAILROAD TICKET,"

he replied. "See! it says 'Good for one first class passage from X to Y.'"

"And you paid a dollar for that bit of pasteboard?"

"Of course I did, for I wanted to go to Y, and there is no other way but to buy a ticket."

"But there is no train here on the track."

"I know; but the time-table says that one will stop here on its way from W. to Y. in ten minutes."

"What a credulous man you are! You have never seen Y.; you have never seen the train which is said to be going there; you never saw that ticket-seller before. You have to trust in his honesty and in the truthfulness of the time-table, and in the fact of which you have no personal knowledge, that this road runs to Y.; and when the train comes, you will get on it, trusting in the safety of the track, the sufficiency of the engine, the fidelity of the engineer. Yes, trusting, trusting, you go through life. You walk by faith. You travel on railroads and steamboats by faith; you confide every day almost every hour in some man, or some n institution, and yet you say that it d to trust in God, in the Bible and in istian institutions which have stood ages."—Sennex Smith, in Journal

A Statement—Explanation.

Editor Recorder:—There is considerable dissatisfaction among the people of the South Fork Association, which held its annual session at Olivet church in Catawba county, concerning the minutes. It is not my purpose to say they have no reason to be dissatisfied, for they have. I, too, am dissatfied, for the reason that the minutes are by no means in good style. It was the first time I had served as Clerk, and, of course, I was not familiar with the work. I re-wrote the minutes three times before I gave them to the printer. As far as I am capable of judging, the manuscript was in good style. I made out all the tables that are usually placed in them. Everything was where it ought to be, and all that was necessary was in the MSS.

I contracted with the Hickory Printing Company for three hundred copies. But when I received the minutes, I found one of the tables omitted entirely, while another was quite imperfect. Besides, there were a great many other imperfections.

Some who do not know the truth of the matter would be disposed to condemn me for not having done my duty. I hope this will set me right before them. I have learned something in the mean time, which I shall practice hereafter.

Fraternally yours. A. W. SETZER.

The Farmer and Politics.

The prosperity of a farmer to day depends more on the methods he employs than on governmental rule. Take seeds for an example: Many farmers who are alive to their own interests in other things are careless in buying seeds. They seem to think that a seed is a seed and there it ends. If there was more knowledge about seeds and greater care exercised in their selection, there would be richer crops and better returns.

Realizing this, D. M. Ferry & Co., the famous seed firm of Detroit, Mich., have embodied in their Illustrated Annual for 1893 much valuable information about seeds and their selection. It contains the knowledge gleaned from many years practical experience in the seed business, and the newest and best things about gardens and gardening. Such a book issued by a firm of unquestioned reliability is of the highest value to every one who plants a seed. Although the cost of printing and embellishing it with beautiful illustrations has been great, it is sent free to any one making application to the above firm.

Since My Husband Died.

Twelve months and more have passed away,
And seasons vanished with the tide,
But life has never seemed the same
Since my husband died.

When I hear that monster Death
Has robbed a home of joy and pride,
My heart goes out with keenest grief
Since my husband died.

Months have passed, yet still I weep,
And many bitter tears have dried
And left their furrows on my cheek
Since my husband died.

When the western breezes fan my brow
I think those very winds have sighed
Round the spot so dear to me now
Since my husband died.

Now in humble submission I bow,
For my Saviour heard me when I cried,
And I lean harder on him now,
Since my husband died.

REV. W. E. PENN, author of the popular song-book, "Harvest Bells," makes the following statement:

I am an evangelist (Baptist) well known in the Southern and Western States. I was rapidly getting deaf from catarrh. When in Covington, Ky., five years ago, holding meetings in the First Baptist church, I happened to learn of Dr. J. H. Moore's treatment of catarrh while at the house of a friend. I saw in a moment it was the very thing I needed, and at once got it, and in three months my hearing was perfectly restored. Since that time I have recommended this treatment wherever I have been, and know of several bad cases of lung trouble that were cured by its use.

Several years ago I met a minister on the train who had been compelled to give up his charge on account of lung trouble. I advised him to obtain Dr. Moore's treatment; he did so, and in three months was back at his work, fully restored. All the leading physicians here endorse this treatment; and with great pleasure I give this statement to the public, hoping it will be the means of bringing similar relief to many others.

The Bees—A Sort of Fable.

There was once a fine colony of bees that had its hive in a very fertile place. The flower and the clover grew abundantly about them, and as they were frugal and industrious they prospered greatly. They heeded all the laws of the colony, and obeyed the words of the big bees, who assigned to each his task. Some tended and fed the young bees, some gathered wax and made the beautiful cells, and some stored these with rich honey. Every year they reared and sent out a new swarm to live and work in some other field, and every year they made comb and honey enough for the use of the colony, with something over for the proprietor of the hive and the grounds. All the "workers" were contented and happy, and even the drones would sometimes look on and say, "See what a noble work we are doing!"

Thus the years went by; but when the tenth year came the big bees began to say, "Go to now, we must celebrate our Decennial Year; we must do some great and extra thing as a memorial of our prolonged prosperity. And the saying pleased all the colony of bees, but soon a difference arose as to what the memorial should be. The old nurses of the young bees said: "Let us send out this year two swarms instead of one." The honey-makers said, "Let us double our make of honey this year." But the wax gatherers and the comb builders said, "Oh! no; your swarms and your honey are temporary and ephemeral things, and are too much of the every-day sort to excite any special interest; let us make something large and imposing and permanent—something that will call out enthusiasm and enlist effort. Our plan is to build a great comb, sufficient to store the honey of many years to come, and worthy to stand as a Memorial of our Decennial Year, and let each loyal bee help to built it."

And when the matter came to the Great Council they spoke kindly of all the plans, but decided in favor of the great comb. And they committed the execution of this plan to the big bees. Then the big bees summoned all the colony, and exhorted every one by his loyalty and his public spirit to work with might and main for the great Decennial Comb; but of the regular work of the hive they had but little to say. And such was their eloquence, and such their influence over the docile and obedient bees that straightway there sprang up an enthusiasm for the big memorial Comb that filled and dominated the whole hive. Nothing else was thought of, and all other work was ignored or neglected. "Was not this," said they, "the chosen work of the decennial year, and who would waste time on any other?" And so it came to pass that even the old nurses caught the prevailing spirit, and left off tending the baby bees and went to gather wax for the Comb; and the old honey gatherers found it more easy and popular to gather wax instead, and to make contributions to the great Comb. And soon every bee was working in wax; and "comb" and "wax" and "memorial" were the watchword throughout the camp. Even the drones, as they were crowded and pushed about by the fervid workers, were inspired up to the jesting point by the strong scene. One managed to observe that it was waxing rather warm this season; another, who was of a cynical turn, thought that the big Comb, with no honey in it, would probably prove a lot of big cells; while a third ventured to say that things were beecoming rather cereous. But the work went on, and the structure grew apace; soon it filled almost the whole hive; and at last, as the summer ended, the work of the year was done.

Great was the rejoicing of the busy bees on the completion of their task, and they went into wild enthusiasm over the great Comb. But the reaction came; they now had time to look about them and to think. And what did they find? The working year was over. The autumn had come, and the flowers were dying. There was no honey in store! True, they did not need any for the young bees, for these had all perished of neglect, and no swarm had been sent forth that year; but there was none for the proprietor, none for themselves to keep them alive during the cold winter. Utter destruction stared them in the face. Alas! poor busy bees, faithful, but misguided—of what avail to you that huge but empty Memorial Comb, and how shall its cells ever be filled! A few days ended it with them, and when spring brought back the flowers the once busy hive was silent and dead.

Moral 1. Don't build an extra big barn just now if you have to lose a crop and sell the children's bread in order to build it.

Moral 2. Do your regular work first, and then that which is extra; don't try to do extra first. If you are to build a church with a steeple on it, you will find it better to build the church first, and then the steeple, and not vice versa.

Moral 3. If you take all your money to buy you a purse you will have nothing left to put into it.—C. H. W. in Religious Herald.

Giving Presents.

Above all things, if you give presents, be more anxious to give something which "supplies a want" than to send some pretty trifle which can only prove in the end an additional care. A little forethought and friendly putting of yourself in another's place will make this possible. In the great world of books something can be found to suit every taste. Flowers are always a graceful gift, and can never become burdensome by lasting after one has grown tired of them. There are numberless other things which can be procured, without a wear and tear of mind and body which make the recipient feel as David did of the water from the well of Bethlehem, that what cost so much was too valuable to be accepted.—Susan Anna Brown.

Never risk a joke with a person who is not well-bred and possessed of sense to comprehend it.—La Bruyere.

The Best Time to Bathe.

The best time to bathe is just before going to bed, as any danger of catching cold is thus avoided, and the complexion is improved by keeping warm for several hours after leaving the bath. A couple of pounds of bran put into a thin bag and then in the bath-tub is excellent for softening the skin. It should be left to soak in a small quantity of water several hours before being used. The internal aids to the complexion are most of them well known. The old-fashioned remedy of sulphur and molasses is considered among the best. Charcoal powdered and taken with water is said to be excellent, but it is most difficult to take. A strictly vegetable and fruit diet is followed by many for one or two weeks.—London Lancet.

The Sweet Gum.

The exudation you see clinging to the sweet gum tree in the summer contains a stimulating expectorant that will loosen the phlegm in the throat. Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein cures coughs and croup.

It is the point about which we feel most secure which Satan attacks. He delights to make the christian think there is one temptation to which he is in no danger of yielding. For he knows that pride in our own strength is precursor to a fall.—Western Recorder.

Prayer In and For the Societies.

Some one has said that God's promises are the fulcrum and prayer is the lever by which faith lifts the interests of God's cause into success. Our prayer voices our feeling of helplessness. Earnest, habitual prayer is the greatest agency in missionary work, for this is God's work and without his aid all that we do would be vain.

One object in our Society meetings is to gain information about our various mission fields. Another reason for these meetings is, that this is a convenient way of making regular contributions. But the great object of the meetings, in my opinion, is, that we may have earnest, united, persevering prayers for our mission stations and our missionaries. The one plea of our missionaries that is unchangeable and that is always first, is the same that came ages ago from the Apostle Paul, "Brethren, pray for us." We have the assurance that our united prayers will be answered. Our Heavenly Father said, "I say unto you that if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." (Matthew 18: 19).

If we hope for a blessing on our gifts and an enlargement of our work, we must have more prayer, and this prayer must be under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. If we pray thus, we will find the Divine impulse to give to missions awakened and wisely directed; for no one can pray thus and be unwilling to give. Prayer will quicken and develop this christian duty. If as individuals we get under the control of the Holy Spirit, the churches will then be brought under this power, and all will consider it a blessed privilege to give.

I believe that our increased contributions to missions in the last few years has been largely due to the united prayers of christian women in these Society meetings. When we realize what our prayers can do, how can we withhold them? Let me beg you, my sisters, never to have a missionary meeting without earnest prayers for God's blessing. No matter how simple the prayer, if it comes from the heart, it will reach a throne of grace and the blessing will follow. We must remember that our prayers are to God and not to those around us. If we are called on to pray, ask God to help us, and never mind what people say—do our best and leave the result with him.

If we need these prayers in our Societies for our missionaries, we certainly need them for our Societies, that we may be guided as to the best way of conducting our meetings, and helped in reaching those who do not belong to our Societies, and we need to pray for each other. The trouble is that we are so prone to depend upon our own devices for carrying on God's work instead of going to him for guidance.

We need to pray in our Societies for our Foreign, Home and State Missions. These men are but human and need our prayers that they may be directed as to the best way of carrying on God's work. While I think it so important that we pray in our Societies, it is of equal importance that we should not neglect daily prayer at home.

I have heard missionaries say that they could tell when christians at home were praying for them; they seemed to be specially blessed in their work at such times. What we need is more prayer. God commands us to "pray without ceasing," and he encourages us to pray. The success of our mission work depends upon our prayers. Oh! if we only had faith to ask! Think of it, "Ask and ye shall receive." We have this promise, and God's word never fails.

"My soul! ask what thy wilt;
Thou canst not be too bold;
Since his own blood for thee he spilt,
What else can he withhold."

Matters in Cuba.

On the third of the past month I left for Havana to inspect our mission work in the Island of Cuba, and especially to make the last payment on the house of worship purchased by the Board.

That business having been satisfactorily accomplished, and the last dollar of indebtedness paid, I turned my attention to other interests.

Our mission work is prospering. The first meeting I attended was that of the Neptuno Street Mission. This mission has been compelled to remove recently, and its present quarters are neither so commodious nor inviting as it formerly possessed. Its importance demands better ones, but they are difficult to procure at present. At this meeting three were received for baptism, and ten arose for prayer. This part of our work is in charge of Brother O'Halloran, who with his excellent wife, conducts a school and a Sunday-school in connection with it.

In the Pilar district, where our work is in charge of Brother J. V. Cova, we have a good congregation which crowds the building every Sunday. There were about one hundred in attendance at the weekly prayer meeting, and one was received for baptism. Here we have an excellent day school, and a Sunday-school that rivals in numbers and interest that of Brother Diaz's church. Brother Cova and his wife and other teachers are doing noble work, and the interest here is growing. He has some excellent helpers in his church whose intelligence, influence, and consecration aid greatly in promoting the cause. Though better accommodated than the Neptuno Street Mission, the place is too small for them, and they greatly need increased facilities for their work.

The missions at Los Puentes and San Miguiel I did not visit, though I saw the pastors of both of these churches. At both places we have day schools, and Sunday-schools. Brother Bueno at San Miguiel reports fifteen received for baptism. As he has no baptistry, and the authorities do not allow any religious act to be performed outside their places of worship, and as he is some distance from other stations, he is accustomed to carry his converts to some one of them for baptism.

At Brother Diaz's church there were on Thursday night not less than three hundred at his prayer meeting. The meeting was a spirited one. Many were the thanksgivings to God that their beautiful house of worship was paid for in full and was now surely theirs. Many were the blessings invoked upon their American brethren who had so generously helped them. At this meeting five were received for baptism, three were baptized, and many arose for prayer. Even since my last visit there has been a decided improvement in this congregation, more in the manner and character of the men attending the meetings than in any other respect. Evidently Brother Diaz is reaching a more influential class of the community than ever before. That night I saw men standing up for prayer whose appearance indicated that such men would be an acquisition to any of our churches in Atlanta, Louisville, or Richmond. An American lady, whose long residence in Havana enabled her to know, told me that some of the best families now attend the Baptist church, and on Sunday night I saw such evidences of this as assured me that she was not mistaken. That our Baptist cause is taking a stronger hold in Havana is manifest when looked at from every point of view. In another article I propose to give the facts on which this conviction is based, and the causes that underlie the increasing influence of our principles and our people. I. T. TICHENOR,

Dr. MacArthur's Remarks—Just Once More.

What an artful apologist Bro. J. J. Taylor is. In his eager desire to serve Dr. MacArthur, he quietly and coolly suppresses one half of his thanksgiving remarks, as published, and the particular part to which I took exception—"as a good Republican, I am in no mood for decorations." In these words Dr. MacArthur assumes the responsibility for the lack of decorations on that occasion, and his political and partisan mood is made to account for that lack.

I will not give Bro. Taylor the closing advice he gives me, "Let us not be too righteous," because I think, judging from the fairness with which he stated this case, that he is in no immediate and pressing danger of going too far in that direction.

J. L. CARROLL.

An Appeal in Behalf of a Maggie Nutt Herring Monument

We, the present members of the Maggie Nutt Missionary Society and pupils of Oxford Female Seminary, desire to place in the cemetery of Mt. Airy, where her mortal remains lie buried, a fitting testimonial of our affection for Maggie Nutt Herring, and our appreciation of her lovely character, manifest in the happy, guileless girl, as in the devoted, self sacrificing missionary.

We propose no costly monument with massive pedestal and towering spire—this would not be consistent with the sweetness, gentleness and humility of her nature—but a broken column of pure, white marble, which shall speak to future generations of the fair, young life so freely consecrated to the service of the Master.

Believing that all the old members of the Maggie Nutt Missionary Society, and all the alumnæ and former pupils of O. F. S., will esteem it a privilege to unite with us in raising this monumental stone, we request one and all to send at once at least one dollar with their names to

MISS LIZZIE LOWNDES,
Pres. of M. N. M. S. O. F. S.,
Oxford, N. C.

1. Can any one claim to be a christian who refuses to unit with the church, and who never works for the interest of the Lord's cause? First speaker—Rev. S. L. Page.

2. Should the Sunday-school elect its own officers, or should they be elected by the church? First speaker—J. L. Autry.

3. How shall members of the church be reached so as to induce them all to contribute to the support of the gospel? First speaker—Rev. W. R. Johnson.

R. H. TAYLOR, Chairman.

Acknowledgments.

[The Treasurer requests that when money is sent, that the name of the contributing church, society, or individual, and the object for which the money is intended, be clearly stated. What "ss." Means.

You often see it—"State of North Carolina, county of Wake, 'ss.'" It is to be found at the beginning of acknowledgments and other legal documents, but not one in a dozen can tell you what that cabalistic "ss." stands for. To be short and to the point, the abbreviation is a contraction of the Latin word scilicet, which is also a contraction, having originally been written as scire licate, either of which, you will note, has more than one "s." The word entire, or in its abbreviated state, is equivalent to the old English "to wit," still widely used, the design of both being simply to call particular attention to what follows.—North Carolinian.

The finest business houses in the town have thus been swept away. The work of re building the burned district will be begun shortly.

On Friday December 23d, Mr. Adam Siler and his wife, both quite old, were brutally murdered at their home near Siler City, Chatham county. Robbery was evidently the motive of the deed, as a small amount of money was taken from one of the bureau drawers. The murderer made his escape. The Chatham Record says that this is the third time within the past few years, that two old persons have been murdered at their homes in this county.

On the night of December 1st an unknown man entered the house of Mr. Randall McDonald who lived with his two aged maiden sisters in Packet township, Moore county, and demanded of him his money. The sisters, remonstrated with the man, when he suddenly turned upon them and shot both of them down. Miss Mary McDonald was instantly killed and her sister was seriously injured. The ruffian then robbed Mr. McDonald who is very old, of what money he had and escaped. Several persons supposed to have been implicated in the murder were arrested, but subsequently discharged as they could not be identified.

A Costly Book.

From a money stand-point Rome boasts of the most valuable book in the world. It is a Hebrew Bible, preserved in the Vatican at Rome, and remarkable for its size, weighing over 325 pounds, and requiring usually three men to carry it. In 1512 "a syndicate of Venitian Jews" offered Pope Julius its weight in gold, or $125,000, for it; but, though needing the money greatly, he refused it. According to the present standard value of gold, as compared with that period, the book ought to be worth, upon the terms of those old Jews, about $375,000, and it is doubtful if Rome would sell it for any such amount. Yet, notwithstanding the wonderful money value placed upon it, it is of little practical service. It is too cumbersome for use, and is preserved as a momento of the past, and as a library treasure. Occasionally some scholar may examine it as an ancient curosity, or consult it for comparison in textual reading; but it is not a book for daily use, or for mind enrichment, or heart comfort, or life regulation. While it has its place as a legacy from bygone ages, each man and woman and child in christian lands can have the Bible in his own language and at a small cost, which he can study day by day. We ought to be thankful that we have not the Bible in costly folio simply for the few, but in cheap form for the many. All who will can have it. Many a poor woman whose Bible costs but fifty cents makes better use of it than the possessor of the finest and rarest of Bibles.—Presbyterian Observer.

GOODWIN—Sarah Goodwin, daughter of Exom Goodwin, at her home in Rockyhock, Chowan county, N. C., some weeks ago fell asleep in Jesus, with the hope of waking in the resurrection morn. In the language of David, we can go to her, but she can't return to us, therefore we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

BENNETT—On Nov. 24, 1892, at his residence near Clinton, N. C., Hardy K. Bennett. He was born May 1, 1838; married to Mary M. Butler March 14, 1867, of which union four children are living; on Nov. 24, 1890, he was married to Eliza E. Cooper, who survives him with four children. He was a member of the Clinton church, a devoted husband and father. The obituary which he wrote upon the death of his first wife, published in the RECORDER of Oct. 29, 1879, evinces much native ability as a writer, and breathes the true poetic spirit. It is one of the best of its kind.

PIGFORD—On Dec. 4, 1892, near Clinton, N. C., James L. Pigford, aged fifty-three years. He was twice married—first, to Mary Carr on Feb. 20, 1867, and again to Susan Herring on June 6, 1888. He faithfully served his country in the Confederate service for four years. He was converted in the Presbyterian church when quite young. For several years his views gradually changed. Both of his devoted wives were earnest members of the Clinton Baptist church, and he was baptized by the writer with eighty-three others last fall. He bore his protracted and severe sufferings with heroic christian faith. His surviving wife and five children have the heartfelt sympathies of a large circle of friends.

GRAVES—Died, on Nov. 6th, in Caswell county, N. C., Mrs. Effie Graves, wife of Asariah Graves, Jr. She was a Miss Trogden, and first came among us as a teacher, and won the hearts of the people. This faithful and true wife, so much beloved, was taken away in less than a year after her marriage, leaving a little girl a few weeks old which she gave to her sister. She was a member of Leaksville Baptist church, and died full of faith.

Books of the Bible.
BY PROF. B. C. TAYLOR.
16mo, 192 pages. Price, 75 cents.

Prof. Taylor takes the Bible by books and analyzes them according to author, time of writing, relation to other books, contents, specific points, etc. We know of no volume that in so small a space gives so much.

Some such knowledge of the various books of the Bible, or of the Bible as a whole, should be in the possession of every preacher, teacher, or Bible student. How many christians there are to whom the Bible is only a piece of patchwork, without order or harmony in point of facts or dates. They have not the slightest idea of how the various books of the Bible are related historically or chronologically, or whether such relation exists.—Journal and Visitor.

The New Year.

While with the ceaseless course the sun
Hasted through the former year,
Many souls their race have run,
Nevermore to meet us here.

Fixed in an eternal state,
They have done with all below;
We a little longer wait,
But how little, none can know.

Swiftly thus our fleeting days
Bear us down life's rapid stream;
Upward, Lord, our spirits raise!
All below is but a dream.

Thanks for mercies past receive;
Pardon of our sins renew;
Teach us, henceforth, how to live
With eternity in view.

Bless thy word to young and old;
Fill us with a Saviour's love;
And, when life's short tale is told,
May we dwell with thee above!

(John Newton, 1779.)

"Advice" to a Boy.

In one of the large railroad offices in this country is a comparatively young man, who is at the head of a large department. When he entered the service of the company, five years ago, he was green and awkward. He was given the poorest paid work in the department. The very first day of his employment by the company, a man who had been at work in the same room for years approached him and gave him a little advice. "Young fellow, I want to put a few words in your ear that will help you. This company is a soulless corporation, that regard employees as so many machines. It makes no difference how hard you work, or how well. So you want to do just as little as possible and retain your job. That's my advice. This is a slave pen, and the man who works overtime or does any specially fine work wastes his strength. Don't you do it." The young man thought over the "advice," and after a quiet little struggle with himself he decided to do the best and the most he knew how, whether he received any more pay from the company or not. At the end of a year the company raised his wages and advanced him to a more responsible position. In three years he was getting a third more salary than when he began, and in five years he was the head clerk in the department; and the man who had condescended to give the greenhorn "advice" was working under him at the same figure that represented his salary eleven years before. This is not a story of a goody-goody little boy who died early, but of a live young man who exists in flesh and blood to-day, and is ready to give "advice" to other young men just beginning to work their way into business. And here it is: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."—Youth's Companion.

After Coal What?

Coal was hardly used at all three hundred and fifty years ago, reflects Mr. J. E. Taylor, F. L. S., yet since then Great Britain has consumed nearly half the stock deposited by nature in its coal-cellars many millions of years ago. At the present rate of increase in consumption, what will be the condition of these cellars after another three hundred and fifty years? It is certainly indicated that this period will witness a marvelous development of economic science. Coal, long before that, as a form of energy will be regarded as a somewhat antique and worked out material. The ebbing and flowing tides, the shifting winds, the waters running to the ocean, perhaps even earthquake and volcanic energy, will have taken its place. Indeed, a line of inquiry and research now going on may possibly effect the commercial interests of the whole world within the short space of the next five years. This relates to the use of petroleum, already being tried on steamers and locomotives on the Caspian sea and vicinity. The coal fields of the world will certainly be worked out within an historically brief period, but a distinguished Russian chemist finds grounds for believing that petroleum is still being formed by the action of water on heated metallic deposits, and that the supply will be permanent.—Exchange.

Mr. Childs to Girls.

My advice to the girls and women with whose educational progress I have in any respect been identified, writes Mr. George W. Childs in an article on "Girls I Have Educated" in the December Ladies' Home Journal, has always been to keep out of debt, to dress plainly, to be careful in their behavior toward men, and as careful in their behavior toward women; to be respectful to their employers, and to be truthful. I have not scrupled to say to them that in my experience the most refined women have been those whose tastes in matters of dress have been most quiet and plain, and that the working girl should above all things avoid extravagance in dress. I have found that girls and women are apt to run into debt for clothes, and whenever such cases have come to my knowledge I have proffered my assistance toward restoring their credit, upon the express stipulation that they should never again put a chain of that sort about their necks.

Colds, coughs, bronchitis, and all throat and lung diseases are effectively treated with Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. To neglect the use of proper remedies for these ailments is to induce consumption, which is responsible for one-sixth of the mortality in civilized countries.

How to Roll an Umbrella.

"No, not that way! I never knew one man in a hundred to do it right," said the clerk in the umbrella store.

His remarks were directed at a customer, who had proceeded to roll up a recently purchased umbrella to return it to its case. He had done what ninty-nine per cent. of persons who handle umbrellas do when they attempt to gather the folds of cloth in a neat roll around the stick. He had grasped the handle with his right hand and was twisting the silk through with his left hand.

"That will spoil that umbrella when you have repeated the operation half a dozen times," the clerk continued, "and then you will be coming here and complaining that that six dollar umbrella wasn't worth fifty cents. Now, see what you were doing! You were making a pretty roll, but did you notice that you were twisting the ribs and braces in a spiral around that stick as well as the cloth? You may have noticed that your umbrella sticks and catches when you try to raise it. That's because you don't know how to roll it. You twist the joints of the ribs and braces all out of shape. There, you see, you have twisted the ends of those ribs all around in a bunch on one side of the handle. Now let me show you how an umbrella should be rolled."

The clerk took the maltreated article, shook out the folds of silk, and worked the spiral out of the ribs, and proceeded to demonstrate the proper methods of umbrella rolling. Grasping the handle in his right hand, he encircled the silk at the tip with his left, which he slipped down about half way of the cloth, pressing the ribs and braces firmly against the stick. The right hand was then shifted to the tips of the ribs, which were held firmly against the stick, while the left hand adjusted the roll of cloth around them. By this method the ribs were kept straight along the stick and not partly twisted around it, as the customer's roll.—N. Y. Sun.

Arkwright.

When Arkwright had almost perfected his first power loom, he found that the yarn as it was delivered through the rollers had an awkward, fatal trick of curling back. He puzzled over this serious obstacle. At last he took the local blacksmith, who made his early machines, into counsel, and the man, one Strutt, told him that he thought he could cure it. Arkwright asked him his terms. Ten years' partnership and equal profits, was the reply. This was too much for Arkwright, who, like Nasman of old, turned and went away in a rage. But the yarn still curled, and dashed his hopes. At last he reluctantly yielded to the blacksmith. Then occurred another scene. The blacksmith insisted that the deed of partnership should be executed and enrolled. Arkwright stormed. But the local vulcan was firm. When the deed was signed, the blacksmith went behind the rollers, and apparently rubbed one of them with his hand. Instantly the yarn was delivered as was wished, and the astonished and enraged Arkwright found that his new partner had only rubbed one of the rollers with a piece of chalk, in other words, proved that one of them should have a different surface from the other. The execrations of the enraged manufacturer were unspeakable. But the compact held, and in the end the blacksmith became Lord Belper.—Exchange.

Dog Training.

"One of the secrets of success in dog-training lies in making the animal attached to its teacher. Make a friend and companion of the young dog, treat him so that he would rather be with you and doing what you bid than fooling about by himself, and his education becomes comparatively easy. Every lesson should be made perfectly clear to the pupil, and no punishment should be inflicted until the trainer is certain that the dog understands what is wanted of him, but refuses to perform the task. Every prompt obedience to orders should be rewarded by a kindly pat on the head, the meaning of which any dog understands."—Outing for June.

Only good things are imitated, therefore be sure that you get the genuine Salvation Oil, if you want to cure your rheumatism.

Ready Beforehand.

"What are you doing now? I never saw a girl that was so continually finding something to do!"

"I'm only going to sew a button on my glove."

"Why, you are not going out are you?"

"O, no! I only like to get things ready beforehand; that's all."

And this little thing had been persisted in by Rose Hammond until it had become a fixed habit, saving her more trouble than she herself had any idea of; more time, too. Ready beforehand—try it. As surely as you do, faithfully, you will never relinquish it for the slipshod, time enough-when-it's-wanted way of doing.—Selected.

They Cannot Let Go.

The mechanism of the leg and foot of a chicken, or other bird that roosts on a limb, is a marvel of design. It often seems strange that a bird will sit on a roost and sleep all night without falling off, but the explanation is perfectly simple.

The tendon of the leg of a bird that roosts is so arranged that when the leg is bent at the knee the claws are bound to contract, and thus hold with a sort of death-grip the limb round which they are placed.

Put a chicken's feet on your wrist, and then make the bird sit down, and you will have a practical illustration on your skin that you will remember for some time. By this singular arrangement, seen only in such birds as roost, they will rest comfortably and never think of holding on, for it is impossible for them to let go till they stand up.—Exchange.

Talks About Law—No. 9.

BY JUDGE R. W. WINSTON.

THE LAW OF SELF-DEFENCE.

In our State, whenever a person admits that he has killed another with a deadly weapon, the law supplies malice; and, if nothing else appear, he is guilty of murder. Facts in mitigation or justification of his conduct must appear in evidence, otherwise he pays the capital penalty. As is well known, in all criminal cases, the State must satisfy the jury, beyond all reasonable doubt, of the guilt of the accused. But this rule has no application when one admits that he has slain another. For when he makes this admission there is an end to all reasonable doubt, and the defendant has the burden cast upon himself to show facts and circumstances of excuse.

Every killing is a homicide. But, of course, there are several grades of homicide.

When no particle of blame attaches to one in killing another, the law says that he is justified in the act. The familiar illustration of this is when the sheriff does execution upon one by hanging him.

Then we have the general classification called excusable homicide. This may arise in several ways. If a person be doing a lawful act and accidentally kill another, this is excusable homicide through misadventure. Or if one is set upon by another, and being "pressed to the wall," slay his assailant to save his own life or his person from great bodily harm, this is called excusable homicide in self-defence. It is of this that we propose, in part, to write in this article. Before doing so, however, we will explain that there is another and deeper grade of homicide called felonious homicide. If the felonious killing be with malice, and this malice may be express or implied, we have the crime at which human nature shudders, called murder. But if the felonious slaying be without malice, we have manslaughter.

Let us consider, therefore, what are the excuses that the law adjudges sufficient to reduce the grade of the killing from murder to excusable homicide or to manslaughter.

In the first place, let it be borne in mind that words, however grievous, will not justify a blow, or excuse, or indeed even mitigate a killing. That is to say, if one use the most opprobrious epithet to your very face and, in consequence of the same, you strike him, you are guilty of a battery; or, if you kill him, you are guilty of murder. True, in the former case the party who used the words would be indictable for an affray, but you would not be excusable. Generally speaking, the party who provokes the difficulty is the more guilty of the two, and is so treated by the courts. What will excuse a blow? and what will excuse a killing? Now quite a variety of facts and circumstances will mitigate a killing from murder to manslaughter, but what will absolutely excuse the fact?

If one strike and slay another to save his own life or his person from great bodily harm, which the assailant is about to and would inflict but for the disabling blow, the slaying is excusable. So if one kill another to prevent a felony threatened and begun, and which if committed would be punishable with death, he is excusable.

For example, if a man were breaking into your dwelling in the night time and you were to shoot and kill him to prevent the crime, you would be excused. So if one make a criminal assault on a female and is killed to prevent it, it would be excusable homicide. But after the assault was consummated if the assailant were killed, not to prevent his escape, but in the heat of passion, this would be murder.

Even if one kill the violator of the sanctity of home in flagrante delicto it is not excusable homicide, but manslaughter. The famous Daniel Sickles trial for the slaying of Philip Barton Key in Washington City many years ago illustrated this point, and in the trial, the opinions of our North Carolina Judges were often quoted.

If one, arrested by an officer for a felony, is making his escape and it become necessary to shoot in order to hold the prisoner, this is excusable homicide, perhaps. Certain it is, if the offender is resisting arrest. So it is apprehended that if a private citizen arrest one who has committed a capital felony, and the offender endeavors to escape, and it becomes necessary to shoot and kill in order to hold the prisoner, this would be excusable. Many years ago a man shot and killed another who was walking in his front yard in the night time. The party was not committing any offence. Our courts held that to kill a man to prevent a bare civil trespass was murder.

Our statute provides that every person present at any breach of the peace shall endeavor to suppress the same, and if necessary may arrest the offenders.

A case occurred in the county of Wayne in 1870 which is interesting. Barney Bryant had a hog stolen. He suspected a fellow named Cogdell. Armed himself and went to Cogdell's house. Cogdell, being accused by Bryant of the theft, ran away. Bryant ordered him four times to stop, and then shot and hit him. For this Bryant was tried and convicted. "Had he killed when he shot it would have been manslaughter at the least," say the court. It will be observed that this stealing did not occur in the presence of Bryant; nor did he say that he came to arrest Cogdell; nor was it shown that the shooting was necessary to prevent his escape; nor did he have a warrant.

In this case the court clearly intimate that one is not to be excused who slays another not arrested, but fleeing from arrest for a minor felony, such as theft and the like.

But it would seem that if the offence committed be capital, and a person present makes known his intention to arrest, and the felon flee he may be killed if it be necessary to kill to prevent his escape.

Therefore, in these latter days of burglary, we may take courage, for if the burglar is fleeing from our house in the dark and we command him to halt and be under arrest, and he fail to do so, but continues his flight, and we shoot and kill him, and the shot be necessary to prevent his escape, this would be excusable on our part.

* * We have seen that words will not excuse a blow or mitigate a killing. But a blow will often reduce the grade of homicide from murder to manslaughter.

For example, if two men meet and fight willingly, and in the heat of passion one slay the other, this is but manslaughter. The law has regard for the weakness of mankind.

Sometimes one man will have a grudge against another, malice the law calls it, and he will provoke that other to strike, and after the first blow is stricken, the party assaulted will draw his weapon and take human life. If the jury find such facts as these it would make a case of murder. We do not have malice if the crime be manslaughter. "Malice prepense" and the "furor brevis" do not go together. "Malice excludes passion; passion presupposes the absence of malice." This doctrine was laid down in Madison Johnson's case, in the first volume of Iredell's Law. And while it has not been changed to this day, still our court, in a case in the 80 N. C. R. against one Barnwell, say that if there be malice, and a reconciliation take place, and then a killing, on a first provocation, the law will refer the motive to the latest provocation, and not to the old grudge.

Generally speaking, therefore, we may say that a killing upon provocation is not murder but manslaughter.

But in a case against one Curry, in the first of Jones, we find three exceptions to this rule as follows:

1. When there is provocation, no matter how strong, if the killing is done in an unusual manner, evincing thereby deliberate wickedness of heart, it is murder.

2. Where there is but slight provocation, if the killing is done with an excess of violence out of all proportion to the provocation, it is murder.

3. Where the right to chastise is abused, if the measure of chastisement, or the weapons used, be likely to kill, it is murder.

A drunken fellow caught hold of the bridle rein of a man's horse and wouldn't let the rider proceed on his journey. His journey was delayed about ten minutes. The men were somewhat related, and had just been drinking together. Finally the man on the horse dismounted, knocked the offender down with a jug, filled with molasses, and, after felling him to the ground, crushed in his skull with the stone jug, adding, "D—n you, lie there." This was held only manslaughter; and was not embraced in the second exception above because the provocation was not very slight, and there was no malice, and the weapon was not prepared to kill. This case is reported in the fifth of Jones.

We often hear of one "retreating to the wall."

What does it mean? Certainly not that he shall actually go back until he come to an obstruction which prevents further retreat. It means simply that the party assaulted must flee as far as he conveniently can either by reason of some wall, ditch or other impediment, or as far as the fierceness of the assault will permit him.

If one is defending his habitation, and is without fault himself, he is not compelled to retreat.

So if a person unlawfully and feloniously assault one, retreat is not necessary. Nor does an officer, lawfully arresting one, have to retreat to the wall.

But if the assault is without any felonious intent, the person assaulted may not stand his ground and kill his adversary, if there be any way of escape open to him. So, even if one enter into a fight willingly and in the progress of the fight he be put to the wall, and it become necessary in order to save his own life or his person from great harm that he kill his adversary, this is excusable homicide.

It would not be proper to conclude this paper without stating that if a person is assaulted in such a way as to induce in him a reasonable belief that he is in actual danger of losing his life, he will be justified in defending himself, even if the danger prove to be apparent only and not real. For example, if one draw and present a gun or pistol at another, and that other reasonably fearing his life to be in danger, shoot and kill first, this will be excusable; although the dead man's weapon should be found afterwards to be not loaded.

A SUGGESTION.

In North Carolina, at the present time, we have three verdicts in cases of homicide: (1) guilty, (generally); (2) guilty of manslaughter; (3) not guilty.

Our Judges now, often, are compelled to charge the jury that the prisoner is guilty of murder or of nothing. The law has no grade between the two. In other words, cases arise in which there is no element of manslaughter. It is, hence, guilty or not guilty.

Juries are human, and are loth to take human life; hence the guilty sometimes escape entirely; whereas, if there were an intermediate grade of crime of less gravity than murder, it would rarely occur that there would be a miscarriage of justice.

New York State and Texas and Tennessee, and many others, have changed the law of homicide very materially and with satisfactory results.

There they have murder in the first degree and murder in the second degree.

All murders which are perpetrated by means of poisoning or lying in wait, or which are committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery, mayhem or burglary, and all other kinds of wilful, deliberate and premeditated killings, are murder of the first degree.

Murder in the second degree includes all other kinds of killing not embraced in the definition of murder in the first degree. So that when the unlawful killing of a human being is the result of malice, suddenly produced at the time the fatal blow is struck, and the killing is without premeditation or deliberation, it is murder in the second degree.

Our law givers now, about convening, will find it interesting to see if the change is desirable and necessary.

The Hymn-Books I Like Best.

I can't sing a hymn. I have never written one. I do not claim to be a judge of the good points of one. Nor do I claim excellence in hymn reading—an accomplishment never attained by many preachers.

Yet, I love to read hymns that express the varied experiences of the Lord's people, and their outgoings after God, holiness and heaven.

I have a few old hymn books, one commendable feature of which is the absence of the jig music that mars so many of our modern books.

The first book I'll speak of is the "Olney Hymns, by Rev. John Newton, Rector of St. Mary, Woolnoth, London." The preface bears date Feb. 15, 1779. My copy is an American reprint of a somewhat later date. Although only the name of Newton appears on the title page, the book is the product of the joint labors of John Newton and William Cowper. The latter says, in the preface, that the work "was intended as a monument to perpetuate the remembrance of an intimate and endeared friendship. With this pleasing view, I entered upon my part, which would have been smaller than it is, and the book would have appeared much sooner and in a very different form, if the wise, though mysterious, providence of God had not seen fit to cross my wishes. We had not proceeded far upon our proposed plan before my dear friend (Cowper) was prevented by a long and afflicting indisposition from affording me any farther assistance."

All the hymns in the book were composed by Newton and Cowper,—the former having written nearly three hundred, while the latter wrote about sixty of them in consequence of his "indisposition."

Perhaps some account of the authors would enhance the reader's interest in their hymn-book.

William Cowper was born at Berkhamstead, in Hertfordshire, England, in the year 1731. At a very early age, he evinced that morbid tendency to diffidence, melancholy and despair which, in later years, led to mental derangement and withdrawal from the stern duties of public life. Educated at Westminster, he entered the legal profession, from which he retired at the age of thirty-three. "I rambled," said he, "from the thorny road of my austere patroness, jurisprudence, into the primrose paths of literature and poetry."

Lindley Murray says that Cowper was appointed Clerk of the Journals of the House of Lords; and, a parliamentary dispute making it necessary for him to appear at the bar of the House, his terrors on this occasion rose to so astonishing a height that they overwhelmed his reason, and he was obliged to relinquish a station so formidable to his singular sensibility. Soon afterwards his mind became clear and tranquil, and he settled in the town of Huntingdon in the year 1765.

During his lucid intervals he wrote with a masterful hand, the works that have justly placed his name among the literary celebrities of Great Britain.

I have seen somewhere the statement that at one time, while laboring under great depression and the feeling that he had been shut out from the mercy of God, he procured a bottle of poison with suicidal intent, and having reached his room, he discovered that the bottle had been broken and the poison spilled. The discovery of the accident he interpreted as a token of the Divine favor, and in grateful acknowledgment of the same, he sat down and wrote the hymn beginning:

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform," &c.

Many of his hymns are found in all the popular hymn-books of the present day. I am sorry that many of them are not printed as he wrote them. For instance, in that beautiful hymn whose first stanza begins—

"There is a fountain filled with blood," &c.,

Cowper wrote—

"The dying thief rejoiced to see
That fountain in his day;
And there have I, as vile as he,
Washed all my sins away"— expressing an accomplished fact, a blessed personal experience already attained.

The hymn, as now printed in most of the books, expresses a hope that may be fulfilled or an experience that may be attained. Besides, I fail to find the sixth and seventh stanzas in any book that I can lay my hand upon.

In addition to the many hymns he wrote, he composed many pathetic and descriptive poems, evincing the exquisite delicacy of his feelings and the goodness of his heart. His "Task," which placed him in the front rank of English poets, was published in 1785, and his "Translation of the Iliad and Odyssey of Homer in Blank Verse" appeared in 1791.

The inquietude and darkness of the poet's latter years were terminated by a gentle and tranquil dissolution in the year 1800, at the age of about sixty nine years.

I cannot forbear transcribing a few lines from that excellent poem "Cowper's Grave," by Elizabeth Barrett Browning—

"It is a place where poets crowned may feel the heart's decaying,
It is a place where happy saints may weep amid their praying;
Yet let the grief and humbleness as low as silence
languish!
Earth surely now may give her calm to whom she gave her anguish.

"O poets! from a maniac's tongue was poured the deathless singing!
O christians! at your cross of hope a hopeless hand was clinging!
O men! this man in brotherhood your weary paths beguiling,
Groaned inly while he taught you peace, and died while ye were smiling!"

John Newton was born in England July 24, 1725. His pious mother early taught him the Scriptures and commended him to God in her prayers. Says he, in his autobiography, "though in process of time I sinned away all the advantages of these early impressions, yet they were for a great while a restraint upon me; they returned again and again, and it was very long before I could wholly shake them off; and when the Lord at length opened my eyes, I found a great benefit from the recollection of them. Farther, my dear mother, besides the pains she took with me, often commended me with many prayers and tears to God; and I doubt not but I reap the fruits of these prayers to this hour."

His mother died July 11th, 1732, or before he had completed his seventh year. His father, a sea going man, afterwards married again, and young Newton went to sea, and for many years was engaged in the African slave trade.

He became aceptical, wicked and disgustingly profane, shocking even his wicked fellow-seamen by his horrid blasphemy. He tells us himself: "I know not that I have ever since met so daring a blasphemer; not content with common oaths and imprecations, I daily invented new ones; so that I was often seriously reproved by the captain who was himself a very passionate man and not at all circumspect in his expressions. * * * When we met with many distasters, he often would tell me that, to his great grief, he had a Jonah on board; that a curse attended me wherever I went; and that all the troubles he met with in the voyage were owing to his having taken me into the vessel."

His many perils and hair-breadth escapes from death, on land and sea, seem to have made but little impression upon him. "The Lord had now," he continues, "to appearance given me up to judicial hardness; I was capable of anything. I had not the least fear of God before my eyes, nor (so far as I remember) the least sensibility of conscience."

Two instances of great suffering and humiliation I cannot forbear to mention:

While on the western coast of Africa, the captain of the vessel having died, and Newton not being on good terms with the mate, and fearing that he would be transferred to a man of-war, he determined to remain in Africa. On an island near the western coast, he was taken sick and committed to the care of a negro woman, who soon manifested great dislike towards him. But I will let him tell the story himself: "I had sometimes not a little difficulty to procure a draught of cold water when burning with fever. My bed was a mat spread upon a board or chest, and a log of wood my pillow. When my fever left me and my appetite returned, I would gladly have eaten, but there was no one gave unto me. She lived in plenty herself, but hardly allowed me sufficient to sustain life, except now and then, when in the highest good humor, she would send me victuals in her own plate after she had dined; and this (so greatly was my pride humbled) I received with thanks and eagerness, as the most eager beggar does an alms. * * * * When I was very slowly recovering, this woman would sometimes pay me a visit, not to pity or relieve, but to insult me. She would call me worthless and indolent, and compel me to walk, which when I could hardly do, she would set her attendants to mimic my motion, to clap their hands, laugh, throw limes at me. * * * Nor did I suffer less from the inclemency of the weather and the want of clothes. The rainy season was now advancing; my whole suit was a shirt, a pair of trowsers, a cotton handkerchief instead of a cap, and a cotton cloth about two yards long to supply the want of upper garments; and, thus accoutred, I have been exposed for twenty, thirty, perhaps near forty hours together, in incessant rains accompanied with strong gales of wind, without the least shelter, when my master was on shore. I feel to this day some faint returns of the violent pains I then contracted. The excessive cold and wet I endured in that voyage, and so soon after I had recovered from a long sickness, quite broke my constitution and my spirits. The latter were soon restored; but the effects of the former still remain with me as a needful memento of the service and wages of sin."

The second instance. Newton had, while his ship was lying at Plymouth, deserted his post, was caught and carried back to Plymouth. "I walked," says he, "through the streets guarded like a felon. My heart was full of indignation, fear and shame. I was confined two days in the guard-house, then sent on board my ship, kept awhile in irons, then publicly stripped and whipped: after which I was degraded from my office, and all my former companions were forbidden to show me the least favor or even to speak to me."

Many other instances of suffering and narrow escape might be related; but these must suffice.

John Newton's conversion was a miracle of grace! Let no poor prodigal, who may chance to read this, despair of God's mercy or his own salvation.

It was Newton who said, "When I get to heaven, I shall see three wonders there: the first wonder will be to see many people there whom I did not expect to see; the second wonder will be, to miss many people whom I did expect to see; and the third and greatest wonder of all will be, to find myself there."

A short time before he died, his sight having failed him, he would offer comments on Scripture passages read at family worship and lead in prayer. On one of these occasions the lesson was that portion of Scripture in which Paul says, "By the grace of God, I am what I am." Newton's affecting comment followed: "I am not what I ought to be. Ah! how imperfect and deficient! I am not what I wish to be. I abhor that which is evil, and I would cleave to that which is good. I am not what I hope to be. Soon, soon, I shall put off mortality, and with mortality, all sin and imperfection! Yet, though I am not what I ought to be, nor what I wish to be, nor what I hope to be, I can truly say I am not what I once was, a slave to sin and Satan; and I can heartily join with the Apostle and acknowledge, 'By the grace of God, I am what I am!' Let us pray!"

I believe it is not generally known that Newton once visited the United States. It was during his last voyage before his marriage, which latter event took place Feb. 1st, 1750. He sailed from Antigua, one of the West India islands, to Charleston, S. C. "In this place," he continues, "there are many serious people; but I knew not where to find them out; indeed I was not aware of a difference, but supposed that all who attended public worship were good christians. I was as much in the dark about preaching, not doubting but whatever came from the pulpit must be very good. I had two or three opportunities of hearing a dissenting minister named Smith, who, by what I have known since, I believe to have been an excellent and powerful preacher of the gospel; and there was something in his manner that struck me, but I did not rightly understand him. The best words that men can speak are ineffectual till explained and applied by the Spirit of God who alone can open the heart."

A few years after his marriage he abandoned his seafaring life and entered upon a career of great usefulness as author and minister of the gospel.

Through his instrumentality, Claudius Buchanan was converted, entered the ministry and went to the East Indies. Buchanan's "Star in the East" led Adoniram Judson to enter the foreign field. Newton was instrumental in the conversion of Thomas Scott from the dark mazes of Socinianism to the belief, practice and proclamation of evangelical truth. Scott also wrote a commentary on the Bible. It is said that Newton, with Doddridge, was instrumental in the conversion of

AFTER THE CONVENTION.

The Baptists of North Carolina have recently closed, at the Tabernacle church of this city, one of the largest, most enthusiastic and successful Convention meetings in the history of the denomination in this State. The attendance, the personnel, the speeches, were inspiring; and, as the meeting was held in the Centennial year of modern Baptist missions, it may be said to have been epochal in its nature. The introductory sermon was preached by Rev. J. S. Hardaway of Oxford, N. C. Those who expected a sermon abounding in "glittering generalities," or a display of sky scraping eloquence, may have been somewhat disappointed; but for clean cut logic, sturdy defence of Baptist and Bible principles, and for a faithful and fearless handling of the sword of the Spirit, the sermon must be pronounced, in all essential respects, an admirable one. Some brethren who are quite nervous at the thought of saying things on such an occasion as may be calculated to "wound the feelings" of brethren of other creeds, may have winced under some of the sentences that laid bare denominational differences, and that exposed some of the methods of modern evangelistic jugglery; yet the sermon was timely, in good taste, and its effect justifies the assertion that denominational sermons can be preached on such occasions, in strict conformity with loyalty to God's truth, and courtesy to those who may differ from us. Let us have more of them; they are refreshing in this day of maudlin unionism.

We were greatly gratified to notice the prompt manner in which the Convention organized on the first night of the meeting, so that when the body met next day it was ready for business without wasting precious time in tiresome preliminaries. This prompt organization had a good effect on the whole meeting, and enabled the Convention to give necessary time to the consideration of all important matters, and to adjourn even before the time fixed. Of course we were not tired of our guests, and would have been pleased to have them remain longer with us, but the prompt adjournment of the body when the business was finished was also a wise thing.

This reminds us to say that pastor Hall and his people, and all others who assisted them, deserve hearty commendation for the tact and ease with which they handled such a large gathering of our brethren and sisters, and the generous hospitality which they dispensed.

Chairman Marsh presided with his usual dignity. He has really improved since last session. His free use of the gavel, and his maintenance of good order, met the hearty approval, we think, of all who have a commendable pride in the dignity and decorum that should mark the meetings of the representatives of our great brotherhood in North Carolina. "So mote it be;" and let it continue. There was quite a number of distinguished visiting brethren present, who by their speeches and counsel added much to the success of the meeting. We would like to call them again by name, but we content ourselves now by saying that we were glad to see them. Come again, brethren, and we will give you "the freedom of our city and the hospitality of our homes." Dr. Frost's speech, like the man, was above the average. So was Dr. Ellis's. Dr. Dickinson, the veteran editor of the Religious Herald, was with us, and others who wield the editorial pen. As usual, Dr. D. was "stirring up" the brethren. Occasionally he stirs up a "hornet's nest," but he has stirred up so many of them, and has been stung so often, that he has toughened it seems under the experience, and rather seems to enjoy it. We ourselves have had a hand in that business ever since the days of boyhood, when with other youthful companions "on a mission bent" we roamed the hills and valleys searching for the homes of the lively hornets, bumblebees and yellow-jackets. We have a vivid recollection of how it increased our locomotion when we were popped in the rear by some of the spirited insects whom we had disturbed, and the supreme joy that crowned our efforts, when, after repeated charges, victory was ours. This may seem to be puerile talk, but it has a moral which those who study the aim of religious journalism may readily see.

Dr. Tupper's speech on the enlargement [illegible] was a model of chaste eloquence and quiet grace. There is no [illegible] anxious to push efforts [illegible] he represents, or to adopt "improved methods" of accomplishing it, if those methods be such as to commend themselves to the practical judgment and experience of his brethren.

Rev. Mr. Bagby's speech on the mission work in Brazil, and the present religious and political status of that country, was an admirable one.

Powell is always eloquent when he speaks on Mexico and her needs.

Bro. Herring, a returned missionary from China, was called out by the brethren, and we feel satisfied that he will have no ground to be grieved when one who has always loved him feels constrained to add that it would have been more courteous for him, under the circumstances, not to have advocated the views he did advocate toward the close of his speech. No one can question his honesty or sincerity, but one has a right to question the judgment of a young man who pits his own judgment against that of the assembled wisdom of his brethren. A young man should be careful how he assumes the role of a reformer, especially when he attempts a radical reformation by methods that are not new, but which have been tried long ago, and found wanting. May the Lord bless him, and those who think with him, and lead them with us all into the right way.

The report on State Missions was quite encouraging, and reveals the fact that our people are "marching on" to greater results and grander victories under the guidance of the Lord of hosts.

The report on the work of the Ministers' Relief Board was also encouraging, and we think we can see the dawning of the day when North Carolina will not be behind any of her sister States in providing for the wants of her aged and needy ministers, and the widows of those who have "finished their course," and entered into rest.

One of the spiciest discussions that occurred during the session of the Convention was under the head of the "Report of the Trustees of Wake Forest College." Dr. Taylor was at his best, and no one can blame an honest, talented man, burdened as he is with the cares pertaining to the office of president of our leading denominational college in North Carolina, for unbosoming himself and speaking freely in the presence of his brethren. Cannot and should not a father speak freely in the presence of his family, and say something about family duties, and even family losses and crosses, as well as family hopes and joys? His plea for the hearty support and patronage of his own denomination in sustaining the interests and promoting the success of Wake Forest College, was both timely and just.

Thanking God for our remarkable church and denominational autonomy, for the evident growth of our people in numbers, influence and piety, let us, with renewed hope, press forward in the performance of the work our Master has given us to do. May this year be the best in our history for souls won and results achieved.

DR. WILLIAM ROYALL DEAD.

Prof. William Royall, D. D, LL. D., of Wake Forest College, N. C., died suddenly in Savannah, Ga., on the third day of January, 1893. Dr. Royall had gone to Savannah to spend his holidays with his son-in-law, Mr. W. C. Powell, and was there in the home of his own loved ones when the messenger came for him. He was born in Edgefield county, S. C., July 30th, 1823, and was in his seventieth year when he died.

Dr. Royall was first elected as Professor of Latin and Modern Languages in Wake Forest College in 1859. He devoted twenty-five years of his life as a professor in that institution, in which position he served efficiently and satisfactorily till his death. He was eminently distinguished both as a preacher and an educator. He was indeed one of the most thoroughly accomplished and best equipped men for his work that we ever knew. Liberally endowed with the finer graces and better qualities of human nature, and having enjoyed excellent training and school advantages, and added to these the most methodical habits of study, he always went to his work, whether to the pulpit or the class-room, with thorough preparation. He was kind and sympathetic, and therefore easily approachable, but always dignified. Indeed, Dr. Royall was a high type of a college professor.

He was abundant in labor fruitful of results, as will be seen in a sketch written of him in 1880, in which he is said to have baptized over fifteen hundred persons, and had been pastor of twenty churches for terms varying from two to ten years. Many of these churches were served during his professorships. Indeed, about four hundred of the above-named persons baptized were in the connection of the Flat Rock church, in Franklin county, N. C., which church he served ten years.

Dr. Royall was a devoutly pious man, thoroughly conscientious in all his work, entirely consecrated to the service of his Master. While we mourn our loss of such a friend we can but think of him as presenting one of the most unique, most completely finished lives, we ever knew. There is a sense in which sudden deaths are objectionable, in that they deprive us of the last parting words and counsels, but to one like the corn in the shock fully ripe, ready for the garner, as he was, the advantages far exceed the objections. Most of the devoted laborers in the Lord's vineyard rather prefer to "die in the harness." Better this than the wasting emaciation of protracted illness, or the excruciating pain of some torturing diseases, or the dreaded operations of attending physicians. Better too on the part of relatives who often have to undergo the painful anxiety "between the hoping and the dreading."

The day before his death, Dr. Royall in conversation with a dear lady friend, commented on the prayer to be "delivered from sudden death," and said he thought if it was the Lord's will it was more desirable to be thus called away.

God be praised for such a life, so full of labor, so rich in results! The Lord be praised for his great grace and faithfulness to his servant in accomplishing through him and completing in him so useful a life!

Gov. Holt's message is an elaborate and carefully prepared document, reviewing closely every department of the State government. The Governor takes a hopeful view of the condition of the country, and urges a generous support of all of our institutions and enterprises. We are glad that he can view the affairs of the government in so favorable a light. But we are fully convinced that the great mass of our people are greatly depressed. A series of bad crop years and the ruinously low prices of produce have brought the laboring classes, the farmers of small means, and all farmers who are in debt, into terrible straits.

Added to this is another serious consideration: that is, our people from one end of the State to the other, and in every nook and corner, have had paraded before them in highly colored form the awful calamities that have come upon them, until there is a restless, sensitive disturbance extending throughout the entire commonwealth. And we venture to suggest to our legislature that this is no time to increase expenditures, or to enter into new enterprises requiring expense, unless there exists imperative necessity for them. The condition of the great bulk of our people as well as the temper of the people forbid the increase of taxes, but loudly suggest retrenchment at every point when a wise economy will permit. Besides these considerations, it would be very unwise policy to increase expenditures now, except when necessity demands. Certainly this is no time for enlarging our institutions. Indeed, it would be wise to get clear of some of the pensioners on the State's bounty rather than introduce new ones.

We see from the Governor's message that the Oxford Orphan Asylum receives from the State yearly for its support the sum of $10,000, and from the Masonic Lodge $2,500. We have seen no statement of the amount contributed to the support of the Asylum from churches and individuals. The Legislature ought to know, it seems to us, what part other folks are paying to this institution as well as the part the State is paying.

Seaside Notes.

The seaside is full of interest. Its scenery is grand, awe-inspiring, sublime. Its breezes are healthful and invigorating. A summer sail and surf bath are enjoyable. Fishing and hunting facilities are superb. The flora and fauna of land and sea are attractive to the casual observer as well as the botanist and zoologist.

Of deeper interest is the study of the people. They are generally kind, open-hearted, and generous. Simple in habit and costume, they are hale and happy. Few are cultured, but they exhibit a surprising amount of brains and common sense. Their language is terse and epigrammatic. Their conversation is spiced with many nautical terms. They delight to tell of trips to New York, the Indies, England, the Mediterranean, and Africa. They also tell of many incidents occurring in our own waters that are as thrilling as tales of romance. Their stories of sad shipwreck and howling storm are hair-lifting and pathetic. Quick at repartee, they are not without a large fund of humorous anecdotes gleaned from tradition and personal reminiscence.

They live chiefly on the products of sound and sea. Few are engaged solely in farming. The water resources are apparently exhaustless. This county (Carteret) is a hundred miles long and has 11,000 inhabitants, yet it is said that one can go by water within a half mile of every home in its borders. Most residences have a water front. Roads are poor, the chief highways being creeks, bays and sounds. The carriages used are skiffs and sharpies. Fish are usually very abundant. Many tons are daily shipped to the Northern markets during the fishing season. A small crew sold a single catch of fish recently for $169. Another crew of three men caught ten thousand pounds at one haul last week and realized a handsome sum. But occasionally the finny thousands are disposed of at very cheap rates, sometimes thrown away. More than once fine fish have gone at seventeen cents per hundred. The oyster, clam, and scallop industries are quite lucrative at times and are well patronized.

The cause of the Baptists in this section is advancing. In this county we have seven churches with four ministers and a membership of over five hundred. Rev. Duncan McLeod, the faithful and efficient pastor at Beaufort, expects to leave the coast soon on account of his wife's health. His energetic toil of more than three years in our midst will never be forgotten. Rev. B. H. Matthews, a recent graduate of Wake Forest College, occupies the field east of Beaufort. He is teaching school in connection with his ministerial work. He is pleasing his audiences in the sanctuary and his students in the school-room.

Our church in Morehead City is progressing finely. Two and a half years ago with more than a hundred members, it raised only two hundred dollars on pastor's salary, secured fifty dollars additional from the State Board, and had preaching twice a month. Now there is preaching every Sunday, and last year's contributions to various objects amounted to $1,400. On Jan. 1, 1891, we had 147 members, including an arm in the country; on Jan. 1, 1893, we have here 191 members, and in the country (now an organized church) 29 members. This increase is the result of the Divine blessing upon the united efforts of the church. Rev. T. J. Leary, an aged, fearless, battle-scarred veteran of the Cross, has been of invaluable service to the youthful and inexperienced pastor. Capt. Alvin S. Willis, the wise and gifted superintendent, has toiled nobly and well in the Sunday-school. And many others, male and female, deserve recognition as faithful workers in the Lord's vineyard. Such a pastorate is a positive joy.

It may be well to add a word as to the immediate Baptist needs of this county. Amid many struggles we have been successful in the past; vaster possibilities lie before us. The way to grander achievement is open. The outlook is full of promise.

(1) We sorely need (with much of the means to support them) two men, who are strong, skilful, wise, and consecrated. A good field could be worked up west of Morehead City. Another invites attention east of Beaufort. Other sects are busy and these fields are rapidly drifting into their hands. "Come over and help us!"

(2) We need a good Baptist Academy located at some central and convenient point. We could scarcely inaugurate here a mightier agency for the propagation of our principles. There is not an academy of high grade in the country, and hundreds of children are growing up in ignorance. Let the Baptists establish a high school and start an educational revival. Sowing of this sort can but anticipate an abundant harvest.

Jerkers, Shirkers—Turn Them into Workers.

I received near $2,000 in private subscriptions after the collection during the Convention. The entire amount will be raised if every pastor will help us. It is my intention to return to North Carolina and assist those who may desire it. But let no one wait for me.

As constituents of the Southern Baptist Convention, we have assumed certain liabilities, and we cannot afford to prove recreants or defaulters. Let the "jerkers" and "shirkers" be turned into workers, and it will prove an easy task. If you love the Lord, prove it.

Death of Dr. J. L. Burrows.

Rev. John Lansing Burrows, D. D., of Augusta, Ga., died suddenly at Stellaville, near Augusta, Ga., on January 2d, 1893. Dr. Burrows was a cherished friend of ours and we with the many others of his friends and admirers mourn his loss.

We can offer no better tribute to him in our columns than to re-produce the account of his death and sketch of his life in the Richmond Dispatch of the 2d inst.

A few days ago he went to the home of Mr. A. C. Taylor, near that town. Yesterday he preached at the church there. Sunday night he returned and this morning arose apparently as well as ever. In fact he remarked to Mr. Taylor that he felt better than he had in sometime, the country air and change of scene seeming very beneficial. He then went into the yard to take a short walk. Soon he was seen to take a seat upon the steps of the porch.

LIFE HAD GONE FORTH.

He had not been seated long before he fell forward to the ground. When assistance reached him it was found that his life had gone forth. Death was attributed to heart-disease. Funeral services will be held at the First Baptist church at 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon. Rev. Lansing Burrows, his son, is the beloved pastor of the church. The remains will be taken on the evening train for Richmond, where they will be interred beside the grave of his wife.

SKETCH OF DR. BURROWS'S LIFE.

Dr. J. Lansing Burrows was born at Albany, N. Y., in 1814. His mother was a Lansing, of old Knickerbocker stock, and his father, Samuel Burrows, was an American privateer captain during the war of 1812. The subject of this sketch was left an orphan when he was twelve years of age and was reared chiefly by his grandfather, Nathaniel Burrows, of Bucks county, Pa., and an uncle, who was a Presbyterian elder of the straitest sect. He was prepared for college at Germantown, Pa., by Rev. Dr. Junkin; graduated from Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., and afterwards from Andover, Massachusetts. He was ordained a minister at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in 1835, and during the same year married Miss Adeline Benthuysen. Soon after ordination he became co pastor with Dr. McClay of a church in New York, but left the charge to assist Professor Farnham in a school in Shelbyville, Ky. Subsequently he taught a female school of his own in Elizabethtown.

He organized churches in Owensboro and Henderson, and in 1840 accepted a call to the Sansom Street church in Philadelphia. He remained with that congregation four years, when, with a colony, he built the Broad Street church. Here he was pastor for ten years, and in 1854 accepted a call to the First Baptist church, this city. In 1874 he took charge of Broadway church in Louisville, Ky., and after remaining there four years returned to Virginia and served for eight years the Freemason Street Baptist church in Norfolk. Since his retirement from active ministry he had been residing with his son in Augusta, Ga.

HIS RICHMOND PASTORATE.

In Richmond Dr. Burrows was universally beloved and admired. He was a man of great individuality and of indomitable will and a speaker of great dramatic force. He was intensely southern in his feelings, an ardent supporter of the Confederate cause, and during the war a most efficient and energetic member of the Richmond Ambulance Committee.

HIS ELEMENTS OF STRENGTH.

Dr. Burrows had the faculty of getting close to the people of all classes. He was a deep student of human nature as well as of theology, and could adapt himself to any congregation. He was equally at home in discussing an abstruse doctrinal point and in preaching a plain, practical, revival sermon. His education was broad, his intellect massive, and his reading embraced a wide range. His disposition was impulsive but it was the impulsiveness of tenderness, and when the news of his death was received here hundreds out of his own denomination mourned the loss of a friend who had been a comfort and a counsellor to them in the hour of bereavement. He believed in practical piety and illustrated his belief by his example. Though he never sought notoriety, he could not hide his light under a bushel. It was fed by the oil of a faith and an aggressive zeal in the cause of the master that made it burn so fiercely it was seen of all men.

AN IMPORTANT CHARGE.

One of Dr. Burrows's most important pastorates was that of the Broad-Street church, in Philadelphia. He began there when about twenty-five years of age. One of the first things he asked for on taking charge was a new church, but there was opposition, until finally he said, "Let me have my way and I will build it." He delighted to tell how he worked on the church with his own hands, kept accounts, collected the money, etc. Among the hundreds he afterwards baptized and received into that Philadelphia church were poor boys, whom the Doctor rejoiced to see grow to great distinction in their several lines of business. One of these was John B. Trevor, who died possessed of $12,000,000 after giving large sums to benevolence.

THE CALL TO RICHMOND.

When Dr. Burrows had under consideration the call to the First Baptist church of this city he came to a meeting of the Baptist General Association, held that year in Richmond. It was his first visit to our city, and there was the keenest anxiety to hear him preach. With Dr. Burrows came the celebrated J. G. Oncken, of Germany, at that time probably the most famous Baptist in the world. A mass-meeting was held at the Grace-Street church, at which Dr. Burrows followed Dr. Oncken in an address of thrilling power. When he closed that speech he had captured not only Richmond, but Virginia Baptists, for there were present delegates from almost every county in the State.

A WAR INCIDENT.

While the fighting was going on near Harrisonburg, Va., Dr. Burrows was busy as a member of the Ambulance Committee bearing off the wounded and the dying from the field of battle. The next Sunday the Presbyterian pastor in Harrisonburg announced that he saw Dr. Burrows in the congregation and hoped he would come forward and preach. The Doctor had no coat on and looked as little like a clergyman as was possible, but he mounted the pulpit and explained that his style of dress was due to the fact that he was just from the battle-field and that he had not the facilities for securing more suitable apparel. Then he proceeded to preach a sermon about which the people of that staid old town talk with delight to this day.

HIS KINDLY IMPULSES.

There never was a man more considerate of other people's feelings or more ready to make amends when perchance he had given offence. In a controversy with one of his brethren the latter became so offended that he declined to speak to the Doctor, or at least he evaded him whenever he came near. At last Dr. Burrows met the offended brother on Main street, and grasping him by the hand, said: "I will speak to you; you may be right and I may be wrong. At any rate, we are not children, but christian brethren, and we will be on good terms as heretofore."

To a friend with whom he talked recently Dr. Burrows spoke of how dearly he loved Richmond and of the kindnesses he had received here, and tears flowed down his cheeks as he spoke.

TO BE BURIED HERE.

Dr. Burrows's remains will be brought here for interment, and will probably arrive on the early train Thursday morning. The funeral will take place from the First Baptist church that day at 12 o'clock, and pews will be reserved for the ministers of all denominations who may attend. The pall-bearers have not yet been selected, nor have the details for the funeral been arranged.

The Baptist ministers conference will be likely to take suitable action with reference to the death of the distinguished divine. This would perhaps have been done yesterday had the sad intelligence of his death been received before the adjournment of that body's weekly session. Dr. Cooper received a telegram in the afternoon simply announcing that the body would be brought here for burial on Thursday.

Letter from Rev. G. W. Greene.

A COUNTRY TRIP IN CHINA.

I recently made my first country trip since my arrival in China. It was quite a pleasure to one whose life has been spent in the country, after a year spent in the city, to get out where he could walk on the ground again, instead of on stone pavements, and where he could see something besides Chinese houses and narrow streets.

I went with Bro. Simmons to visit some of the stations under his care up North river. We hired a boat for the trip, and in that we ate, slept, read, wrote, and the Chinese doctor used it as his dispensary and distributed medicine to hundreds of afflicted people. Besides the boat people, of whom there were six, there were four or five Chinese christians who accompanied us to assist in the work in various capacities. The work attempted was fourfold:

1. We sold as many christian books as we could. On the way up, the progress of the boat was very slow, and we could usually walk faster than the boat moved; so we were on shore much of the time, and always with a handful of books, which we offered to every man we met. We had single Gospels worth five cash apiece (ten cash make a cent), other Gospels in larger type worth eight cash, Psalms worth fifteen cash, and many small books of eight to fifty pages, worth from one to five cash apiece. These last have been written by the missionaries, and are designed to interest people in the gospel, or to give them information about the plan of salvation. During the trip we sold nearly a thousand books, which means that more than a thousand people had the gospel brought to their attention, many of them perhaps for the first time. When missionaries first came to China, prejudice was so strong that it was difficult to get a Chinaman to take a book when it was offered to him for nothing. But in process of time this prejudice somewhat wore away and they became very ready to take the books. It is the nature of a Chinaman to take anything that is given him, as it is of some other people I have known, and there is also a disposition to value it according to its cost. So there was a rush to get the books given away by the missionaries, and sometimes the rush was so great that the books were torn in pieces by the hands so eager to take them. But it is likely that books thus obtained were not so generally read. If, however, a man cares enough to pay one or more cash for a book, he cares enough for it to read it. So the missionaries have about quit giving away books, but sell them at cost of production, or often at less than cost.

As far as possible, we arranged to be at the larger towns on market days, when many people came in from the country around, and thus our books were very widely scattered. There was only one town of any size near the river, wherein we did not sell some books. I think we never went ashore without selling to one or two persons. One morning we took a long walk before breakfast, but could not sell a book. At last we got hungry and sat down on the bank to wait for the boat. It was in sight making a long detour around a sand bar, and when about a quarter of a mile off, the boatmen stopped to eat their rice, and we were compelled to wait for ours with what patience we could. But while we were waiting, in not the sweetest of tempers, some women stopped near us and commenced discussing us and our clothes. After some time they grew bolder and came up and inquired about our books and finally bought some. So few women can read, and besides it is not considered proper for a man to talk much to a woman, so that we did not offer books to the women we met on the public highway, but always sold to them if they asked for them.

2. A second method of work was street preaching. Here in Canton there is little opportunity for this kind of work. The streets are so narrow and the crowds are so great that anything of the kind would soon obstruct the street and do more harm than good. But in the country villages there are often open places very convenient for such preaching. Walking through the streets selling books, we soon collected a crowd, and then they were invited into some open square, or under a broad shady tree, just out of the village, and one or more sermons were preached, sometimes for fifteen or twenty minutes, sometimes for nearly an hour. Many seemed to listen with patient interest, and in this way many heard of Jesus.

3. We visited two towns where churches have been organized, and these have secured small chapels for worship. Here an attempt was made to do a work slightly different. By means of the street preaching, many heard the gospel once, and by the power of the Holy Spirit we hope some may be brought to believe in Jesus from hearing a single sermon. But from the human standpoint, even in a christian land, comparatively little result would be expected when the preacher preaches only once in a place. The sermon needs to be followed by another, and that by others. How much more is this true where the hearers are in profound ignorance of the first principles of christianity. So at Shek Kok and Tsing Uen, where the chapels are located, attempts were made to follow up any impressions made by the sermons preached. At Tsing Uen especially, congregations were large and attentive, and preaching was continued for two or three hours, and then after a rest, for two hours more. Some staid to hear it all; some returned the next day and listened again; some had long talks with the brethren in private. Such work as this is most hopeful of permanent results.

4. Church members need instruction and training, even when they have had some acquaintance with the Bible all their lives. How much more those who are fresh from the ignorance and superstition of heathenism! We spent a Sunday at each place and joined in worship with the brethren, and Bro. Simmons preached to them. At Shek Kok a few of the brethren met at the chapel every night of our stay, for reading the Bible and prayer. There was, however, less opportunity for this kind of work than at some other places, as the members of these churches are very much scattered. Many of the Tsing Uen church live a hundred miles farther up the river, and we could not visit them on this trip. One of the native preachers has recently visited them and baptized several. Early in January I hope to accompany Bro. Simmons to Shin Hing, and there special prominence will be given to the instruction and training of the church members.

We had prayers on the boat twice each day, and each one in his turn led in prayer, the doctor, his assistant, the cook, the feeble old man whom we took with us to his home out of charity, as well as the preacher and the colporter. The doctor often preached excellent sermons, when he was not busy with the sick. The cook preached once or twice, often sold books in the crowds, and was especially active in talking to people in private.

By means like these, a few of the millions are hearing of salvation through Christ. Only the Holy Spirit can give power to the message thus preached.

Rev. A. D. Hunter.

WHEREAS, Rev. A. D. Hunter, who has served this church as pastor for the past three years, has severed his connection with us, to accept a field in Virginia; and whereas, the church desires to make some public recognition of the acceptableness of his labors among us; therefore, be it resolved by the church in called conference January 1st, 1893:—

1st. That in Bro. Hunter we have had a laborious, zealous, untiring and faithful pastor—one whose highest ambition has been the good of the church and the advancement of our Master's kingdom in this field.

2d. That we recognize in him a high-toned, affable, conscientious and upright christian gentleman and minister, whose influence will long be felt here, and can only be felt for good wherever he may locate.

3d. That we heartily commend Bro. Hunter to the brethren and people of this new field and to the Baptists of Virginia, as a man worthy of their highest love and confidence and a pastor diligent in season and out.

4th. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of the church, a copy be given Bro. Hunter, and one sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER, Religious Herald and Eastern Reflector, with a request to publish the same.

D. J. WHICHARD, Moderator.

The Spring Term of the Chowan Baptist Female Institute begins Wednesday, Jan. 18. The present session has been a most prosperous one and a large number of boarders are present—more than at any other Baptist Female College in the State. We cordially commend Chowan to parents having daughters to educate.

How to Gladden a Pastor's Heart.

I don't know whether it was taken from a suggestion you made in the RECORDER just before the Convention, or from becoming wearied at looking at my old coat, or it may have been a token of love, that caused the good sisters of Bethesda church to gladden the heart of their unworthy pastor just before the Convention with a fifteen-dollar overcoat. I am inclined to believe it was the last assigned reason—a token of love, for this is not the first by many. They are continually doing such things. This is not all they do to gladden their pastor's heart; if it were, I should have remained silent; they always meet him at their regular monthly church meetings. When their regular meetings come, it does not make any difference how important the work in which they are engaged, if it can be deferred (and they shape their business to that end), they turn it loose and go to church, and you will find, generally speaking, as many of the members present on Saturday as on Sunday.

Another way they gladden their pastor's heart is, they care for each other's temporal and spiritual welfare, and don't leave it all for their pastor to do. If a member is sick, they pray for him, visit him, show their love to him or her by trying to help and relieve in some way. An ounce of such stuff as that is worth hundreds of pounds of sympathy. Not only do they treat each other in this way, but they come to see their pastor when he gets sick. We talk much about the pastor visiting the sick, but say but little or anything about the members visiting the pastor. They consider their pastor one of them in many respects.

Many other features I might mention of their work in gladdening the heart of their pastor.

But all churches are not thus. Alas! how many pastor's hearts are saddened by careless and indifferent members who never consider his welfare or well being; never visit him to find out his needs; never shake his hand unless it is when they want to tell some fault of another member, and thus sadden his heart in this way; never go to church except to make a suggestion to the brethren that we need another pastor, and sadden his heart in this way, or contend with and weary some weak brother who has been overtaken in a fault by talking to the other brethren what he has heard and how he ought to be dealt with for it, when he is just as guilty, if not more, than the weak brother. Many other things he does of a similar nature to wound his pastor and mortify his brethren, and thus cause us all to feel sad. God deliver us from such spiritual goats, for they certainly do not belong to the sheep kind. And God deliver us from pastors who say their church is working on well with such members, and have not the moral courage to stand up in God's name and condemn it, for fear of becoming unpopular.

Which of these classes do you belong my brother?

J. F. MACDUFFIE

East Durham, Jan. 3, 1893.

Closing a Prosperous Year.

Last night the Sunday-school board held its last meeting for 1892. It was a delightful meeting. I have served on many Boards, none of them inferior, some of them superb, and yet sometimes think this the model Board to which the Southern Baptist Convention has intrusted its great interests. Its organization is very compact and its business management very efficient. There are four committees: The Executive, one on Plans and Fields of Work, one on Periodicals, and a Business Committee.

The reports last night showed evrything in excellent shape. The receipts for this month are much in advance of any previous month, and the showing for the year is really remarkable. Any business man would pronounce it so. We have at least one Baptist enterprise which from the first shows itself self supporting, and is able to keep its treasury in funds, and that, too, when there is no source of revenue except the patronage giving in the use of Sunday-schools, Periodicals and Helps.

Two things—three things, have wrought to bring in this success, viz.: the able management which the Board has given, the kind and generous and genial support which has come from the people, and the marvellous blessing which God has given to us. I magnify all these with grateful, joyous acknowledgment.

We are getting ready to make another move in the matter of appropriations for Sunday-school missions. The Board wishes to be both cautious and generous—so to conduct its business and methods as to win the confidence and approval of its constituency.

The denomination is beginning to realize what an immense power it has in this enterprise. The Baptists of the South can make it in less than ten years a business of over one hundred thousand dollars annually. Nor is its money power its chief end and force. As an educational force to train the rising generations in all our denominational interests, it cannot be estimated. God has brought this Board and its work into being for high and holy ends, and has crowned it from the first with the glory of his smile.

Baptist Enterprise.

In looking over the periodicals and helps published by the American Baptist Publication Society, we cannot but have a feeling of pride, in seeing such evidence of Baptist enterprise, and at the same time, of gratitude, that we have in this Society an agency for supplying such valuable help to the great Baptist family in the study of the Bible. Besides, we notice that the price of some of the publications has been reduced so that they are now within the reach of all.

Words of Praise.

It seems to me the RECORDER grows better with every issue. I never enjoyed reading it more than for the last three or four months. Its editorials, contributed and copied articles are number one. "When I was at College and the Seminary" by "Old Man," was full of timely hints. "Long and Short Pastorates" by Rev. A. W. Lamar, elicits words of praise for his able pen and your good judgment in transferring it from the Courier to the RECORDER for its readers. Bro. Lamar impressed us as having had some experience with the change-loving minorities of our churches, or he could not have written on this debatable subject so well. Some of our churches are yearly becoming more and more given to change, and we would do well to learn from good and experienced brethren which is better, long or short pastorates; and by whom and how needed changes should be brought about. I would be glad to read other articles on brother Lamar's subject—giving both sides of this vexed question. We have had some.

CHANGES BY DEATH DURING THE PAST YEAR.

Prof. E. G. Beckwith and Rev. J. L. Cottingham, both young ministers of much promise, were taken from us in the midst of life. The Lord had use for them on high, and we tried to be resigned to his will. Their death left several vacant pulpits in Johnston and Wake counties, which we are seeking to fill again. We have also had some CHANGES BY REMOVAL.

Two good families left Clayton for Winston, N. C., some time last October or November—Dr. J. B. Robertson's and E. R. Oliver's.

Dr. Robertson was the leading deacon in Clayton church and the beloved physician of his town and community. His good wife was the leading organist in her church, and the children aided the services much with their musical talent.

Bro. Oliver's family had place in Clayton church, and we commend them all for their piety and faithfulness while with us. We lose, but the church to which they go will gain in the reception of such good people.

Bro. D. H. Graves and family have been away from Selma since last September, and we have missed them very much in the work of the church. We hope they will return to us again, however, before many months.

Rev. J. W. Rose, our beloved and faithful missionary, has gone to take work near Newbern, N. C. We hope the brethren to whom he goes will give him a place in their confidence and co operation, because he is worthy.

Our work is going on. New houses of worship are going up, and others are a felt necessity. The house of worship at Pine Level has been so modernized that it is now almost as good as new. "The Ladies Aid Society" of Clayton church has recently had the house of worship dressed in an emblem of purity. The paint makes the house "appear a thing of beauty."

The church at Selma is agitating a steeple and bell and other improvements.

Rev. Worley Creech and his churches are taking on new life in the Lord's work.

May the good Lord deliver us from stagnation, because stagnation is the beginning of an end—the bad end, too. May the Lord give us gratitude for his past blessings, and courage to grow much more useful.

The Galilean, or Jesus the World's Savior, by George C. Lorimer, D. D., is a neatly bound volume of 448 pages, in the author's own fine style.

wrote "A Practical View of Christianity," which led to the conversion of Leigh Richmond, author of the "Dairyman's Daughter."

Newton was not only a most successful minister of the gospel, but he was also a voluminous writer. Besides his hymns, he wrote other poetic pieces, essays, letters, sermons and ecclesiastical history, the whole making several medium-sized volumes. I am the fortunate possessor of his complete works in eleven volumes, an American edition printed at Philadelphia in 1795.

Who could be better qualified than Newton, by experience of Satan's power and God's grace, to write such hymns as the following?

"In evil long I took delight,
Unawed by shame or fear,
Till a new object struck my sight,
And stopped my wild career."

and—

"Afflictions, though they seem severe,
In mercy oft are sent;
They stopped the prodigal's career,
And forced him to repent."

From a great sinner like Newton, we would reasonably expect to find evidences of strong faith in the divinity of the Saviour. And he does not disappoint us. From his 89th hymn—"What Think Ye of Christ?"—I quote the second and fifth stanzas:

"Some take him a creature to be,
A man or an angel at most;
Sure these have not feelings like me,
Nor know themselves wretched and lost:
So guilty, so helpless am I,
I durst not confide in his blood,
Nor on his protection rely,
Unless I were sure he is GOD.

"If asked what of Jesus I think,
Though still my best thoughts are but poor;
I say he's my meat and my drink,
My life and my strength and my store;
My shepherd, my husband, my friend,
My Saviour from sin and from thrall;
My hope from beginning to end,
My portion, my Lord, and my all."

One more quotation will close this article. It is from the hymn—"The Lord Will Provide"—and is to the praise of God's special, loving, superintending providence over his people. I have never heard it sung since my dear mother sang it many years ago, and its sweet melody seems to ring in my ears to this hour. I give only the first and eighth stanzas:

1. "Tho' troubles assail
And dangers affright,
Tho' friends should all fail,
And foes all unite;
Yet one thing secures us,
Whatever betide,
The Scripture assures us,
The Lord will provide.

8. "When life sinks apace,
And death is in view,
This word of his grace
Shall comfort us through.
No fearing or doubting,
With CHRIST on our side,
We hope to die shouting
The Lord will provide."

The Lesser Sacrificed for the Greater.

Some morning glories two inches high have come up between the rows of beets and radishes in the garden. If allowed to grow, they will do it at the expense of the vegetables, for they will shade them and take from the soil much food that the vegetables need. While hoeing in the garden we notice these morning glories. As we are about to cut them off or dig them up they seem to say to us: "Sir, are you going to destroy us? Do you not recognize who we are? We are morning glories. Let us live and we will delight you with our beauty. Don't you love morning glories?" To this we with a stroke of the hoe reply: "Yes, we are fond of morning glories if they are in the right place—if they are along the fence. We must give these vegetables the best chance of growth we can. We can feed ourselves upon them, but not upon the beauty of you morning glories." Whenever any pleasure, however innocent in itself, comes up to interfere with the performance of our duty to Christ, or to interfere with some especial engagement we have with the Lord, we will put it aside as of less importance.—Young People's Union.

That slight cold, of which you think so little, may lead to serious trouble with the lungs. Avoid this result by taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, the best known remedy for colds, coughs, catarrh, bronchitis, incipient consumption, and all other throat and lung diseases.

Originality in Prayer.

Let the words we use in prayer be our own. Many who would never think of reading their private prayers from a book might about as well, so far as any real employment of their own mind in the exercise is concerned. They float along on a current of stereotyped phrases and dead words which have become so familiar by long habit that no thought is awakened, no energy put forth, no impression produced. It is the laziest of performances, empty of any definite meaning or actual benefit. If we have fallen to any extent into this vicious custom, we should bring ourselves up with a round turn and make a change. We should carefully and deliberately choose expressions that mean something to us, that bear the stamp of our own intellect, that originate with the need of the hour. It is better to say ten words in this way, slowly, hesitatingly, than to pour forth one hundred in the fluent fashion that indicates neither feeling nor reflection.—Selected.

Health has its weight. We cannot go far above or below our healthy weight without disturbing health. We cannot keep health and lose our weight.

It is fat that comes and goes. Too much is burdensome; too little is dangerous.

Health requires enough fat for daily use and a little more for reserve and comfort. That keeps us plump. The result is beauty—the beauty of health.

A little book on CAREFUL LIVING shows the importance of keeping your healthy weight. We send it free.

—IS AN—

Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty-eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

Statement by the Chairman of the State Centennial Committee.

After a full and free conference between the Board of Missions and the Centennial Committee—three members, brethren Carroll, Hufham and VanDeventer not present—appointed by the late session of the Baptist State Convention, it was agreed to push all the departments of the Centennial work simultaneously, and this, it is thought, could be more effectually done by dividing the work; the matter of providing for the regular work, and also that of enlarging the work, were reserved to the Board, to be prosecuted through the Corresponding Secretary of the Convention, while the other five members of the Committee were to give their attention to the collection of money for the Permanent Fund.

DEFINITION OF TERMS.

By the Regular Work, we mean the support of the laborers already in the field, at home and abroad; by Enlarging the Work, the sending forth the hundred new missionaries contemplated by the Southern Baptist Convention, while the Permanent Fund of $250,000, to be equally divided between the Foreign Mission Board at Richmond, Va., and the Home Mission Board at Atlanta, Ga., is a sum of money not to be invested as an endowment of these Boards, as some suppose, but a fund to be applied to permanent work, such as building churches and translating the Holy Scriptures. So far from its being a fund to serve as an endowment, the interest of which could only be used, the whole of this fund may be expended in ten, or five, or, if need be, in one year.

NEED OF SUCH A FUND.

We may not absolutely require chapels in China or Japan, for the successful prosecution of missions, though they are of great value there, but in South America, in Mexico, in Italy, and especially in the United States, they are indispensable. As a denomination, we have no church-building Fund. We greatly need this fund for the enlargement of our work at home. It is said there are four hundred organized churches in Texas alone that have no houses of worship; nor have we any fund for the translation of the Bible.

METHODS OF WORK.

This large sum of money has been apportioned to the different States, not by the Centennial Committee, but by the Convention; and while Kentucky is asked to raise $30,000; Maryland, with only 12,000 Baptists, $25,000; little South Carolina, $17,000; North Carolina's part is put down at $15,000.

All the Associations have been assigned to different members of the committee; each Association is committed to the care of three or four men to visit themselves, or see that every church of that body is visited in the interest of this work. The Executive Committee of the Women's Missionary Society have promised us their hearty co operation, and hope to bring every Woman's Missionary Society in the State, and all, or almost all, the Sunday schools into the work, and by the use of chapel cards and the diffusion of missionary literature to awaken much interest and raise a considerable part of this Permanent Fund; indeed, a very respectable sum has already been realized from this source.

Let it be understood that money raised by the chapel-card plan is not specially to be devoted to the building of churches, but may be used for any of the objects of missions. And perhaps, it should be said that money already raised, or that which may be raised by the women's societies or the Sunday-schools, will be credited to the churches with which they are connected.

Miss Fannie E. Heck is the President, and Mrs. James A. Briggs is Treasurer of the Central Committee, and both reside in Raleigh. From them you can get chapel cards, and all the literature you may need, or any member of this committee will be glad to supply you.

TWO THINGS TO BE REMEMBERED.

First, that in our zeal for the Enlargement of the Work, or completing the Permanent Fund, we must not forget that over and above all our new work, the Regular Work must be provided for; and secondly, that we have a large amount of money to raise and a very short time—only about four months—to do it in. Times are hard, we know, but our people are in better spirits than they have been in a long time, and, if the matter be properly put before them, we believe they will give to the cause this money. It ought to be raised; the interests of the Master's kingdom and of the denomination demand that it shall be raised, and if we will all address ourselves to this enterprise vigorously, faithfully and enthusiastically, success, triumphant and glorious, will crown our efforts. Let our watchword be Pray, Work, and Give, and may God's Spirit so fill and thrill the hearts of his people as to make this year's work prove a blessing to the churches for the next hundred years.

Excursion to Cuba, January 23—26.

In compliance with the wishes of many of our brethren in different sections, we have arranged an excursion to Havana that shall leave Port Tampa on the night of January 23, or of January 26 (as may be preferred), and take in special services that will be held in connection with the anniversary of the constitution of our first church in Cuba.

The plan is to spend Sunday, the 29th of January, in Havana, and to have the anniversary services on that day in the beautiful house, which the Baptists of the South have bought, and upon which the last dollar of the purchase money has been paid.

The railroads of the Southern Passenger Association, have agreed to give us one fare for parties of ten or more, from all points within their territory, for the round trip ticket to Port Tampa, tickets to be on sale Jan. 20th and 21st, and good for fifteen days.

The boats give us a round-trip from Port Tampa to Havana and return for thirty dollars ($30.00), including state-room and meals. Reduced rates at the hotels in Havana will be secured for the party. Where parties of ten cannot be made up, individuals can pay local fare to points where this can be done, or purchase the "Round Trip Excursion Ticket" to Port Tampa at about 1½ of the regular fare, and secure the reduction on the boats from there.

It is scarcely necessary to add that neither the Board, nor any of its members, have any interest whatever in this excursion, except a desire to give our friends a delightful trip, and let them see for themselves the grand work that is being done in Cuba.

Go to work at once, and get up a party in your city, town or vicinage.

Further details may be had by addressing either of the undersigned.

Please let us know if you decide to join this excursion.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure, be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Sold by Druggists, price 75c. per bottle.

Early History of Cuba.

The Island of Cuba was discovered by Christopher Columbus during his first voyage, October 28th, 1492. It was called by him Juana in honor of Prince John, son of Ferdinand and Isabella. After Ferdinand's death its name was changed to Fernandina. Still later it was called Santiago, and Ave Maria, in honor of the patron saint of Spain and the Virgin Mary. Throughout these changes, however, the name by which it was known to the natives, was still used, until finally Cuba became its recognized title. On account of its importance and beauty it is also frequently styled "The pearl of the Antilles."

Having just celebrated our own anniversary of the discovery of America, it is interesting to know that Columbus also discovered the Island of Cuba in 1492. It was then peopled by a docile race of Indians. Later on, in 1511, Diego Velasquez overran the Island with 300 Spaniards, and easily subdued the natives.

Slavery in Cuba.

Three hundred Indians were given to each Spaniard as slaves, but from unkind treatment they soon died. Others were compelled to take their place, but the work required proved too hard for them, and in about a century the Indians were almost totally extinct. Long before their extinction, however, by order of Queen Isabella, and with the sanction of Columbus, the importation of negro slaves from the west coast of Africa begun. From that time to the present the hard work upon the sugar and other plantations has been done by negroes. As already stated, there are about half a million of these people now in Cuba, but they are no longer held in bondage. It is said that the incessant toil during crop time and the effects of the enervating climate cause a dimunition of size, strength and energy with each new generation. Whether this be true or not the negroes form a large part of the population, and are greatly in need of the gospel.

Description of the Country.

Cuba has long been celebrated in song and story for her beauty. But its magnificent possibilities present themselves above all other claims. It is about 700 miles in length, with an average breadth of 80 miles. It has a coast line of over 2,000 miles and possesses 200 ports. In size it is larger than Ireland, having an area of 43 320 square miles. Much of this area is still uncultivated and is covered by magnificent forests of palm and other valuable trees. About one-tenth of the island has been cleared and tilled. The products are principally sugar, rice, coffee, tobacco and cotton. In 1886 there were 160 coffee, 1,200 sugar, and 5,600 tobacco plantations, besides 5,000 stock farms. The chief cities of the island are Havana and Santiago de Cuba, though there are a number of other smaller cities and towns scattered along the coast and in the interior. With the resources at its command, it is capable of supporting a population ten-fold as great as that which now occupies it. Under freer institutions, and with better facilities for popular education, above all, under gospel light and truth, the beautiful "Queen of the Antilles" would doubtless be crowned with peace and prosperity.

Bible Distribution in Mexico.

The prevailing ignorance of the existence and teachings of the Bible in Mexico is heart rending. Six or eight millions of the inhabitants never heard of the Word of God and would have no idea of what you alluded to if you spoke to them of its divine messages. The priests have studiously kept the masses in ignorance of this source of light and life, because of their flagrant violation of its plainest and most fundamental principles.

We find great difficulty in persuading the people to buy or accept on any terms a copy of the Word of God. Many who overcome their slavish fear of the father confessor and purchase a copy soon become alarmed, as though they had a devil in their homes, and deliver it to the priest who burns it in front of the church house amidst the rejoicing of the faithful.

In many cities containing from 20 to 40 thousand inhabitants, not a Testament or a Bible could be found. In Mexico City, I venture to say, not a copy is for sale in any book-store. A year and a half ago I entered the largest book-store in the city, having branch houses in every leading city in the Republic, and asked to see a Catholic New Testament. The shelves were examined; a consultation of the clerks was held and I was informed that they kept no such book. Their looks showed that they doubted its existence, and having one with me I showed it to them. It was examined with great interest and the head clerk remarked, "Well, this is the New Testament, people have several times asked for it and I never knew until now what it was."

Three weeks since, I entered the second largest book store in the city, accompanied by one of the leading city pastors, and inquired if they kept New Testaments for sale. The clerk examined the shelves, then consulted the proprietor, then both looked through several catalogues, and finally, the proprietor, leaning over the counter, asked me in the most earnest manner; "Who is the author of this book, the New Testament?" Appalling ignorance. When shall it be removed!

The distribution of the Bible is the forerunner and the basis of all christian effort for the evangelization of the country. The Foreign Mission Board is earnestly striving at this time to subsoil Mexico with the Holy Scriptures, through the agency of native colporteurs. Several of these are supported by the contributions of one man in the State of Georgia. How many churches, societies and individuals throughout the country might support one or more native colporteurs, if they would only make the effort.

The Bible is decidedly a Baptist book. A Bible of large print fell into the hands of Edward Lara about the time of the American invasion. It led to his conversion, and I have baptized more than a hundred people and organized two churches as a result of its work.

There never was a time when there was such a demand for the Bible as at present. Specially is this true in the States of Chiapas, Yucatan, Tabosco, Vera Cruz and Sonora. One colporteur recently sold more than one hundred dollars worth during one month. We must push this work vigorously and we call on our friends to aid us. The same necessity that exists for the circulation of God's word in Mexico is true of every other papal or pagan country. There can be no eminent success in any field until the Bible has had free course. It is a beautiful sight to see old men and women in Mexico learning to read that they may read the words which are "spirit" and which are "life."—Wm. D. Powell.

JOSIAH CRUDUP, Clerk.

The Recorder—Rev. J. H. Lamberth.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I cannot afford to give up two good things at the same time if I can avoid it, and those are my dear pastor and the BIBLICAL RECORDER. While I have to give up my pastor, I will hold to the dear old RECORDER as long as I can. How I wish I could persuade people to take it! Would that I could put it into every Baptist home in the land. I for one am a Baptist and cannot afford to do without it. Long may you live and send the RECORDER all over our land. May the blessings of heaven be showered rich and profusely upon you and yours!

With sad hearts as the year 1892 drew near to a close, we were called upon to give up our beloved pastor, Rev. J. H. Lamberth, who had been our pastor for seven years and a half at Clement church near Bushy Fork, N. C. He endeared himself to many. With reluctance we accepted his resignation. Our prayers and sympathies and best wishes follow him wherever the Lord sends him.

His pastorate will ever be held in fond remembrance by many. God bless the people who may secure him for their pastor! They ought to think they are highly favored of the Lord, and consider they have one among the best of preachers and one among the best of pastors.

Rev. W. F. Watson.

This brother, whose pastoral work at Dunn, N. C., for the last twenty months, has been eminently good and successful, both in town and country, has left us for a new field of labor; and, to say that our hearts are filled with regret at his leaving, is but to speak only a small portion of what we really feel.

When Bro. Watson came to take charge of the Baptist church in Dunn, nearly two years ago, he found everything in a state of cold and careless indifference, so far as any active church-work is concerned, on the part of the membership generally; but being himself young, vigorous and wide-awake, he soon inspired the brethren and sisters, among whom he came, to labor and toil with the same earnest spirit that moved his own heart, and things began at once to put on a new appearance all around. The membership seemed to "get a move" on themselves, so to speak, the wrinkles began to be smoothed out on all lines of church work, and everybody looked pleased at each other whenever they met on the street or at the church.

The Baptists of Dunn, and also of the whole South River Association, have cause to thank the Lord that Bro. Watson ever came to reside in our bounds. His work here cannot be fully estimated. It will go on, and on, till time shall be no more. He has put in motion here and hereabout a mission feeling and enterprise that will tell in the days to come; and the saddest of all now is, that he who was the head and front in such work for us, goes to another field, as his work here seemed for the present to be somewhat hindered.

But who will take his place? Who will do the pastoral work in Dunn that has been accomplished by the pastor of this church since he came among us?

Bro. Watson has our kindest wishes for his success in the new home and among the new brethren among whom he goes. As a resident minister, under his heavy duties here, we have always endeavored to speak words of encouragement and hope whenever he came to spend a few quiet hours at our fireside. We loved to see him come. We could freely talk together of the needs and necessities, the joys and the sorrows, the hopes and the fears, the things pleasant and the things unpleasant, attending the pastoral work at all times. For the truth must be told, such work is not all pleasant. Would that it were.

But Dunn is without a pastor. The church, Sunday-school and the prayer meetings are all in good working order, and the entire membership, with perhaps few exceptions, are ready to take earnest hold upon the work as left by the retiring pastor, and to hold up the hands of the next one whom the Lord shall call to this inviting field.

William Royall, D. D.

I ask some space in the RECORDER to say a few things about the great and good man, just called to his reward, whose name stands at the head of this article.

He was great in mind, great in education, great in purity of character, great in manners, great as a teacher, and great as a preacher of the gospel. He was in the fullest sense of the word a good man. Few men reach the high position of literary attainment to which he arrived. Few if any equalled him as a christian.

I have had the privilege and the pleasure of being with him in many protracted meetings, and preached with him day after day for weeks at a time. I have sat before him in his recitation room at Wake Forest College. I have been with him in the homes of the members of the churches where he was pastor. I have been with him in his own home. I have been with him alone by ourselves; and from these opportunities to know him, I regard him as one of the best men, if not the best man, I ever saw or knew.

As one of his students, I shall ever carry with me the tenderest and most grateful memories of his kindness and labors to teach me. The good advice he gave me I shall never forget.

I thank God for blessing the world with so good a man as William Royall; for giving to Wake Forest College such a professor; for giving to North Carolina such a citizen; for giving to his family such a husband and father; and for giving to the church such a preacher. I hope to be with him in heaven.

An Important Conference.

Probably there has been no more important meeting of Baptist Educators, in many years than that which was held at the Rooms of The American Baptist Home Mission Society in New York City, December 28th, 1892. It was a notable gathering as respects the men who were present, the subject under discussion, and because it was the first conference ever held by representatives of our theological seminaries. The faculties of our six institutions had appointed delegates to the meeting; Newton—Drs. Hovey and English, though Dr. Bullen came in place of Dr. Hovey who was detained by illness; Rochester—Drs. Strong and Pattison, the latter detained by his wife's sickness; Hamilton—Dr. Burnham and Prof. Schmidt; Crozer—Dr. Johnson, who however, was obliged to go to Florida and Dr. Long who was not present; Louisville sent Dr. Broadus; and Chicago, Drs. Harper and Hulbert. Dr. Pepper of Maine, Secretary Gates and Dr. MacVicar of New York were present part of the time, and Secretary Morehouse throughout the sessions. Dr. Strong was chosen President and Dr. Bullen Secretary of the Conference.

The circumstances which led to this meeting, in brief were as follows: Last May, in an address before the Alumni of the Rochester Theological Seminary, Dr. Morehouse suggested that our theological seminaries, by united effort, extend their work, by making special provision in the way of courses of reading and study and holding summer schools, for the four fifths of the Baptist ministry who have never enjoyed the advantages of a thorough collegiate and seminary training. This suggestion awakened much interest which became wide spread by the publication of the address. This was followed by further and more detailed suggestions concerning a plan of Theological Seminary work for pastors, which was printed and submitted to the faculties of our seminaries and to a few others. A general desire was expressed for a conference on the subject; hence, the meeting in December.

This Conference, after two long, earnest and most harmonious sessions, decided that united or federated action by all our Theological Seminaries is desirable, indeed is essential to the accomplishment of the best and largest results in a matter of such moment and magnitude.

It was also decided that a uniform, systematic and progressive course of reading and study covering a series of years, with summer schools of about three weeks at each of the institutions, for those who have entered the ministry without proper preparation and for others in the ministry who wish to avail themselves of these privileges, is desirable. The use of the seminary libraries and special lectures will constitute additional attractions. In case the experiment succeeds at these points, other summer schools will be established at places remote from the institutions.

The feasibility as well as the desirability of the scheme was considered at length. It was clearly recognized that there might be some difficulty in securing the services of Professors during their vacation, also in inducing those who most need it to avail themselves of the benefit of the plan, and also in getting the necessary means for the expenses connected therewith. But believing that "where there's a will there's a way," the Conference appointed an executive committee consisting of the presidents of our six theological schools, viz., Drs. Hovey, Strong, Weston, Clarke, Broadus, and Hulbert, with Dr. Morehouse as chairman, to mature a plan, submit it to the several faculties and thereafter to another meeting of the Conference which adjourned subject to the call of the committee.

It was also voted to request the American Baptist Education Society to consider whether its efficient aid can be given to the promotion of this plan.

All present were highly gratified with the spirit and results of the Conference. There can be no doubt that the men in our theological watch towers are studying the signs of the times, are disposed to adapt their methods and to extend their helpful influence for the benefit of thousands in our ministry who have never come under their immediate instruction, if only a thoroughly feasible plan of doing this can be devised. The committee appointed by the Conference will welcome suggestions from any quarter. It will now be in order to hear from the denomination at large.

DIED,

RHUE—We laid little Minnie Rhue to rest in the cemetery at Mt. Hermon church Dec. 30, 1892. She suffered all her life, but never murmured so far as I know. She made a profession of religion over a year ago, and was a consistent member of Mount Hermon church. We all loved her, but God loved her better, and took her. We bow and say "thy will be done." May grace sustain the dear mother and grandmother. PASTOR.

East Durham, Jan. 3, 1893.

WALLS—Ann Walls was born Dec 20, 1822, and died Dec. 23, 1892. For years she lived with her brother, R. Q. A. Teague, near Farmington, at whose home she died. Sister Walls professed faith in Christ when young, and for more than fifty years has been a consistent member of the church. Loved most by those who knew her best. "Thou shalt be missed because thy seat will be empty." We will miss her when we meet at Farmington again. Our loss is her eternal gain.

PASTOR.

WATTS—Brother Charley Watts of Bethesda church died here Christmas morning, in the twenty-fifth year of his age. It was a sad Christmas at his home, for all the family loved him devotedly. Never had given his father a cross word, and was the future hope of his dear sisters. How sad! Yet God knows best. He loved his church and its work, and was ever ready to co-operate with his pastor. We will miss him, brethren and sisters of Bethesda, but if we are faithful we will meet him after awhile. May grace be sufficient to sustain the bereft family.

PASTOR.

East Durham, Jan. 3, 1893.

Tributes of Respect.

On July 16, 1892, God saw fit to remove from us our beloved brother, K. L. Page, in the fortieth year of his age. He had lived a consistent member for many years, having connected himself with the church in 1871.

He had been a deacon of Spring Hill church two years previous to his death, during which time he had been consistent and faithful in the performance of his duty. He had been superintendent of Spring Hill Sunday-school for four years. He seemed to be conscious that he was nearing the end of his life, and was willing to meet his God, and prayed earnestly that his little ones might be brought up in the fear of him who rules the universe. Therefore be it Resolved 1. That we, the church at Spring Hill, do bow in humble submission to him who makes all things work for the good of those who love and serve him.

2. That in his death the church has lost a faithful and devoted servant.

3. That we extend our sympathies to the bereaved family, and pray God to care for and direct the stricken widow and children.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the church record, one sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER, and one to the family.

BY PROF. B. C. TAYLOR.
16mo, 192 pages. Price, 75 cents.

Prof. Taylor takes the Bible by books and analyses them according to author, time of writing, relation to other books, contents, specific points, etc. We know of no volume that in so small a space gives so much.

Some such knowledge of the various books of the Bible, or of the Bible as a whole, should be in the possession of every preacher, teacher, or Bible student. How many christians there are to whom the Bible is only a piece of patchwork, without order or harmony in point of facts or dates. They have not the slightest idea of how the various books of the Bible are related historically or chronologically, or whether such relation exists.—Journal and Visitor.

Strive With a Purpose.

Strive with an earnest purpose,
In every task to excel;
That which is worth the doing,
Is worth the doing well.
Where there's the will for winning,
Surely the way will come;
That which is worth beginning
Is well worth being done,

Think that however humble
Tasks which around you lie,
Half-hearted work will ever
Yield but a poor reply,
Then let us strive with fervor
Toil with whole-hearted zest;
That which is worth the doing
Is worth our very best.

An Arab Saying.

Remember, three things come not back:
The arrow sent upon its track—
It will not swerve, it will not stay
Its speed; it flies to wound or slay.

The spoken word, so soon forgot
By thee; but it has perished not;
In other hearts 'tis living still,
And doing work for good or ill.

And the lost opportunity,
That cometh back no more to thee,
In vain thou weepest, in vain dost yearn,
Those three will nevermore return.
—Constantina E. Brooks, in Century Bric-a-Brac.

Work That Pays.

Most any one is willing to work if they are well paid for it, and certainly no one should hesitate to take hold of that which will work for them and give them all the net returns. The only point is to find the creature or the machine that is so disinterested and so generous as to work without demanding a good share of the results.

We found such a creature some time since, and while it is a pleasure to her to work, it is a source of profit to us. Her work is light, and she takes her time at it, but she does it well, and pays for the privilege besides.

It is only the old hen, this creature of ours, and her daughters, and their field of labor is the scratch pile of straws, leaves and other litter, over a bed of dry dust. In it and all through it, we scatter wheat and corn of a morning, and then we get out quick, for the workers are soon at it, and the dust is flying. They scratch and peck and work away like harvest hands, talking in their chicken talk good-naturedly among themselves until nearly noon and then they either go to the nests and lay, or wallow in the dust, and stretch themselves out lazily in the sunshine for a sun-bath.

There is nothing slow and stupid about the hen that scratches for her living, and works among the straw and the leaves. She has bright eyes, a red comb, is quick of motion, and on the alert generally. It does her good to work and keeps her in good health.

PERSONS WHO WANT EGGS

should remember this, and now that the bad and stormy weather is near at hand, making it unpleasant for the hens out doors a good part of the time, they should choose a suitable spot where the sun shines in beneath a shed, or through a good size window or two, and fix up a scratch-pile in which to work the hens. It pays to do so.

There is nothing that so generally stimulates laying as the scratch-pile. It represents the proverbial "dung-hill" back of the barn where the fowls generally gather and scratch about in the winter time on the farm, because it generates a warmer atmosphere than any place else out doors, and affords them something to work on.

Pullets that have such exercise make early and constant layers, while the old hens retain their vigor and prolificness longer because of it.—H. B. Geer, in Southern Cultivator.

Habitual Posture.

Comparatively few persons have both sides of the body of perfectly similar proportions. One leg or one arm is shorter than the other. The two sides of the head are often of unequal size. Few persons have ears of an equal size and symmetrically placed. The size and position of the eyes vary. In the mouth and throat also we find inequality, and the cartilage separating the two nasal cavities is oftener deflected than vertical.

This condition of inequality in the two sides of the body is called asymmetry.

Those who have observed the effects of school life on body development must have noticed the influence of habitual posture on the symmetry and health of the body.

There is a tendency among school children, and especially among school-girls, to assume habitual postures both in sitting and standing. The habit of throwing all the weight of the body on one leg produces a corresponding throwing of the upper part of the body toward the opposite side in order to establish the necessary equilibrium. This tends of course to curve the spinal column, on which the upper part of the body is supported.

In this position the body and all the internal organs are thrown out of their normal vertical position, and the force of gravity still further exaggerates this result. Thus the muscles of the neck are unevenly exercised in the unconscious balancing of the head upon the vertebral column. Even the muscles of the face tend to become unevenly contracted, and this in time develops a condition of asymmetry of the face.—Youth's Companion.

A Hymn in a Garret.

A friend of mine seeking for objects of charity, got into the upper room in a tenement house. It was vacant. He saw a ladder pushed through the ceiling. He climbed the ladder and found himself under the rafters. There was no light but that which came through a bull's eye in place of a tile. Soon he saw a heap of chips and shavings, and on them a boy about ten years old.

"Boy, what are you doing here?"

"Hush! don't tell anybody, please sir."

"What are you doing here?"

"Mother's dead."

"Where's your father?"

"Hush! don't tell him; don't tell him; but look here!"

He turned his face, and through the rags of his jacket and shirt, my friend saw that the boy's face was bruised and broken.

"Why, my boy, who beat you like that?"

"Father did, sir."

"What did he beat you like that for?"

"Father got drunk, sir, and beat me 'cos I wouldn't steal."

"Did you ever steal?"

"Yes, sir, I was a street thief once."

"And why don't you steal any more?"

"I went to mission school, and they told me there of God and of heaven and of Jesus; and they taught me "Thou shalt not steal," and I'll never steal again if my father kills me for it. But, please sir, don't tell him."

"My boy, you must not stay here; you'll die. Now you wait patiently here for a little time; I'm going away to see a lady. We will get a better place for you than this."

"Thank you sir; but please, sir, would you like to hear me sing a little hymn?"

Bruised, battered, forlorn, friendless, hidden from an infuriated father, he had a little hymn to sing.

"Yes, I will hear you sing."

He raised himself on his elbow and then sang—

"Gentle Jesus, meek and mild,
Look upon a little child;
Pity my simplicity,
Suffer me to come to thee.

"Fain I would to thee be brought,
Gracious Lord, forbid me not;
In the kingdom of thy grace,
Give a little child a place."

"That's the little hymn, sir; good-bye!"

The gentleman went away, came back again in less than two hours, and climbed the ladder. There were the chips and there were the shavings, and there was the boy, with one hand by his side, and the other tucked in his bosom underneath the little ragged shirt—dead, a victim of drink.—John B. Gough.

When You Write Letters.

Don't mail any letter until you are sure that it is completely and properly addressed.

Don't place the address so that there will be no room for the post mark.

Don't fail, in the hurry of business, to write the name of the State you intend and not your own—a very common error.

Don't fail to make certain that your manner of writing the name of an office or State may not be mistaken for one similar in appearance. It is often better to write the name of the State in full.

Don't fail, if you are in doubt as to the right name of the office for which your letter is intended, to consult the Postal Guide, which any postmaster will be pleased to show you.

Don't fail to give the street and house number of the person for whom mail matter is intended, in addressing it to a city or large town.

Don't mail any letter until you are sure that it is properly stamped.

Don't fail to place the stamp in the upper right hand corner.

Don't write on the envelope, "In Haste," "Care of Postmaster," etc.; it does no good, and tends to confusion in the rapid handling of mail matter.

Don't fail to bear in mind that it is unlawful to inclose matter of a higher class in one that is [illegible] matter in newspapers.

Don't mail any letter unless your address with a request to return is upon the face of the envelope; so that in case of non-delivery it will be returned directly to you.

Don't fail to give your correspondents your full address, so that a new postman cannot fail to find you.

Don't fail to notify your postmaster of any change in your address.

Don't trust to the fact that you are an "old resident," "well known citizen," etc., but have your letter addressed in full.

Don't fail, if you intend to be away from home for any length of time, to inform your postmaster what disposition shall be made of your mail.

Don't fail to sign your letters in full, so that if they reach the Dead Letter Office they may be properly returned.—Selected.

Japanese Dentistry.

"The Japanese use no instruments for extracting teeth, but lift them out with the thumb and forefinger," said Henry Baker to a guest of the Southern, who was wearing his jaw in a sling, as the result of a pair of forceps slipping and getting more than they were sent for.

"While jolly Dick Hubbard was minister to Japan I visited that country and spent a pleasant week with him. One day I was troubled with the toothache, and Mr. Hubbard took me to a dentist and explained to the saddle-colored operator that I wanted the grinder extracted. I was placed in a bamboo chair and tilted slightly back. The dentist examined my teeth, talking volubly meanwhile to Uncle Sam's representative. Suddenly his thumb and forefinger closed on the troublesome tooth, and before I had the faintest idea of what was going to happen, he lifted it out and held it up before me, smiling at the same time that vacant smile peculiar to the children of the Orient. 'You were waiting for the forceps,, were you?' said Minister Hubbard, with a laugh. 'They don't use 'em here. Look at this.' Here is a young Jap taking his first lesson in dentistry. A twelve year-old Japanese boy sat on the floor, having before him a board in which were a number of holes into which pegs had been tightly driven. He was attempting to extract the pegs with his thumb and forefinger. Mr. Hubbard explained that as the strength of this natural pair of forceps developed by practice, the pegs would be driven in tighter. After a couple of years at peg pulling, the young dentist would graduate, and be able to lift the most refractory molar in the same manner that he now lifted wooden pegs."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

One Way.

A young man in company with several other gentlemen, called upon a young lady. Her father was also present to assist in entertaining the guests. He did not share his daughter's scruples against the use of spirituous drinks; for he had wine to offer. This was poured out, and would have been drank, but the young lady asked, "Did you call upon me or upon papa?"

Gallantry, if nothing else compelled them to answer, "We called on you."

"Then you will please not drink wine. I have lemonade for my visitors."

The father urged the guests to drink, and they were undecided. The young lady added, "Remember, if you called on me, then you drink lemonade; but if upon papa, why, in that case I have nothing to say."

The wineglasses were set down with their contents untasted. After leaving the house, one of the party exclaimed, "That was the most effectual temperance lecture I have ever heard." The young man from whom these facts were obtained, broke off at once from the use of strong drink, and holds a grateful remembrance of the lady who gracefully and resolutely gave him to understand that her guests should not drink wine.—Word of Life.

Profane Swearing.

It is written, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." And yet how many boys, and young men and old men, are guilty of this grave sin. If you go on the streets, you hear words of profanity; if you go into the business office, you are shocked with curses and blasphemies.

Of all sins this seems the most unprofitable. Some people lie and cheat and steal for supposed gain; but only a fool could suppose that profanity could make one richer, smarter or more courageous. No sensible person will form a more favorable opinion of you because of your profanity. No one will respect you any more because you swear. You will be cursed soon enough without so repeatedly tempting the Almighty to cut you down. The habit is most foolish, disgusting and wicked.—Selected.

Funeral Services of Dr. Wm. Royall at Wake Forest College, Jan. 5th, 1893.

After devotional exercises conducted by Elders N. B. Cobb, J. B. Boone, and Columbus Durham, and the reading of selections of Scriptures by the pastor, Elder W. R. Gwaltney, the latter said in substance:

How the life that is now closed could have been better or more faithfully spent, those of us who have known Dr. Royall for more than thirty years cannot possibly see. Nothing but circumstances entirely beyond his control could keep him from the performance of any duty, great or small. In Board meetings, in committee meetings, in faculty meetings, in meetings with the young preachers on Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, giving them instruction in the word of God, in church meetings, in prayer-meetings, and in all the Sunday services, he was present, ready to do earnestly his part. The weather and other causes of absence to many who are young and stronger were no causes of absence to him. His presence and help could always be relied on. I never knew one who seemed to have so much relish for his work and for all his work. Ever since I came to this place, it has been a mystery to me to see the amount of work he could do. How he could do so much and be always promptly at the place and time for its performance, I could not understand. How he could have spent a day or an hour more faithfully or more usefully, I cannot see. It would seem impossible for an observer of his daily life to idle away his time or to waste his opportunities. His life was a standing rebuke to any one recreant to duty. He ever set the Lord before him, and in everything he sought the approbation of his eye. Last spring, when we were holding the funeral services of Mr. Lowery, he said, "If I knew that the Lord would come this evening, I would not change my course, but would go on with my work as I am doing it to day." And in Savannah, last Sunday, he said to Mrs. Landrum, "If I knew that the judgment would come this evening, I should not change my course." He said on Monday evening, the day before his death, "It has always been a mystery to me that there should be in the Episcopal Prayer Book a prayer to be delivered from sudden death, for if it should be the Lord's will, no manner of death could be so desirable." I never knew one who seemed to be so ripe for heaven. I never came into his presence without feeling a desire to be a meeker and a better man. When I heard of his death, I thought of the twenty-fourth verse of the fifth chapter of Genesis, "Enoch walked with God and was not, for God took him." Our loss in this death is great, is irreparable, but our earnest prayer is that the death of him whose life has been such a benediction may be greatly blessed to us all, and we are persuaded that our prayer is not without faith.

Dr. John Mitchell said:

The dear brother whose remains lie before us, was one of the purest and best men I have ever known. He was my friend, and I thank God for such a friend.

I had the pleasure of meeting him for the first time in Greenville, S. C., in 1854. Was intimately associated with him in Furman University, and learned to love him as a friend and brother, and to esteem him very highly for his work's sake. He was a fine teacher, popular, cultivated, wise, winning, and apt to teach. His scholarship was accurate and extensive. He was a born teacher.

His gentleness made him great. He was a christian philosopher. To me he was an unusually fine preacher. In November, 1855, he was with me in a meeting of days at Ebenezer church, in Greenville, S. C., and for two weeks, day and night, preached the word with great earnestness and power, and with great acceptance. The people flocked to hear him, and many souls were converted. The little church of twenty-three members a little more than trebled its membership, having received forty-seven new members.

Dr. Royall was a devout christian, a man of large faith, and zealous for the truth. Like Enoch "he walked with God; and was not, for God took him."

PROF. MILLS SPOKE OF HIS CAREER AT WAKE FOREST.

Dr. William Royall came to Wake Forest in January, 1860, as professor of Latin and German. At that time the methods of instruction in our colleges generally were mechanical and unphilosophical to an extent hard to conceive of at this day. And this was especially true in the department of ancient languages. Dr. Royall's method of teaching was analytical, logical and philosophical, and created great enthusiasm in his own department. Its stimulating and quickening influence was felt by the entire college.

When he came to Wake Forest, the class of 1861 had read the course of Latin laid down in the catalogue, but by special arrangement we read under him the Satires of Juvenal, Perseus, and Horace's Art of Poetry. Under his guidance, Latin became a new thing and the reading of Latin poetry a delightful and profitable exercise. Stimulated by his teaching, I read with much pleasure Ovid and the Odes of Horace while in the Confederate army in 1862 and '63.

In those days we began college work at daylight and continued it through the forenoon, and, with a brief interval at noon, through the afternoon to about four o'clock. This did not give Dr. Royall enough time for work. He taught German at night. Besides, he gave his Saturdays and Sundays to preaching. He was in the prime of manhood and was the most enthusiastic and persistent worker I have ever known. "In labors more abundant."

In 1861 he published a valuable book of about one hundred pages, "Analysis of the Latin Cases." After it came from the press, he found that the same ground was about covered by a larger and fuller work on the same subject published about the same time. Hence he made no effort to push the circulation of his own book.

In January, 1867, the work of the College was resumed by Drs. W. M. Wingate, Wm. Royall, and Professors W. G. Simmons, W. B. Royall, and L. R. Mills. To Dr. Royall more than to any other man is due the organization of the course of study into schools instead of the curriculum.

He left Wake Forest in 1870 and organized the Raleigh Female Seminary. A few years afterwards he moved to Louisburg, and thence on account of failing health, he went to Texas. His health was restored, and he returned to Wake Forest as Professor of Modern Languages in June, 1880.

REMARKS OF PROF. LANNEAU.

We think of the man who animated and glorified the now cold body within this casket. My acquaintance with him was begun thirty-six years ago in South Carolina, his native State, and mine.

A stripling, just graduated from the Citadel in Charleston, I was invited to Furman University to serve as tutor of mathematics. Among the noble men of the faculty who kindly welcomed and encouraged me in my untried work was Prof. Royall.

In our frequent faculty meetings his gentle firmness and wise views were always inspiring and strengthening. He was then in the vigor of early manhood, and had already developed his rare power of masterful analysis, so essential to the true teacher.

I give a single suggestive incident: To supplement my own training, which had been mainly scientific, I took a private course in Greek under the incomparable teacher of that most perfect language, Prof. P. C. Edwards, whose mantle seems to have fallen on his then eager pupil who now so ably fills the Chair of Greek in this College.

While pursuing my studies under the lamented Edwards, I was wonderfully assisted by a compact, thoroughly digested epitome of the essentials of Greek grammar, which had been skillfully wrought out by Professor Royall, and published for the use of his own academic classes. It threw a flood of light on Kuhner, the standard authority then.

Towards the close of our three years' association in the University, the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary was founded in Greenville. Then came the days of Greenville's phenomenal pulpit power, when men were moved by John A. Broadus and William Williams, the Apollos, and Jas. C. Furman, who was to South Carolina what the persuasive Wingate was to this State. At such a time even, and in such association, Doctor Royall commanded admiration as a preacher of great power.

In 1860 our paths parted; widely separated for thirty years, when, most gratefully to me, they met again in our pleasant association here. So had he impressed me that in all these years he stood out prominently before my mind's eye as a stimulus to duty. Many men fade from one's recollection. But who that once knew Dr. Royall will ever forget him!

The gentle-voiced, sweetly dignified man as we all knew him in the golden autumn of his life, such was he in the days when he gathered his friends in the pleasant home on the bank of quiet Reedy river, when these sorrowing sons and daughters were, for the most part, prattling children. They must needs mourn their measureless loss which is his incomparable gain.

He lived to serve. "Having served his generation, by the will of God, he fell on sleep."

DR. ROYALL AS A PREACHER.

Prof. W. L. Poteat spoke as follows:

Shortly before his death, the eminent English historian, J. R. Green, said, "I know what men will say of me—'he died learning.'" Nothing now occurs to me more characteristic of Dr. Royall. Next to his love of Christ, his master passion was love of truth. Indeed, I doubt whether in his own thought he distinguished between the two. He was deeply enamored of truth and pursued it with unabated zeal to the day of his death—pursued it in health and in sickness, by all methods and into every hiding-place. A year or so ago he said to me, "I feel the necessity of study now that I am old more than ever before; for," said he with a smile that already anticipated the joy of the heavenly quest, "the more I can find out here, the higher up I shall start in the University above."

His mind was of the logical order, with a power of analysis and insight surpassing that of any man whom it has been my privilege to know. He remarked to me incidentally, not many weeks since, that he had some trouble in recalling names and dates and isolated facts, but that he never forgot a line of reasoning that he had once mastered. But there was nothing uncompromising and cold in his rational method. On the contrary, overspreading the course of the most exacting argument there was the play of a generous glow of feeling which allured the less gifted and somehow seemed to make them sharers in the investigation and in the triumph of the conclusion. In all my association with him, the moments most precious in my memory now are those in which in private conversation he allowed me to follow him as he moved cautiously about the roots of being, or discussed profoundly and reverently the personality of God and the conditions of the soul's untrammelled existence. Such deep themes seemed ever in his thought. The freedom and the confidence of these disclosures of his inmost mind I shall always treasure with gratitude.

It could not be otherwise than that such a combination of qualities and powers should produce a great preacher. Though not conspicuous in some of the lighter accomplishments of the popular orator, which are of small worth as compared with clearness and grasp of intellect, he never failed to grapple my attention, to instruct me profoundly, and to stimulate me intellectually and spiritually. Every text which he treated wears for me now a new complexion, more satisfying, more beautiful, more luminous. His method was conversational—ever the most effective. With steps not too rapid, he went straight to the heart of the text and laid it open. His illustrations, which always illustrated, were drawn for the most part either from his wonderfully rich experience or from the realm of science. He studied science sympathetically and unremittingly in all its branches, and mainly, I believe, for the light it might throw on the truth of God. No man was ever more loyal to the Bible, but he was not shut up in a particular view of it, inaccessible to new truth. He was on the alert for fresh light to break upon it from the revelations of the physical universe. Not content with a superficial and mechanical harmony of the facts of science and the Divine truth, he sought the true harmony, which is fundamental and vital. And herein lay the stimulating suggestiveness of his preaching. Not long ago he told me he was trying to discover what Jesus meant when he said, "I am the light of the world." "For six months," said he, "I have been reading all I can find in the Library on the subject of light—Tyndall's Lectures, Roscoe's Spectrum Analysis, etc.—but I can't preach on that text yet."

The last sermon which I heard from him, that of thanksgiving day, on the text, "Blessed are they that dwell in thy house; they will be still praising thee," was a typical one. After briefly setting forth the delights of public worship, he advanced to his main point, which contemplated the kingdom of God as a watch tower, a point of observation, from which the facts of individual and of universal experience might be seen in their proper perspective and relation. In this elevated position he was a cordial optimist, and saw how the progress of science, the discord of the industrial world, the sifting of Biblical criticism, and the ambitions of evil men were but factors in the growing good of the world, converging upon the consummation of the kingdom of God.

I do not think of Dr. Royall as dead. I think of him, in an unbroken life, with the same tastes that controlled him here, pursuing his studies of the Divine mysteries in the University of God, where all is light. And in God's own time I would fain follow him there.

THE STUDENT'S VIEW OF DR. ROYALL.

Bro. I. T. Newton, in behalf of the students, spoke as follows:

In speaking of Dr. Royall, it remains for me, as a student, to speak of his life as we (the students) saw it.

First, in his work in the class-room, he never seemed to desire to make the impression upon us that he had a great store of knowledge from which he would give us a bit here and there as we were able to receive it, but he seemed to come among us as our brother, yea, if I may say it, our servant. And here his christian character seemed to manifest itself as clearly as at any point; for he seemed in this way to be seeking to follow Christ, who said of himself, "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." As has already been said of him, he continued to seek after knowledge himself, and at the same time helped us in our efforts to higher attainments. If I may so illustrate it, he seemed to be reaching out with one hand for more and yet more, and with the other to be taking hold of us to assist us to his own level.

Again, in his government of the class, he did not control by the exercise of his authority as a professor of the institution. Surely he could have done this as well as any man, and his superior reputation and scholarship would have given him a greater right to have done so, but he did not rule in this way. His great heart, full of love and interest to all, gave him control of those under his care.

He also manifested a special interest in the young ministers. We all felt as free to go to him and seek advice as to our own fathers. There was a glow of sunshine always about him which seemed to invite us near. On Sunday evenings he met a class of young ministers to which he gave instruction from texts of Scripture, and otherwise looking to their assistance in future work. A few days before his departure he was heard to remark that he enjoyed his Sunday evening class more than all the other work of the week.

I cannot help thinking of this institution as being a family in which there are larger and smaller children. When the father of a family is called away, the larger children, realizing their responsibility, may bear it better; but the little children do not see how they will get along without him. So we, as the little children of this institution, do not just now see how we can do without the influence of this man. True, there are others whose influence over us will be good, but all men are not alike, and we will greatly miss the special influence which his life had upon us. It seems to me that, if I had been standing by him when his spirit was called away, I would have felt like saying, in the language of Elisha, "My father, my father, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof." I esteem it a privilege to pay this tribute to the memory of him whom we not only respected and honored, but whom, in our inmost hearts, we sincerely loved.

The subject allotted to President Taylor was,

DOCTOR ROYALL AS A TEACHER.

He spoke as follows:

How can one speak briefly, as I must, and yet adequately, of the great educator who is gone from among us? That he was a great educator, no one can question. If a list of the foremost teachers that the South has produced should be made, his name would stand very high upon the roll. Long before I had ever met him, I had come to associate together the names of Hooper and Royall and Curtis, a triumvirate of scholars who ennobled, especially among Southern Baptists, the calling and work of a true teacher.

Time is allowed me to do little more than mention just a few of the reasons of this pre-eminence.

1. He was thoroughly equipped for his work. Few, I imagine, have any idea how broad and accurate were his attainments. In his early life in Charleston, as I have reason to know, he memorized many of the Odes of Horace and passages from other Latin and Greek authors. His college training was received under the great and good Dr. Thornwell, who was in the South what Dr. Wayland was in the North. Those who knew Dr. Royall not only saw in him a type of an old fashioned Southern gentleman, but also a representative of the best liberal culture of a time when learning had not become so specialized as it is now.

2. In all his work as a teacher, he never forgot that he was a preacher of the gospel. I well remember that at a time when my own mind was agitated by the question of going into the pastorate or of occupying a professor's chair, he presented with clearness and force the considerations which had led him, while a preacher, to give so much of his life to the instruction of the young. And those who know how he impressed himself, or rather, the Christ that was in him, upon others, and what large service he rendered in helping to prepare others to preach more effectively, can never doubt the wisdom of his course.

3. His faithfulness. He was at all times ready to undertake even more than his just share to be done, and when he had undertaken it, he did it, not perfunctorily, but with all his heart. Not infrequently have I seen him on his way to his recitation room when I did not believe that he was well enough to leave his fireside.

4. He commanded the respect of all who studied under him. No one could take liberties with him. He was always easy of approach to those who needed his counsel or assistance, but there was a dignity in his bearing which repelled unwarranted intrusion. He could be genial, but was never flippant. I never knew a word or anecdote to pass his lips which would bring a blush to the cheek of modesty. And yet, while he thoroughly commanded respect, and while never sought for popularity, he was one of the most beloved of all the teachers in the State.

5. He grew to the last. He never ceased to be a student. Few men of his age have kept their minds as fresh as he did. His eyes and ears were always open, and his mind and heart receptive, for new truth or new phases of old truth. This is one reason why he was so successful a teacher, for when any man ceases to be a student and a learner, it is high time that he quit teaching. No man, as Arnold of Rugby used to say, can get a refreshing draught from a stagnant pool. Dr. Royall brought into his lecture-room and into the pulpit a mind freshened by constant activity and laden with the spoils of recent acquisition. Such men never grow old; they never wear out.

It is with sadness—not for him but for ourselves—that I contemplate the vacancy that has been made in our number. Whither shall we go to find such another man? We might possibly find one of as deep piety, though that were hard to do. We may find some specialist who can carry as well the work of his school. There may be others who can preach with as much freshness and fullness and unction as he. But where shall we find one man who as a scholar, a student, a teacher, a preacher, a christian, and a man, can take his place?

After the conclusion of the exercises in Memorial Hall, the long procession wended its way to the cemetery, where Wingate and Wait and Brooks and Walters and Simmons sleep. There by loving hands the remains were laid to rest.

ELIZABETH BAILEY ROYALL.

Had my dear father been called upon to name the human influence that had operated most powerfully upon him, in stimulating him to all noble endeavor, in inspiring him with hopefulness and courage and patience and charity, those who know the estimate he placed upon her who walked hand in hand with him for well nigh half a century, need not to be told what would have been his response. When sometimes in the course of a sermon he would draw his most telling illustration from some incident of real life, any of the family who might be present would at once recognize in the principal character the cherished one, of whom, within the hallowed precinct of home, he was wont to speak as the bravest and most self forgetful of beings.

After her death, which occurred on July 24th, 1892, the desire being expressed by members of the family that some account of her life should be prepared for publication, he declared his purpose to do this himself so soon as he might venture to undertake it. Two or three times, when reference was made to the subject, he would simply remark that the time had not yet come. So interwoven had been their lives that the least jar still caused to bleed afresh the wounds their temporary severance had made.

My mother was born at Mount Pleasant, near Charleston, S. C., Aug. 26, 1821, and was the oldest child of Dr. Robert S. Bailey, a well known and highly esteemed physician in his day, having received his professional education in London and being a contributor to one or more of the leading medical journals of this country. She was a sister of Dr. Thomas P. Bailey, late President of the Medical Association of South Carolina.

On Oct. 12, 1843, she was married to my father. Into this union she entered with the full consent of her mind to be a preacher's wife, and never was station more faithfully, more heroically filled. Forty years ago amid the wilds of Florida, my father, often absent for weeks on the frontier as a missionary, bravely and lovingly she did her part as the help mate of the Lord's servant. Nor did one of the little ones, over whom so tenderly and faithfully and wisely she watched, ever hear from her lips a whisper of discontent at her lot in life. Her exalted conception of the preacher's calling was such as to invest that calling in the minds of her children with a wholesome sacredness and dignity, while it left untrammelled the man of God, who knew that all was well at home so far as a heart loyal to his Master and his Master's servant could make it so. Wherever duty found him; whether in the pulpit, the country school, or the professor's chair, her unwavering confidence in the integrity of his purpose rendered her an intelligent and cheerful sympathizer with him in every detail of his work. When there was no token of appreciation from others of arduous task performed, her "well done" was often to his soul as the prophecy of the Master's plaudit.

When she was taken from his side, though the ambition to fulfil his mission seemed to suffer no abatement, all desire simply to live was gone; to depart and be with Christ seemed far better.

The last two years that my mother spent on earth were in some respects the sweetest and brightest years of her life. Though paralyzed and in a measure helpless, her presence was to us all a well-spring of gladness.

"The King hath called her higher
Into his royal dome.
The trumpet tone hath sounded,
Her willing voice replied;
Now with encircled glory,
She sitteth at his side.
Christ's perfect "blood that cleanseth"
Was all her entrance plea;
That crimson stream which floweth
Hath set her spirit free.
And, "I am trusting Jesus"
Was the keynote of her life,
She realized his power
Throughout her earthly strife."

W. B. ROYALL.

A minister in the East recently said: "My brethren, the collection will now be taken for my expenses for a trip, for I am going away for my health. The more I receive, the longer I can stay." The largest collection ever made in that church was taken, and the question now being considered is whether the size of the collection was a compliment to the preacher, or the reverse.—The Standard.

Self-knowledge is that acquaintance with ourselves which shows us what we are, what we ought to be, in order to live comfortably and usefully here, and happily hereafter.—Mason.

THE MISSIONARY CALL.

The theory is, we believe, firmly and generally held by our people, and especially by our missionaries, that when one is called to do foreign mission work that God will so forcibly impress that fact on his heart, mind, and conscience, that he is constrained to enter upon it. There are those who hold that, so far as actual preachers are concerned, the call to enter the foreign field and preach to the heathen, pagan, or imperfectly christianized world, is just as distinct and imperative as the call in the first place to enter the ministry at home. It is rather a risky thing for one who does not profess to have received such a call to do mission work, to attempt a discussion of the question, "What is, or what constitutes a missionary call," but we wish to devote this paper, not to a dogmatic consideration of this subject, but to the plan of exciting, if possible, some discussion on the part of correspondents, and especially on the part of our missionaries, of a matter of really vast importance; and this importance is only emphasized in the light of later events in the history of mission work.

Is it true, then, that some of our godly men and women are the subjects of distinct calls from God to enter the foreign field and devote themselves to distinctly mission work? This we believe, but must confess that we are not well prepared to reason on what constitutes this call or what it means. From recent articles we have read bearing on this subject, we are inclined to think that there are some among us who are rather skeptical as to a distinct mission call. They seem to think the call to preach the gospel is all that God makes upon men, and as the mission work is one, whether done at home or abroad, that those who are called to preach need not expect any distinct sense of another and further call to preach to the heathen. While we do not endorse this position, yet we are free to admit that the two calls should never be so divorced one from another as to insist that one who cannot claim to have received a distinct mission call has no right to go to the foreign field. We are further inclined to think that one who has only received the usual call to enter the ministry may be so led in the providence of God, step by step, toward the mission work, as that he feels it to be his duty to enter it without any distinct or vivid impressions, in his case at least, of a separate and well defined call to do that work. We honestly fear that quite a number of our talented young ministers are kept back from entering the foreign mission work by supposing that an ordinary call to preach the gospel neither includes, nor has any necessary connection, with a call to do mission work. If we understand Christ's marching orders to his soldiers, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," the call to preach, in one sense, makes every one who receives it a missionary, either at home or abroad. When one feels called to preach, then, and enters the work of the ministry, he should be ready to do the Lord's bidding, and labor at home or abroad as God may direct.

According to this opinion we contend that no young man called to preach has the right to decide to settle down in a comfortable pastorate among the home people until he has earnestly inquired of the Lord where he would have him labor. One of the best times for God to speak to man is when man is on his knees before him earnestly seeking the divine guidance as to work the Lord would have him do. It was while Paul prayed in the temple at Jerusalem that the Lord spoke to him and said, "Depart, for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles." Has the faithful soldier the right, after he enlists in an army commanded by a competent general, to coolly decide where he will post himself and do battle, regardless of the wishes and preferences of his commanding officer? Neither has the faithful soldier of Christ the right to decide for himself where he will battle for the truth before he seeks to know the will of his great Commander.

So, while we believe there is, or may be, what can be claimed as a distinct call to do foreign mission work; yet such call may not be alike in all cases, and ought not to be so emphasized as to produce the impression that no one called to preach the gospel is under any obligation to seriously consider the claims of the foreign mission work upon him unless strongly under the conviction of [illegible] as a mission call. The [illegible] can receive from God is to [illegible] gospel at home or from home; [illegible] in some cases at least, what is recognized as a call to the foreign field may include but little classed under the head of "spiritual impressions," except such a practical culmination of events as to enable any preacher to say "the path of duty leads me to enter the foreign work; I must walk in it." One fact among others that strengthens this assertion is, that some of our most faithful and successful missionaries did efficient work in the pastorate at home before entering the foreign field.

We are aware of the fact that the above view may not so well accord with the fervid, and possibly somewhat gushing experiences of some of our more youthful missionaries, especially those who entered the noble work in which they are engaged without devoting any time to the pastorate at home. Yet this great work is one which involves such vast consequences and demands on the part of those who would successfully prosecute it, such patience, steadfastness, and practical heroic fortitude, that we do well to emphasize the practical and the real about it, while admitting the romantic and poetic element in it, and only making due allowance for what is claimed as the fervid spiritual impressions of those who entered the work in the sunny days of their youth, when distance and inexperience both lent enchantment to the view of mission work among the heathen.

There are other questions we are prompted to ask bearing on this subject which we would be glad to have answered by those especially who are engaged in the work mentioned; for instance, the following: What is the true relation between the call to preach at home and the further call to preach to the people of foreign lands? Does the call to go to foreign lands ever precede that to preach at home; or is it the usual order for the call to the foreign field to follow the other? Is this call to preach to the heathen for life; or is it to be regarded as temporary in its nature? Does this call to labor in the foreign field include laymen and godly women; and is it true that their impressions are as strong and abiding as those who do the official work of preaching?

These and similar questions are clearly involved in the theory of a distinct call to do mission work; and we contend that they need discussion and ventilation; for there seems to me more or less confusion in the minds of our people in regard to the matter. Even our missionaries, we believe, are not fully agreed as to the nature of this call, how and when it comes, &c. Another thing about the matter puzzles us, and that is, we find good men going to the foreign field, and then concluding, after they reach it, that they have made a mistake, and that they are not called to the work which, only a few months before, they entered with enthusiasm. And again, there are other good men who engage for years in the work; but after returning home, from one cause or another, they seem content to remain, and do not feel impressed with the necessity of returning to the work. How shall we explain all these things consistently with the theory usually held by our people and by our missionaries. None are so well qualified to discuss them as our missionaries, and we hope to hear from them, and from our brethren at home, who have given this matter proper consideration.

THE Road Congress meets in Raleigh on the 19th inst. for the purpose of influencing the Legislature to pass a general law for macadamizing the roads throughout the State.

One of the prevailing arguments its advocates set forth in favor of it is, that it will save 50 per cent. of the horse power used. When in fact more than one half of the area of the State would not be benefitted one cent by it. In all the eastern section comprising nearly two-thirds of the State's area, the land is level, and there is not only no need of macadamized roads, but there is no material in that section to make them; there are no rocks, and in many places the sand is so deep that a foundation could not be obtained for it. It would be a consummate outrage to tax that section of the State to build roads for the clay section.

If, indeed, such roads were needed all over the State, the appropriation to build them ought not to be made now, when our people are groaning under burdens too grievous to be borne. If all that is claimed for these roads be true, the results would not be realized under ten years, while the whole expense would come upon us right away, and at a time when we are loaded down to the water's edge.

But the time will never be when the eastern section of the State will need such roads. The most that ought to be expected of the Legislature is to give the sections that really need them the right to tax themselves, by counties or by townships, to build them.

....Last July one of the best citizens of Granville county professed faith and joined a Baptist church. Before his conversion, he used to drink whiskey occasionally, and sometimes to rather an excess. On a recent Sabbath he said to his pastor and some of his brethren: "I have not taken a drink of anything intoxicating since I joined the church last July. I have thought the matter over, and have reached the conclusion that if a church member is going to make a business of going into bar rooms he ought first to go to his church and have his name erased. I do not believe that any man who visits a bar-room is fit for a church member."

HON. W. H. KITCHIN, member of the present General Assembly, addressed a letter to the president of each denominational male college in the State on the subject of education. The correspondence between him and Dr. Chas. E. Taylor, President of Wake Forest College, we now give to the public:—

Pres. C. E. Taylor, Wake Forest, N. C.:

DEAR SIR:—There is a good deal of talk since the Governor's message as to the relations that exist and ought to exist between the University and the denominational colleges of the State, and as to the duty of the present Legislature in this regard; and especially as to the appropriation for the University, as to free tuition, and as to where the University should begin its course of instruction, and where the denominational colleges should stop. Also as to the graded and normal schools.

Will you give me your views on these points, as to what ought to be done to harmonize all competitive and conflicting interests, so as to care for all and do no wrong or damage to any? The views you may present will be freely used by me if there should be any contest in the House in regard to the University. I don't want to be understood as an enemy to the University. I am its friend, and the University must be sustained; but it must not be allowed to encroach upon or break down our denominational colleges. It seems to me that it would be to the glory and honor of the University, as well as to the colleges, if the apparent contest between them could be amicably ended. They all are indispensable to each other, and must continue to be, if the educational interests of the State are to be advanced.

Very respectfully,
W. H. KITCHIN.

Hon. W. H. Kitchin, General Assembly of North Carolina:

MY DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge your letter of enquiry, and, in reply, to give a free and candid expression of my opinion on the points suggested by you.

The weakest point in the educational system of North Carolina is not at the top, but at the bottom. There are in the State 594,577 children of school age. (Maj. Finger's Report, page 9.) Of these, 61 per cent. attend public and private schools (page 30.) More than 231,000 children of school age are not even enrolled in any school. The Constitution (which is so often referred to in connection with the University) requires that the public schools shall be kept open sixteen weeks each year. As a matter of fact, they are kept open only thirteen weeks. Maj. Finger makes a strong appeal, to which, in my opinion, the Legislature should respond, for an adequate appropriation.

Under these circumstances, is it "practicable," to use the language of the Constitution, for the General Assembly to allow any of the funds at its disposal for educational purposes to be applied for free tuition at the State University? Common-school education is a recognized necessity for intelligent citizenship under free institutions. The law of self-preservation demands that a State should provide it.

But this is not the case with higher education, which creates in the recipient the power to pay for it. And this he should always be required to do, unless special provision be made by private beneficence. But so long as the General Assembly is unable to enforce the requirement of the Constitution in regard to the length of the school terms, and so long as two hundred and thirty thousand children are receiving no education, it is not right to spend money raised by taxation in giving free tuition at our State University. However it may be in other States, it is neither right nor "practicable" amid the conditions which at present prevail in North Carolina. And I do not believe that the great majority of the voters of the State approve it. The giving of free tuition at Chapel Hill will appear to be still less "practicable" when it is remembered that there are six other colleges in the State which are placed at disadvantage thereby. Nearly a million dollars have been invested in these institutions, not one cent of which has come from the public treasury. They are in position, for many reasons, to do a work for the people of the State which no single institution can possibly accomplish. But it will be impossible for these to compete successfully with a State college which offers to several classes of young men free tuition, and whose requirements for admission and for baccalaureate degrees are about the same as their own. Not only will many young men be drawn from colleges which they would otherwise have patronized by the State's gift of $240, for four years tuition, but it will become more and more difficult every year for these colleges to collect tuition fees from those who do attend them. If free tuition, even as offered now by the State University, is endorsed by the General Assembly as right in principle and "practicable" at the present time, the struggle for existence can be maintained by the several other colleges only so far as they can make the same offer. That this is not an imaginary danger, will be clear to any one who will examine into the details. The recent increase of patronage at the State University is believed to be, in some degree, at the expense of patronage lost by other institutions.

In my opinion, all free tuition at the University ought to be prohibited by the Legislature, except so far as it may be provided for by private beneficence.

Of course this hurtful competition, which at present endangers the usefulness and normal development of the other colleges of the State, would not exist, were the University's requirements for admission and for the A. B. degree more decidedly above those of the colleges. A University in North Carolina is a necessity. Should the General Assembly so control its policy as to secure the loving and enthusiastic co-operation of the colleges and the people of the State, it might become, not immediately, but within a few years, one of the greatest and most useful institutions of the country. But as things are now, it will either fail of the usefulness by reason of constant friction with the colleges, or will achieve the greatness by dwarfing or destroying them.

Major Finger says in his report (p. 45,) "The city schools * * * have courses of study * * * leading to the colleges and the University." If it is the policy of the Legislature to keep the State institution upon this plane, then the colleges may be compelled to ask for new charters which will enable them, also, to give university degrees while doing college work. If it is about as easy to get a university diploma as it is to get a college diploma few young men will hesitate long in making their choice. If it be necessary for the sake of those who have no college of their own to do college work at Chapel Hill, it should be done by a college as an annex of the University, or should, in some other way, be differentiated from the University proper. The latter should put its emphasis and strength upon such literary, scientific and professional work as would attract graduate students from all the colleges, and it should give higher degrees than those conferred by the latter.

Such a University would be the apex of the pyramid, the crown of the dome. With such an arrangement there would be a real and complete system of education in North Carolina, a system which would provide a plan for all the colleges, which are now either quietly ignored or tolerated as excrescences upon the present system. The antagonisms which are so distasteful to the friends of the University and the colleges would cease. The rivalry and competition, incident to the pressing of the idea that prevails in Michigan and Colorado, would all end and harmony would prevail.

Such a policy might require concessions from the colleges in the length of their courses of study. These should be duly considered, and if found necessary, they should be cheerfully made.

For such a university, but not for free education, the General Assembly should make such appropriations as may be necessary for present support and for future development. That development will surely come, if, instead of antagonizing the colleges, their natural leader shall make them its most loyal friends and helpers, as they really wish to be. And the time may come when it shall be evident that some who are now supposed to be unfriendly or obstructive to the University are those who formed for it the highest ideal and had large and far-reaching plans for its fulfilment.

Very truly yours,
CHARLES E. TAYLOR.

The 106th annual communication of the N. C. Grand Lodge of Masons was held in Raleigh last week. There was a large attendance of representatives of lodges. The following officers for the ensuing year were elected: Grand Master—John W. Cotton of Tarboro; Deputy Grand Master—F. M. Moye of Wilson; Grand Senior Warden—R. J. Noble of Smithfield; Grand Junior Warden—W. E. Moore of Webster; Grand Treasurer—Wm. Simpson of Raleigh; Grand Secretary—W. H. Bain of Raleigh.

The Late Dr. Royall—A Monument Proposed.

Dear Recorder:—A saintlier character was never welcomed by the angels than that of good Dr. Royall, the announcement of whose death last week filled with affectionate sorrow the hearts of hundreds of old Wake Forest students. Wake Forest will never seem quite the same place without that well known figure, that familiar stride, and that benevolent face.

What student could come near to him without instinctively recognizing the presence of a spiritual, yet manly nature, rare among men? Dr. Royall came nearer combining Christliness with a spirit of high chivalry, to the detriment of neither, than any man I have ever known. We used to speak of him as "a gentleman of the old school;" rather would it be true to say that he was a gentleman of Christ's school, learned in his courtesy, and trained in the love wherewith he loved us. I have often thought of the professors at Wake Forest, and the characteristic influence of each over the student, and from many false and prejudiced opinions wrought a high and grateful regard for each one of them. But one could not be the other, and each had his own way of impressing his students.

Dr. Taylor, vigilant and earnest in all that he laid his hands to, grasping to his heart the whole College, influencing the students as a whole rather than as individuals, never got quite as near to the individual student as did some of the other Professors, whose opportunities were better.

Prof. W. B Royall—incorruptible in justice as Brutus—Draconean, we thought, sometimes as an instructor, but always Aristidean. He was par excellence as a teacher, yet so gentle in disposition that the two hundred critics loved him, and each stood ready to resent any wrong or insult. I recall on one occasion that he received through mistake from the third story window a bucket of water intended for another gentleman. A thrill of indignation ran through the whole College, and the perpetrators placed on the bulletin board an explanation and an apology. He was, and is, venerated by all, not for his age, but for the simple goodness of his character, and a tribute of love awaits him when the Lord shall have called him.

Prof. Mills, occupying a chair unfortunate for popularity, was yet the counsellor of many, and respected by all. All his students must remember him kindly for the very reason that in his chair he was able to help them out of deeper difficulties than any other.

These were the elder men who shaped us. Of the younger I need not speak. But amid them all, as I look back now, there was one figure of most venerable mien, in whose hand was kindness, purity and wisdom above all the men who led us during the four years of college life—Dr. Wm. Royall. But rich as he was in christian grace, there was no lack of spirit. A South Carolinian, the gaudia certaminis born of other days, sometimes flashed out of his eyes as with all charity he talked of the South of ante bellum days and of the great men, some of whom he had known personally, of that period. Dr. Royall was an adviser. He sympathized with young men. The fires of youth still burned on the altar of his own soul. He spoke from that light with such a sincere sympathy that no young man after seeking him out ever left him despairing and cast down. I have a letter written a little over a year ago, while earnestly engaged in considering my life's most important step, namely, an entrance into the ministry, in which his own youthful struggles over the same ground were recounted, and in words so kind and full of sage advice that I can never prize it too highly.

But the real object of this letter was not to speak of these things, but to submit a question and a proposition. Shall the ashes of this great and good man of God, so universally revered, loved and admired, who gave without stint the ripeness of his wisdom to us, when care and retirement would have prolonged his life, shall they repose without a fitting testimonial from his old students of their grateful affection? I propose a monument suitable to his memory. Will not the last five classes—'88, '89, '90, '91, '92—unite in an effort to raise among themselves a sufficient sum to accomplish this result? I call upon the class of '90 to take the lead in this undertaking.

JOHN E. WHITE.

Wilson, Jan. 11, 1893.

From Winston, N. C.

Dear Recorder:—Sunday, Jan. 1st, 1893, was a big day for the Broad Street Baptist church. The church was handsomely decorated, and there was a large congregation, for the unusually bad weather, present to witness our exercises. We met at eleven o'clock, and, after appropriate Scripture lesson and singing, we had an address by the Sunday-school superintendent, Bro. D. Rich, on "Our School—its Past and Present." In speaking of its progress, he said: "Last March we had a membership of fifty, and to-day more than a hundred." Next followed an address by Deacon A. J. Hunt, who spoke on "Our Church—its Past and its Present." He spoke of the rapid progress of the church during this time. He said that according to our church book, we had gone from thirty-eight to one hundred and seven. Our collections also had kept up with the increase. He spoke of the addition to the church building—the noble work of painting the interior of the church by the ladies, and other features of interest along this line. Then followed an address by the pastor on "What of the Future?" He spoke of the unity on the part of the church in holding up his hands in the past, and then went on to outline the work to be done this year. Among other things, he said we want a tent this spring and summer in which to hold evangelistic services in destitute portions of the city. Also he wanted us to begin to look to the building of a new house of worship—one that will meet the demands of the times and circumstances.

After these addresses, we all, with our visiting friends, went back into the annex, and had a good lunch together. We then came back in the church and had an address by Dr. C. A. Rominger of Reidsville on "The Bible, and How to Use It." Dr. R. was at his best and made an address which will stick to our people as long as they live. He dealt in plain facts concerning Bible study, and his suggestions were original and clear.

After this we had the Lord's supper, and wound up with "God be with you till we meet again" and a general handshake. By this time it was five o'clock. We went home and came back at seven, when I tried to preach to them on "Christian Unity." Thus ended the best day in my life.

Let me say, in conclusion, that our congregations are larger and larger all the time. Our capacity is almost exhausted, and soon we will branch out for larger quarters.

Last Wednesday night we decided to put in at once a good heater, and so the work has begun. Now if this is "tooting my own horn," I ask pardon till next January, when, if we have such a time as we did this time, I shall "toot" again.

L. G. BROUGHTON.

Winston, N. C.

Letter from Rev. A. C. Dixon.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—The great Convention in Raleigh was an inspiration to all who were there and to many of us who could not be there. Bronchitis was a new disease for me, and I was afraid to take any risks; but I recovered so rapidly that I was almost sorry that I did not disregard the doctor's advice and go anyhow. I have determined, however, to make up as far as possible for the good time lost by taking a trip through North Carolina in the spring, when I shall hope to see some of my old friends whom I failed to see in Raleigh.

The work in Brooklyn moves steadily on under God's blessing. The Hanson Place church has grown in two years from six hundred to over eight hundred members. The weekly prayer-meeting has been crowded out of the lecture-room into the main auditorium and has an average attendance of about four hundred. Two Sundays ago our Sunday school had present twenty more than were ever known to be present before in the history of the school.

Our "Training Institute for Christian Workers" numbered last session about seventy-five. The young people's devotional meeting on Monday evening has an attendance of about two hundred. For the past two Sundays I have preached at three p. m. in the "Grand Opera House," and the Spirit of God was present in great power to save. Last Sunday twenty-three men and women yielded to Christ, and as many more asked us to pray for them. One of the converts, a man forty five years of age, said he had not been to church in twenty two years. Our prayer and hope is that we shall, sooner or later, open every theatre in the city on Sunday afternoons for evangelistic services. It is one of the best ways of reaching the non-church goers in large cities.

There are many earnest consecrated christians in our churches who are ready for such work. They believe the Bible with all their hearts and trust the gospel as the power of God unto salvation.

We have been rejoicing over the result of our collection for the Foreign Mission Centennial fund. The Hanson Place church gave to Foreign Missions last year about four hundred dollars. I surprised them by asking them for two thousand dollars this year, and they in turn surprised me by giving about three thousand dollars. The pastor is no happier than the people over the result. If other churches increase their collections in proportion, two millions, instead of one, will come in.

Last Sunday I had the pleasure of shaking the hand of Bro. Newton, just returned from Africa, and I am delighted almost every Sunday by the sight of familiar faces from the South in our congregation. President Taylor of Wake Forest College has cheered me several times by his presence and words. Many a Wake Forest student feels bereaved in the death of Dr. William Royall. Did a better, lovelier man ever live?

If brethren should happen to be in New York on Friday evenings and would like to spend an hour in a good, warm prayer-meeting, let them cross the Brooklyn Bridge, take the Fulton Street Elevated road, get off at Cumberland Street Station, and walk two blocks to Hanson Place. We will give them a cordial welcome.

Cordially yours, A. C. DIXON.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 11, 1893.

The Best Society.

D. L. Moody tells, in one of his sermons, of a man who by sin and profligacy had gone down to disgrace and ruin. His condition was wretched in the extreme. Life was a burden. He resolved to reform and be a better man. But he had gone so low, and had become so weak, that he felt he needed help to enable him to rise to a better life. So he applied to an Odd Fellow's Lodge for admission, thinking they would help him. But they told him that they would only receive persons whose character measured up to a certain standard of goodness; but his was so far below their standard that they could not take him. He then applied to a Masonic Lodge for membership and help. They investigated his character, and his application for membership was black-balled.

Sad and disheartened, the poor fellow asked, "Where else can I go for help?" In early night, he walked sadly along a street of the city. He came to a house from whose windows and doors streamed forth beautiful light. Going nearer, he heard sweet music. He stopped and listened. He said to himself, "How sweet that music is! I wonder if they would let me go in and hear it?" He timidly ventured to the door. A gentleman met him with a smile, and a hearty shake of the hand, and bid him welcome to a seat. He was delighted with the prayer meeting. At its close he was cordially invited to the Sunday-school on the next Sunday morning. He was there. He was made welcome. A place was given him in the "Stranger's Class." At the close of the Sunday-school, he was invited to remain for preaching. He did so. And as the preacher told of how Jesus loved sinners—the worst of sinners, and died to save them, and now invited them to come and be saved, the poor fellow said, "That is good news to me. I want help. I am a helpless sinner. If Jesus loves me, and will save me, I will give myself to him." He did so, and was saved. He was happy in Jesus' love. The church received him to membership. He became a good and honorable man.

Two societies rejected him, but the third, Christ's society, the church, took him into her prayer-meeting, her Sunday-school, her preaching service, and thus helped him on to Christ and salvation.

Christ's society is infinitely better than any human societies. Why will men draw away from the only truly good society so much of their time, labor, influence and money, and spend them on infinitely inferior human societies? Societies all of whose work that is good, can be, and ought to be done through the churches.

CHURCH-LOVER.

Synopsis of the New South Carolina Liquor Law.

WHAT THE BRETHREN SAY ABOUT IT.

The following is a brief sketch of the leading features of the new liquor act:

Sec. 2. The Governor shall appoint a State Commissioner, who shall purchase all intoxicating liquors for this State and furnish the same to "dispensers." He shall have a salary of $1,800 and a book keeper with a salary $1,200, and shall live in Columbia. The Governor, Attorney-General and Comptroller-General shall constitute the State Board of Control, who shall prescribe rules for carrying on the liquor business, and shall appoint the county dispensers.

Sec. 3. The State Commissioner shall ship all liquor to the dispensers in packages of not less than a pint and not more than five gallons, and the dispensers shall sell it in the unbroken packages—and it shall not be drunk on the premises. This does not apply to lager beer and other malt liquors.

Sec 4. The State Board of Control shall appoint County Boards of Control of three persons, who shall hold offices for two years and shall prescribe rules for the county dispensaries of their respective counties, and shall serve without pay.

Sec. 5, Prescribes penalties for the county dispenser purchasing liquor except from the State Commissioner.

Sec. 6, Prohibits municipalities granting liquor licenses beyond April 30, 1893. It also prohibits manufacture of liquor except as provided in the act. Persons can manufacture wine for their own use, but cannot sell it in this State except to the State Commissioner, nor ship it out of the State except by his permission.

Sec. 7. Provides for selection of county dispensers by county boards of control. The dispenser shall not sell any liquor for more than fifty per cent. profit.

Sec. 8. There shall be only one dispenser for each county and his place of business shall be at the county seat; except that in Charleston there may be ten and in Columbia three: "Provided, that in the judgment of the county board of control, other dispensaries may be established in any county or other towns."

Sec. 9. Matters of detail, for the guidance of the dispenser.

Sec. 10. Provides that the county board of control shall use the office of the county commissioners; that the clerk of the county commissioners shall serve as their clerk, and that they and said clerk shall each receive a compensation for their services of $2.00 per day for not exceeding thirty days in the year, and five cents mileage each way. The net profits of the "dispensary" shall be paid one-half to the town or city and one-half to the county. The pay for "county dispenser and his associates" is to be fixed by the State Board of Control.

Sec. 11. This is an important section and reads as follows:

"Sec. 11. Before selling or delivering any intoxicating liquors to any person, a request must be presented to the county dispenser, printed or written in ink, dated of the true date, stating the age and residence of the signer, for whom and whose use the liquor is required, the quantity and kind requested, and his or her true name and residence, and, where numbered, by street and number, if in a city, and the request shall be signed by applicant in his own true name and signature, attested by the county dispenser or his clerk who receives and files the request, in his own true name and signature and in his own handwriting. But the request shall be refused if the county dispenser filling it personally knows the person applying is a minor, that he is intoxicated or that he is in the habit of using intoxicating liquors to an excess; or if the applicant is not so personally known to said county dispenser before filling said order or delivering said liquor, he shall require identification, and the statement of a reliable and trustworthy person of good character and habits, known personally to him, that the applicant is not a minor and is not in the habit of using intoxicating liquors to an excess."

Sec. 12. The blanks for requests to purchase shall be furnished by the State board to the Auditor, and by him in packages of one hundred, to the dispenser, and these blanks when filled shall be returned to the Auditor.

Sec. 13. The "dispenser" shall make a monthly report to the Auditor.

Sec. 14. Prescribes penalties for failure to make return to Auditor.

Sec. 15. The county dispenser shall keep a strict account of his business in a book to be furnished him.

Sec. 16. A liquor license from the United States government shall be prima facie evidence of violation of this law.

Sec. 17. Druggists must buy liquor for their medicines from the "dispenser," who charges them only ten per cent. profit.

Sec. 18. Appropriates $50,000 to buy liquor and carry on the business.

Sec. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24 and 25. Prescribes penalties for violation of this law by individuals, by dispensers, by common carriers and others.

Sec. 26. Authorizes the Governor to appoint constables at $2.00 a day to enforce this law.

Sec. 27. Provides that no law now in effect prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in any of the counties or towns of this State is repealed by this act.

Sec. 28. Repeals all inconsistent acts.

The following is an editorial from the Baptist Courier, South Carolina.

We give on the third page a brief synopsis of the new liquor law. We are glad to be able to give also in other columns the views of some esteemed brethren on this new law. The writers do not agree in all points. We are not surprised at this. That there views should differ somewhat is to be expected. This is not only a new, but a radical and untried measure. There are grave objections to the whole scheme; there are legal difficulties, there are serious flaws. Good and wise men see all this. It is not what prohibitionists asked for; it is not what they had a right to expect; it is a disappointment. Instead of prohibition it is the liquor business in a new form, the liquor business on the intensive system, the liquor business dignified, protected, monopolized. It is a powerful politico liquor ring. And yet, if this remarkable law can be enforced, the saloons will be closed and there are restrictions thrown around the "business."

Let us be thankful for any improvement, for any good that may come out of this legislative experiment. We hope for the best, but we are not sanguine. While it proposes to close the saloons, we believe the distilleries will be multiplied and the manufacture of wine will be largely developed. What is more demoralizing in a community than a liquor distillery? This whole thing is a scheme of shrewd politicians, rushed through for political effect—a great political machine to be worked by the pets of the politicians and for political purposes. It is centralization in its worst form. The blessed Lord can overrule all this. To this end let christian people pray. Our hope is in him. If this work is not of the Lord, may he bring defeat and show us the better way. If it is of his choosing, then may the Lord's will be done. But, with all reverence, we humbly submit, this new scheme does not look like his work.

Rev. John G. Williams gives his views of it thus:

While it is not a prohibitory bill, but simply to regulate and restrict the traffic, if its provisions are faithfully carried out it will be almost a prohibition measure. It strikes me that there is a great deal of prohibition in it. There are some excellent features in the bill, among which are the following:

1. It does away with bar-rooms, which are the very life and strength of the liquor traffic. For this reason I like the bill—that it shuts up the bar-rooms, the worst of all a country's curses.

2. It makes a two third vote of the freeholders of a town necessary before it can have a dispensary, and this provision will enable towns to dispense with dispensaries, where they don't want them.

3. The bill puts a stop to the railroads and express companies being whiskey carriers, except such as is ordered from the State dispenser, and this is a damaging blow to any attempt to evade the law.

4. An excellent feature of the bill is that the dispenser is not allowed to sell to a minor, nor to any one "addicted to drinking." Those addicted to drinking to excess are the ones that mostly buy whiskey.

5. The bill kills all those vile little "social clubs" after the manner of the big Columbia club that were springing up all over the country for the sale of whiskey, and composed of negroes and white men, and against which we were told that there was no law. Thanks to the Evans bill there is now a law against them, and the [illegible] concern in Columbia.

Prohibitionists may congraturate themselves on a great victory, and that the State is now pledged to practical porhibition. Let us work for the success of the Evans bill.

Help, Help Now.

Nearly all our beneficiaries are boarding in clubs, and they are compelled to settle up every thirty days. The December account has not all been settled yet. The Board of Education is now called upon to settle, but we have not a dollar to settle with.

Will not the churches and brethren send us a part of what they have pledged to this work. Help must come, or this work cannot long continue. Brethren, please send us relief as soon as you possibly can.

Professor James F. Babcock, the well-known chemical expert, for many years State Assayer for Massachusetts, recently purchased in open market a sample of Walter Baker & Co.'s Breakfast Cocoa, and, after making a careful analysis, filed a certificate in which he says: "I find that Walter Baker & Co.'s Breakfast Cocoa is absolutely pure. It contains no trace of any substance foreign to the pure roasted cocoa bean. The color is that of pure cocoa; the flavor is natural, and not artificial; and the product is in every particular such as must have been produced from the pure cocoa-bean without the addition of any chemical, alkali, acid or artificial flavoring substance, which are to be detected in cocoas prepared by the so-called "Dutch Process."

Revivals—No. 1.

Revivals of what? Revivals of religion, of course. Well, religion, that is, true religion that makes people better and saves the soul, is a good thing, the best thing, and a revival of this kind of religion is the best thing that can happen.

True religion is based on the truth. It has God for its author, his truth for its foundation, the salvation of the soul for its object and heaven for its reward. In proportion as true religion is revived, in the same proportion is God exalted in the minds of the people, his word studied, reverenced and obeyed, and the rewards of heaven kept in view. With these eliminated, religion becomes shorn of its changing power over the affections and lives of men.

Man is a compound of matter and spirit. Go back to his origin. Whence came he? In all matters of importance it is necessary to go back to first principles. Here is his origin. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Gen. 2: 7.

That part of man which came from the earth is earthly in its nature, and is fed and sustained by the products of the earth. That part which came more directly from God, when he breathed into that body which came from the earth and man became a living soul, being more nearly allied to God, can be fed and kept in a healthful condition only by union with God. As the body derives its nourishment from the earth, so the soul must derive its nourishment from God. The soul is spiritual in its essence, and requires spiritual nourishment for its healthful sustenance.

The gospel provides for this, and opens to view a religion which is pre eminently spiritual. Jesus Christ as mediator between God and man, for great spiritual purposes concerning man, did much, very much, to secure this spiritual interest, without the doing of which we would certainly have been left in fearful wreck and ruin, but what he did avails nothing of itself. Some thing is wanting in the chain of human redemption to bring us to God. Christ was God manifest in the flesh, and while in the flesh he told his apostles that they should do greater works than he had done. He performed miracles, but the people were hardened and unbelieving, except a few who gathered around him and followed him in his journeyings and teaching among men. He was crucified, and nature was convulsed, the heavens were draped in darkness, and the dead arose and appeared among men, yet no one was converted and his disciples were bowed down with depressing grief.

After his resurrection he commanded his disciples to go to Jerusalem after his ascension and there tarry until they were endued with power from on high. He had promised them the Holy Spirit. There is much in that command and in that promise. They compose another, an important, an indispensable link in the plan to bring man into spiritual relationship with God. The day of pentecost disclosed and made plain the command and promises of Christ. This was the inauguration of the dispensation of the Spirit. "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord," should be the watchword of God's people in this dispensation of the Spirit. It was so with the apostles and their co-workers. They did the work as far as in them lay and God gave the power.

It would be interesting to note the progress of the gospel in Jerusalem and the thousands of converts in a short time, and then the spread of the gospel in surrounding countries after the brethren were scattered on the wings of the persecution that arose in the case of Stephen. Philip went down to Samaria and held a protracted meeting for a long time, and caused great joy in that city, and strong opposition, too, but when the people "believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, they were baptized, both men and women." Acts 8: 12. Pretty soon Saul of Tarsus was converted, (Acts 9th ch.,) then the door of the gospel was opened to the Gentiles in the case of Cornelius, (Acts 10th ch.,) and soon after the gospel was preached at Antioch, the metropolis of Syria. This was the first Gentile church, being composed mostly of Greeks. When the church at Jerusalem heard of the gospel being preached at Antioch and its success, they sent Barnabas there. On his arrival he saw the grace of God and was glad, and after remaining a while and laboring with the church he went over to Tarsus after Paul and brought him to Antioch, and the two labored together with the church a whole year. (Acts 11th ch.) Afterwards this church sent Paul and Barnabas out as foreign missionaries, and the gospel was preached in Asia Minor and other countries, and churches were planted and grew and multiplied.

In all this work of grace the apostles and those who labored with them relied on the Spirit. Paul, writing to the church at Corinth, says: "And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." 1 Cor. 2: 4. In all apostolic epistles great emphasis is put on the work of the Spirit, and in the apostolic labors we see the accompanying power of the Spirit as the efficient cause of success.

It would be interesting in the highest degree to trace the labors of the apostles, how they relied on the power of God by the Spirit for success, and how that power was vouchsafed to them in giving success to their ministry. Paul was a man of great learning, but he used his learning only as the vehicle of bearing the gospel to the people, and relied on the Spirit for success, and God gave the success.

What we need is a revival of spiritual religion, such as was experienced in the days of the apostles. And why not have it? We have the same divine truth which they had, and the same promise of Christ as to the Spirit which they had, for when he left the earth it was for all the ages of the church. "He shall abide with you forever." We are just playing with the spiritual power of the gospel, and grieving the Spirit at every point. Our ideas and modes on this point need re-setting, to drive away the dead, heartless stupor of formality into which we have fallen.

But further thoughts must be reserved for another paper by this OLD MAN.

Sunday-school Teachers have a peculiar mission to perform, which can be accomplished by no one else. Every word spoken or illustration used by the teacher, may make a lasting impression upon the young and tender mind of the pupil. Viewed from this standpoint, we see the infinite importance of teaching nothing but the truth, and using no helps but such as teach the pure, unadulterated word of God. The helps published by the American Baptist Publication Society are prepared by the best men in the denomination, and can be safely recommended. If we would have the children in the Baptist Sunday schools understand and believe our views of Bible truth, we must teach them while they are young. The literature of the Society is choice and varied, and the price within the reach of all.

—IS AN—

Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty-eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

Some Good Rules.

In an exchange we find the following rules, which were very much enforced upon us when we were young, and we do not think they would injure the world to be practiced now a little more universally.

Never exaggerate.
Never betray a confidence.
Never wantonly frighten others.
Never neglect to call upon friends.
Never leave home with unkind words.
Never laugh at the misfortune of others.
Never give a promise which you do not fulfill.

Never pick the teeth or clean the nails in company.
Never fail to give a polite answer to a civil question.
Never question a servant or a child about family affairs.
Never present a gift, saying it is of no use to yourself.
Never read letters that you may find addressed to others.
Never fail, if a gentleman, of being polite and civil to ladies.
Never call attention to the features or form of any one present.
Never associate with bad company: have good company or none.
Never look over the shoulder of another who is reading or writing.
Never appear to notice a scar, deformity, or defect in any one present.
Never refer to a gift you have made or favor you have rendered.
Never arrest the attention of an acquaintance by a touch; speak to him.—Exchange.

How the Apostles Died.

From history and tradition we learn that all the apostles, except John, died unnatural and cruel deaths, as follows:

Peter was crucified in Rome with his head down, on a cross similar to that used in the execution of Jesus.
Andrew was bound to a cross, and left to die from exhaustion.
James the Great was beheaded by order of Herod at Jerusalem.
James the Less was thrown from a high pinnacle, then stoned, and finally killed with a fuller's club.
Philip was bound and hanged against a pillar.
Bartholomew was flayed to death by command of a barbarous king.
Matthew was killed with a halbred.
Thomas was shot by a shower of arrows while at prayer, and afterwards run through the body with a lance.
Simon was crucified after the manner of Jesus.
Mark was dragged through the streets of Alexandria until he expired.
Luke was hanged on an olive tree in Greece.
John died a natural death.
Paul was beheaded by command of Nero.
Judas hanged himself.
Barnabas was stoned to death by the Jews.—Exchange.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure, be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Sold by Druggists, price 75c. per bottle.

A mirror may reveal but cannot remedy the irregularity and want of beauty of a face which looks into it. It may suggest to us many things belonging to expression which we may by thoughtful attention remedy. But if we turn away from it to carelessness and forgetfulness, we shall see ourselves unimproved, as we return again and again. The word of God is a mirror to our souls, a mirror having transforming power over us. "And he that looketh into the perfect law, the law of liberty, and so continueth, being not a hearer that forgetteth, but a doer that worketh, this man shall be blessed in his doing." "Beholding as in a glass the glory of God, we are changed into the same image, from glory to glory." This transforming law is well called "the law of liberty," or the law of deliverances. That is indeed a "perfect law" which can become to us "the law of liberty."—Christian Inquirer.

One of the best things that can happen to any man is to come into daily contact with other men who surpass him in scholarship, or in intellectual vigor, or in moral power, or in some other equally important particular. These examples of superiority are a constant reminder of his own defects and a constant stimulus to improvement.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

To obey God is liberty.—Seneca.

Look not mournfully into the past; it comes not back again. Wisely improve the present; it is thine. Go forth to meet the shadowy future without fear and with a manly heart.—Longfellow.

In these days of disappointments it is a gratification to know that one can buy a bottle of Salvation Oil for 25 cents.

Modern Missions and the Modern Church.

Jesus tells us (Luke 24: 47) that it behooved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead, that repentance and remissions of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, "beginning at Jerusalem." This last clause is the divine hyphen that makes our home and foreign work one work. It would be well if, in our missionary nomenclature, we followed the mind of Christ, and included our home and foreign work under the one conception of missions. For in the above statement our Lord makes all such work one. Modern Home Missions are related to Foreign Missions as effect is related to cause. In the apostolic church, however, the relation was as cause to effect. When the church life of the seventeenth century, which had become paralyzed by the formalism of worldliness, was quickened into spiritual life, under the revivals of Wesley and others, and sought expression in aggressive activity, the result was the modern Foreign Mission movement. This work abroad, reacting on the churches at home, organized a home mission movement. In the apostolic age, the Foreign Mission movement, which was the spirit of Christ's commission, "beginning at Jerusalem" (the church) extended to Judeah, (State Missions), then to Samaria, (Home Missions), and then to the uttermost parts of the earth, (Foreign Missions), Acts 1: 8. The interests of Home and Foreign Missions are, therefore, one, i. e. the interest of one is the interest of the other. It will not do, then, to plead the demands of the work at home as an excuse for not doing all we can for the work abroad. The more the desire that repentance and the remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, broadens our sympathies, enlarges our views, and shares our contributions, the more interested and devoted will we be to the work at home. Nothing has so enforced the claims of mission work at home and mission work abroad. A study of the activities of Home Mission work since 1792 confirms this statement: that the activity of Home Missions has been the greatest at those times when Foreign Mission efforts were the more earnest. This seems to be the order of things in the kingdom of Christ.

When we come to estimate the benefits of foreign work we find the effects of this work upon the churches at home is beyond all calculation. Mission work is but the expansion of the work of the church at home. Was not this true of Paul's missionary work? Did he not carry the work of the Antioch church to the limits of the Roman empire, as Peter did the work of the church at Jerusalem among the circumcised everywhere? Missions mean the publishing to the world of the truth Christ has revealed to the church, and in proportion as that faith is extended the churches endowment becomes enlarged and enriched, as an investment of capital bringing back the interest on its investment increases itself. The missionary movement is not something apart from the church. It is the church at work. Missions are not one thing and christianity something else. Missions mean christianity. The christianity of which Christ's church is the witness and propagator. How, then, is it possible for a church that is not a missionary church to be a New Testament christian church? Why should such a church live? How can it live as a church of Christ? Such a church is out of line with the divine purpose, as clearly as a plow would be out of line with the maker's purpose that was used for carrying the mail. But this makes another fact clear as sunlight, viz. a church that refuses to be a missionary church is committing suicide. If missions mean christianity, then, to be a non missionary is to be in opposition to the divine purpose. Will God bless any church that refuses to do his will? Christ was a missionary. Christians are to imitate Christ. Of such disciples Christ's churches are composed. Christ's church is, then, in the nature of the case a missionary church. As in the outset, missions were the necessary outcome of the church of Christ. So the history of the churches, for nearly nineteen centuries, has been this: that churches have been active, healthy, growing spiritual centers as they were actively and earnestly missionary. No home church is a spiritual, evangelizing church that is not interested in and working for the evangelization of the nations abroad. Do we need a proof of this? Then let such compare the growth of the "Missionary Baptists" (so called) with the anti mission Baptist churches. It has been truthfully said "that missions abroad are the strength and glory of the churches at home." The home church, therefore, must in loyalty to Christ and to her own vital interests be a missionary church. Either this or depletion, selfishness, extinction. Christ's view of the world and its needs must be the view of his churches. What was Christ's view? What is the view of your church and of mine? These are vital test questions, for the answer to them determines the claims of any church to being a church of Christ. A church may be as sound in faith as the epistle to the Romans, as loyal to the ordinances as Philip and the Eunuch, as orthodox as the Sanhedrim, and yet be as dead, spiritually, as Julius Cæsar. It is only as the Bride of Christ, the church sees as her divine Master sees, that she can feel as her Master felt, or be inspired by her Master's purpose. The spirit of missions must become the spirit of the church, because it is the spirit of the Christ who is her Head and her heart. Our mistake, as churches, has been, and it still is, to make our missionary work exceptional, or at least only occasional. Why our dependence upon missionary secretaries and agents? Because we are not trained to think and live, as christians, in the atmosphere of missions. Occasionally your pastor preaches a sermon about missions, but the spirit of missions is often not in the preacher, and hence, not in his sermon. You have an occasional missionary meeting, but it lacks interest and power, and hence has no grip on the church. The New Testament is a manual of missions. It can't be preached and not emphasize missions. Its motto about the Cross is, "Christ for the world, and the world for Christ." Think of the large amount of the New Testament that deals with missions! This divine word does not fix our gaze on heaven one quarter as much as you are told, or as you sing. It points us to a perishing world as our field of labor, and up to Christ as our guide and Master in this world-wide work. It is not ourselves, but our Lord and our neighbors that it bids us live and labor for.

If we, as churches, were touched and thrilled with Christ's view and passion for a perishing world, we would not keep our best sons and daughters at home for pastors of our churches and as teachers for our schools. No, we would send out our Pauls and Barnabases from our Antiochs, and then keep in living, loving touch with them, and thus get far more good from them, as churches at home than we do now by keeping them here. Could William Carey have done for the churches of England and the world by staying at home what he did by going abroad? Could Dr. Yates have done for the churches of North Carolina, had he been kept at home by one of your churches, what he has done for your churches, for the churches of the South and for the churches elsewhere by his great work in China? Multiply these influences upon our home churches by the influences of all the glorious spirits that have gone forth to the foreign fields! Their lives have been laid down for Christ. Have they been lost? Is the water lifted by the sun from the ocean and borne away by the clouds and poured down on other lands and gathered in the harvests of fields and orchards, lost? Has the influence of your Yates and your missionaries taken from you and sent abroad been lost to your State? Before you answer, ask God for his record of the influence of these men and women on the churches of your old North State and the South. Oh, that we might have our hearts so opened to the spirit of missions that it should consecrate our gifts into the means of divine power for evangelizing. Money is not "sanctified by the purpose for which it is used." We are not Jesuits. We are Baptists, and hence we believe in clean money as we do in clean hands and pure hearts for Christ's work. It is the motive that constrains the gift that sanctifies it. Money given unwillingly is as useless in the Lord's treasury as chips are useless in exchange for gold. Money tricked out of the world's pocket for missions, compared to the offerings of consecrated, Christ loving disciples, is as the offerings in the temple which our Lord compared to the mites of the poor widow.

Jesus Christ did not save his churches at the price of his blood that they should be collecting agencies to gather money from the world with which to advance his kingdom.

We are doing Christ's business, and he has nowhere intimated that in this work we are to take the world into partnership. My hope for a purer, more spiritual and consecrated church at home is, under God, to come from the reflex influence of the work of Foreign Missions. God must be trusted. Christ must be followed. Hearts must be directed and consecrated by the Holy Spirit in effective Foreign Mission work. When this influence shall make us realize that our work at home must be done the same way. Then revivals will sweep our churches at home as mighty rushing winds from heaven.

The Leaksville Woolen Mills, Leaksville, N. C., need no introduction to the public in North Carolina and adjoining States. This is simply to remind you that they are still "in touch" with the people, working up their wool into various forms of finished product at satisfactory prices. A handsome catalogue containing samples of their new and attractive styles of Fancy Cassimeres and All-Wool Flannels, together with all other goods made by them, is sent to any address on application. Besides an intersting article on "Wool on How to Handle It," the catalogue contains full particulars in regard to shipping wool. If these details are carefully followed, we guarantee prompt return of goods.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

From Rev. J. A. Hoyle.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—On the 8th of December, 1892, we moved from Iron Station, Lincoln county, to Maiden, Catawba county. We have only been here a little over one month, but so far we are well pleased with our new home. The people here are very kind to us.

Our mission church here is moving on very well. At our last meeting we received fourteen by letter. One of this number is Elder E. S. Wisnant, formerly of Burke county.

Our Sunday-school is in a good, working condition. Bro. Wisnant was elected superintendent last Sunday. Bro. A. B. Erwin, who served us last year, resigned at the close of the year. Bro. Ervin made us a good superintendent, but prefers to teach a class. The average attendance averages from seventy to eighty.

We still owe a small debt on our house, and are trying very hard to raise the money to pay the debt. I am not going to ask the brethren to read this to help us, as we think we can get through without appealing to brethren at a distance.

But, dear brethren and sisters (you who read this), let me appeal to you in behalf of Newton Baptist church. Newton is the county seat of Catawba county, and we have had an organization of a few faithful brethren and sisters for eight or ten years without a house of worship. They now have a nice, brick house, though not finished nor paid for. With a little money they can finish the house or get it so they can occupy it. They only have about twenty members, mostly women—only three or four male members. They cannot pay this debt, and finish the building. Now let me say I am neither the pastor nor a member of this church, nor has any person asked me to write this appeal to the Baptists of North Carolina. So you see, brethren, I am only interested in the cause of my Lord, as you all are. When you read this, and then go to your good houses of worship, will you please take a collection for Newton church and send it to Bro. George W. Cochran, Newton, N. C. If you will do this, you will feel good over it, and you will cause Bro. Cochran and the rest of the membership in Newton to rejoice.

The Union Meeting of the South Fork Association will meet with the church at Macedonia on Friday before the fifth Sunday in this month. Brethren coming by rail will please notify me at once, and conveyance will meet them at Maiden on the Chester and Lenoir Narrow Gauge, or at Iron Station on the C. C. Road on Friday morning, if they will write to Bro. J. Mullen, Derr, N. C.

May the Lord's blessings rest upon the RECORDER and all its readers.

Fraternally, J. A. HOYLE.
Maiden, Jan. 13, 1893.

If you feel weak and all worn out take BROWN'S IRON BITTERS

Substantial Tokens of Esteem.

Bro. Editor:—One night not long ago, while sitting at home before a blazing fire, we heard a confused murmur of voices and approaching footsteps. The query arose in our minds, what evil have we done that our home should thus be invaded at night? One of the number, as spokesman for the rest, told the object of their visit and this fierce encounter thus:

"Reverend Sir: Your friends in Polkton on this cold December night, braving the frozen wind and furious snow, have brought you these substantial tokens of their esteem."

Then we knew they were indeed a band of christian robbers, who had robbed themselves of good things to pile them upon our table. It was in truth a band of christian men and women composed of Methodists, Presbyterians and Baptists, who had come through the cold and bitter weather to cheer me and mine, and they did it handsomely.

Kind friends, we desire to assure you that we appreciate most highly this manifestation of your love and sympathy. The Lord bless you all for remembering in this tender and affectionate way one of his humble servants. God grant that we may serve you more faithfully and be used as an instrument in his hand to do you good, and in his name carry spiritual food to your homes. Deeds, like these, 'come like benedictions from the skies, cheer the minister's heart and nerve his arm for more faithful and energetic work. The friendship, love and confidence of his congregation, the preacher esteems among his most valued earthly possessions. Gratefully, C. H. MARTIN.

Letter from Rev. C. N. Donaldson.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I am just up from a long spell of typhoid fever, prostrating me for six weeks. I was near the portal of death, but as the result of superior medical attention, kind nursing, and especially the prayers of God's children, I am spared—I hope for the purpose of a nobler and more consecrated life for Christ. Many were the letters of sympathy and brotherly love received during my long illness, for which I am sincerely grateful. One knows not how many friends he has, till affliction and sorrow comes upon him.

I regret much not being able to attend the Convention at Raleigh, but the next best thing was the reading of your excellent reports of its doings in the RECORDER. I regard the work you are doing for the Baptist cause in North Carolina as second to none in the State.

The feeble condition of my health necessitated my giving up pastoral work for a time. I have reluctantly resigned my churches, and am now without a pastorate. We know not our future, but our Father will guide and provide. Precious promise is this: "Commit thy way unto the Lord and he will direct thy steps. Trust also in him and he will bring it to pass."

I shall ever cherish pleasant memories of many noble brethren and friends whom I have known and learned to love during my ministry among the churches of Eastern North Carolina. May God's rich blessings ever abide upon them.

Wishing you a prosperous new year,
I am yours, C. N. DONALDSON.
Norfolk, Va.

P. S. I am now fast improving, and hope in a couple of weeks to be able to resume work. C. N. D.

From Rev. W. J. Sholar, Brooklyn, N. Y.

My Dear Brother:—I am glad that you sent a postal reminding me of neglected duty, and I enclose my subscription to the RECORDER for another year. Among the number of religious papers that come to my study, none is read more eagerly than the RECORDER. It is the one link that binds me to the old State of my nativity, and keeps aglow the love for her people and her staunch old Baptist churches.

Amid the rush and interminable din of this already big and rapidly growing city, where every sort of creed and ism finds expounders and votaries, and where the nerves and brain and muscle of the preacher are kept at high tension night and day, week in and week out, while breasting the waves of vice and corruption and irreligion and Sabbath desecration that wait not the coming of darkness to show their brazen hands, but works assiduously under the glowing sun as well as at the fall of night—amid these, I say, the heart of a Tar Heel often yearns for the calm and peace of the City of Oaks, or the soothing balm of dear old Fayetteville.

The new year opens gladsomely for this scribe and the church he serves. The Santa Claus who brought rich gifts to our Sunday-school at Christmas, remembered the pastor with a beautiful gold Waltham watch in addition to other useful presents. One class of young ladies in our school gave a bountiful Christmas dinner to forty poor children, who otherwise would have had no turkey. One street waif was heard to remark in no delicate whisper, "Um! got stuffin in it, golly!" Our school has a total membership of 450 with an average attendance of 360, while the membership of the church is but 304. It isn't often that a Sunday-school outnumbers the church. That doesn't include the sixty and more who are in the Swedish department of the school.

A NOTE OR TWO.

Brooklyn's board of alderman and the county supervisors have been indicted by the grand jury. Why? Columbus day extravagance. Look at the figures:

$6,000 was paid for a grand stand that did not cost $1,000, and all of the lumber was given back to the builder.

$2,000 was paid for the use of some decorations on the city hall for one day. Total value of said decorations, $500.

$675 was paid for ushers for the grand-stand for one day.

$1,289 was paid for lunches for the poor aldermen on the same day.

More than $16,000 was paid for music.

The Rev. A. C Dixon, on the first Sunday afternoon of the new year, began services in a down town opera house. It is hoped that non-church goers may be reached in this way.

Over against this effort, Mr. Robert Ingersoll lectured last Sunday night in a Brooklyn opera house to a full house at seventy-five cents per head. It would be interesting to know how many christians in that audience, and there were there—would have given twenty five cents to help Dr. Dixon's crusade.

On Jan. 17 and 19 a dual centenary conference is to be held in New York and Brooklyn under the auspices of the Baptist Missionary Union. A number of noted speakers are on the program, not the least of whom are Rev. Drs. John A. Broadus and A. C. Dixon.

With best wishes to the friends in the State and to the RECORDER for '93. I am at home always to those from Carolina who happen to be this way.

A Detroit Miracle.

A GREAT TRIUMPH FOR MEDICAL SCIENCE.

PARTICULARS OF ONE OF THE MOST REMARKABLE CURES ON RECORD DESCRIBED BY THE DETROIT NEWS—A STORY WORTH A CAREFUL PERUSAL.

(Detroit Evening News.)

A case has just come to light here, the particulars of which are published in the Evening News, which will be read with considerable interest, as it records the remarkable achievement of a medical discovery, which has already won great and enduring fame. The story is told by the News as follows:—

The following paragraph, which appeared in the News a short time ago, furnished the basis of this information—a case that was so wonderfully remarkable that it demanded further explanation. It is of sufficient importance to the News' readers to report it to them fully. It was so important then that it attracted considerable attention at the time. The following is the paragraph in question:

"C. B. Northrop, for twenty-eight years one of the best known merchants on Woodward avenue, who was supposed to be dying last spring of locomotor ataxia, or creeping paralysis, has secured a new lease of life and returned to work at his store. The disease has always been supposed to be incurable, but Mr. Northrop's condition has greatly improved, and it looks now as if the grave would be cheated of its prey."

Since that time Mr. Northrop has steadily improved, not only in looks, but in condition, till he has regained his old time strength.

It has been hinted to the writer of this article, who was acquainted with Mr. Northrop, that this miraculous change had been wrought by a very simple remedy called Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. When asked about it Mr. Northrop fully verified the statement, and not only so, but he had taken pains to inform any one who was suffering in a similar manner when he heard of any such case. Mr. Northrop was enthusiastic at the result in his own case of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. It was a remedy that he had heard of after he had tried everything he could hope to give him relief. He had been in the care of the best physicians who did all they could to alleviate this terrible malady, but without any avail. He had given up hope, when a friend in Lockport, N. Y., wrote him of the case of a person there who had been cured in similar circumstances by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. The person cured at Lockport had obtained his information respecting Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from an article published in the Hamilton, Ont., Times. The case was called "The Hamilton Miracle," and told the story of a man in that city who, after almost incredible suffering, was pronounced by the most eminent physicians to be incurable and permanently disabled. He had spent hundreds of dollars in all sorts of treatment and appliances only to be told in the end that there was no hope for him, and that cure was impossible. The person alluded to (Mr. John Marshall, of 35 Little William St., Hamilton, Ont.,) was a member of the Royal Templars of Temperance, and after having been pronounced permanently disabled and incurable by the physicians, was paid the $1,000 insurance disability provided by the order for its members in such cases. For years Mr. Marshall had been utterly helpless, and he was barely able to drag himself around the house with the aid of crutches. His agonies were almost unbearable and his life was a burden to him, when at last relief came. Some months after he had been paid the disability claim, he heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and was induced to try them. The result was miraculous; almost from the outset an improvement was noticed, and in a few months the man whom medical experts had said was incurable, was going about the city healthier and stronger than before. Mr. Marshall was so well known in Hamilton that all the city newspapers wrote up his wonderful recovery in detail, and it was thus as before stated, that Mr. Northrop came into possession of the information that led to his equally marvelous recovery. One could scarcely conceive a case more hopeless than that of Mr. Northrop. His injury came about in this way: One day nearly four years ago, he stumbled and fell the complete length of a steep flight of stairs which were at the rear of his store. His head and spine were severely injured. He was picked up and taken to his home. Creeping paralysis very soon developed itself, and in spite of the most strenuous efforts of friends and physicians the terrible affliction fastened itself upon him. For nearly two years he was perfectly helpless. He could do nothing to support his strength in the least effort. He had to be wheeled about in an invalid's chair. He was weak, pale and fast sinking when this timely information came that veritably snatched his life from the jaws of death. Those, who at that time saw a feeble old man wheeled into his store on an invalid's chair, would not recognize the man now, as so great is the change that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have wrought. When Mr. Northrop learned of the remedy that had cured Mr. Marshall in Hamilton, and the person in Lockport, he procured a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through Messrs. Bassett & L'Hommedieu 95 Woodward avenue, and from the outset found an improvement. He faithfully adhered to the use of the remedy until now he is completely restored. Mr. Northrop declares that there can be no doubt as to Pink Pills being the cause of his restoration to health, as all other remedies and medical treatment left him in a condition rapidly going from bad to worse, until at last it was declared there was no hope for him and he was pronounced incurable. He was in this terrible condition when he began to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and they have restored him to health.

Mr. Northrop was asked what was claimed for this wonderful remedy, and replied that he understood the proprietors claim it to be a blood builder and nerve restorer, supplying in a condensed form all the elements necessary to enrich the blood, restore the shattered nerves and drive out disease. It is claimed by the proprietors that Pink Pills will cure paralysis, rheumatism, sciatica, palpitation of the heart, headache, and all diseases peculiar to females, loss of appetite, dizziness, sleeplessness, loss of memory, and all diseases arising from overwork, mental worry, loss of vital force, etc.

"I want to say," said Mr. Northrop, "that I don't have much faith in patent medicines, but I cannot say too much in praise of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The proprietors, however, claim that they are not a patent medicine in the sense in which that term is used, but a highly scientific preparation, the result of years of careful study and experiment on the part of the proprietors, and the pills were successfully used in private practice for years before being placed for general sale. Mr. Northrop declares that he is a living example that there is nothing to equal these pills as a cure for nerve diseases. On inquiry the writer found that these pills were manufactured by Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y., and Brockville, Ont., and the pills are sold in boxes (never in bulk by the hundred) at 50 cents a box, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., from either above addresses. The price at which these pills are sold makes a course of treatment with them comparatively inexpensive as compared with other remedies or medical treatment. This case is one of the most remarkable on record, and as it is one right here in Detroit, and not a thousand miles away, it can be easily verified. Mr. Northrop is very well known to the people in Detroit, and he says he is only too glad to testify of the marvelous good wrought in his case. He says he considers it his duty to help all who are similarly afflicted by any word he can say in behalf of the wonderful efficacy of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. If any of the News readers want any further information, we feel sure Mr. Northrop would willingly oblige them, as he has the writer in relating these facts to him.

DIED.

ROGERS—Mr. John T. Rogers of Creedmore, N. C., after a few days suffering from fever, died January 3d, 1893. He was in his twenty-ninth year, and full of zeal for his Master's cause. He leaves a wife and one little child. His funeral was preached at Pleasant Grove church, Wednesday, January 4th, by the writer. May God bless all his sorrowing relatives and friends, and grant us all a happy meeting with our dear departed brother.

J. H. LAMBERTH.

PRIDGEN—We chronicle with sadness the death of Bro. Matthew Pridgen, who has been for about fifty years a consistent member of the Baptist church. At the time of his death he was a member of French's Creek church, Bladen county, N. C. Bro. Pridgen lived to a ripe old age, being eighty-three years old. It can truthfully be said of him that his was a bright and shining light, such as would constrain others with whom he came in contact to glorify our Heavenly Father. The good which he did lives on. True after-sunset is frequently more beautiful than the sun itself.

M. C. WALTON.

Wilmington, N. C. Jan. 5, 1893.

YOPP—On Dec. 29th, Bro. F. V. B. Yopp died. He was one of the oldest citizens of Wilmington, being sixty-one years old. He joined the First Baptist church of this place twenty-seven years ago, and seven years ago when the Brooklyn church was organized he came to help the weaker side. He has been a very consistent and devoted brother, always interested in his church. He leaves a good wife and three grown children.

The deceased was a well-known mechanic, having followed the trade of a brick-mason and contractor during his life, with the exception of four years of the civil war. He enlisted in the Confederate army as a private in Co. F, Third N. C. State Troops, and was subsequently transferred to Co. G., Fifty-first Regiment as Lieutenant, in which capacity he served until the close of the war. He joined Cape Fear Lodge, No. 2, I. O. O. F., May 5th, 1857, and to the day of his death was a true and faithful Odd Fellow. At the time of his death he was the second oldest member of his Lodge.

J. T. JENKINS.

Wilmington, N. C.

FOWLER—Another good woman, devoted christian, faithful wife, watchful mother and kind neighbor, has gone to her rest. Mrs. Mary Victoria Fowler, wife of Mr. M. B. Fowler of Sampson county, passed from this life to the realms beyond on Dec. 21st, 1892. Her disease was pneumonia and pleurisy. She had been a great sufferer all her life, and bore her suffering as only christians can. She was forty-eight years and ten days old at the time of her death. She had been a faithful and consistent member of the Missionary Baptist church for nearly thirty-five years. Her [illegible] who said that she lived her religion.

She leaves a husband, two sons, two daughters an aged father, two brothers and three sisters to mourn their irreparable loss.

During her sickness she often spoke of dying, but would say that she was not afraid to die. Those who knew her best doubt not that beyond this veil of tears she wears a crown, where the cares of life are ended, and only the blest can dwell. Well may it be said of her that the world was made better by her having lived in it.

Outline Analysis OF THE Books of the Bible.

BY PROF. B. C. TAYLOR.

16mo, 192 pages. Price, 75 cents.

Prof. Taylor takes the Bible by books and analyzes them according to author, time of writing, relation to other books, contents, specific points, etc. We know of no volume that in so small a space gives so much.

Some such knowledge of the various books of the Bible, or of the Bible as a whole should be in the possession of every preacher, teacher, or Bible student. How many christians there are to whom the Bible is only a piece of patchwork, without order or harmony in point of facts or dates. They have not the slightest idea of how the various books of the Bible are related historically or chronologically, or whether such relation exists.—Journal and Visitor.

It is Better to Live.

I have sometimes felt that the burden
Of life was too heavy to bear;
And have longed to lie down at the noontide
And rest and forget all my care;
But over my heart comes the message,
Repeated again and again—
"It is better to live and to suffer,
Than to die to be rid of the pain."

There is rest in the darkness of dying,
And end to the weary despair;
The grave holds sure peace and calm silence;
No sorrow nor pain can be there;
But perhaps in the struggle of living
Is a soul that has need of my care—
Some heart may be bearing a burden
That my hand may lighten or share.

'Twould be easy to say "I am weary,"
And lie down and give up the strife,
To suffer no more with the heartache
And sorrow I meet in this life;
But perhaps from my sorrow-swept heart strings
A melody sweet may be wrung,
And my lips, when they drank deep of suffering,
The tenderest songs may have sung.

'Tis so hard to be patient with living
When all the world is awry;
So wearisome waiting for pleasures
That will only come after we die;
But even through all my complaining
I can hear that undying refrain—
"It is better to live and to suffer,
Than to die to be rid of the pain."

I will live and be strong, and will suffer,
If need be, until I find rest,
When life and its trials are over,
Though never my life should be blest.
Though always the sun should be darkened
By the clouds that hang over my way,
I will trust that the light will be clearer
When at last I awake "in the day."

Amy's New Year.

It was a very dainty volume in cream and gold that lay by Amy's plate on New Year's morning. A cluster of pansies exquisitely colored, adorned the cover, and under them in quaint lettering were the words, "For Thoughts." Inside, the leaves of thick, satiny paper bore name and date of each day of the year. A choice selection from some wise writer headed each page, while beneath was left an inviting space for the penning of Amy's own thoughts. The gift suited her exactly, and she glanced dreamily from its pure white pages to the pure white world outside her window. It all seems fair and new, suggestive of a fresh beginning. The leaf before her, "January 1st," bore the couplet:

Who giveth himself with his alms feeds three—
Himself, his suffering neighbor, and me.

And beneath it Amy wrote:

"I will try to be more generous this year than in the past—to give more."

Amy was not satisfied with writing it; she would have been glad to signalize her New Year's Day by some unusually generous deed, but no opportunity seemed to offer. In fact, Amy decided with a little sigh, her opportunities were always limited. "The Lift a Little" Mission Band would meet the next day, and how glad she would be to contribute something handsome to the box they wanted to send off! The girls had promised to give all they could, besides the sewing they were doing, but this first meeting after Christmas was sure to find them all with depleted purses. Certainly, her own was in that condition, and she saw no way to replenish it, though she thought of it often as the morning wore away. At noon her father remarked.

"I wonder what has become of Joe Cooper? I thought I would send him around to clean out the tool house and carriage shed this afternoon, but I could not find him."

An idea came to Amy, and she asked quickly:

"How much would you pay Joe, papa?"

"Two dollars, I suppose. That is a pretty good price, to be sure, but he does the work thoroughly without my having to stand around and tell him how I want everything done."

"I believe I could do it as well," said Amy.

"You?" Her father glanced at the dainty form and slender hands. "You look like it!"

"Oh, I didn't mean alone, of course," explained Amy. "I thought I might take Bridget out with me. She can hurry up her other work and help to do that for once."

"Help!" repeated Mr. Dean, with a laugh. "It would be a case of 'Me and Betsy killed the bear,' I fancy. Much obliged to you, Puss, but it isn't really necessary that it should be done to-day; it can wait for Joe."

"But I want to do it, persisted Amy. "I want to earn the money."

Her father laughed again, and protested that he did not "understand young ladies who were such reckless spendthrifts at Christmas and wonderful economists by New Year;" but, as usual, he left Amy to do as she pleased.

It must be confessed that Bridget's face, when the project was made known to her, was not quite so bright as Amy's, but she put aside her work, as directed; and a busy afternoon followed. Dusty windows were washed, cobwebs swept down and rubbish neatly piled up. Amy had a fire made in the old stove in the tool house, so they could keep comfortably warm. She was quick at planning and arranging, and Bridget strong-armed in executing, and between them they worked wonders—"did quite as well as Joe," Mr. Dean said when he inspected the place that evening. Amy was tired but happy as she lay on the sofa reading and resting with the precious two dollars safely tucked away. Bridget's face, however, had grown a little clouded as she glanced at the clock when she returned to the kitchen. There was a busy evening before her, and the next day would be freighted with some task that she must carry over.

A very bright and beautiful day that next one was. Amy thought she had never seen a more perfect winter morning, and she walked briskly down the street to the meeting. She seemed to carry some of the sunshine into the room with her, and the girls exclaimed in delight over her contribution:

"Why, this will finish out what we wanted for that muslin!"

"None of us brought so much as that this time. It's so hard to make one's money go far enough at Christmas. How did you manage to have so much left?"

Under the fire of laughing questions Amy told her story—modestly and prettily, indeed, but feeling well satisfied that it was worth telling. It was greeted with admiration:

"That was just lovely of you!"

"I wonder you ever thought of it!"

The murmur of applause was broken by Nan Harkley's clear voice recalling them to business.

"Contribution of two dollars," she said with pencil poised over her secretarial paper. "Well, shall I credit it to Amy Dean—or to Bridget?"

There was a moment's awkward silence, then one of the girls laughed uneasily, another murmered, rather weakly something about Bridget being "expected to work any way," and the rest ignored the question. All but Amy. She told herself that Nan Harkley had a way of saying disagreeable things, but that only related to the manner of the remark and did not touch the truth of the matter. She wore a very thoughtful face during the rest of the meeting, and when she went home she sought the kitchen:

"You helped me yesterday, Bridget? can't I help you some this afternoon?"

Bridget's face did brighten:

"Oh, never mind, Miss Amy! 'Twasn't nothing partic'lar yesterday afternoon, only that I was hopin' to get home a bit before supper to see Johnny. He's sick!"

Sure enough Wednesday was a day that usually held a spare hour for Bridget, and she looked forward to it longingly, its use all planned. Amy set her lips resolutely as she remembered.

"I'll help you with the dinner dishes, and you shall go this afternoon," she said.

The task was barely completed when she was summoned to the door. Joe Cooper stood there, the weather-beaten face under the old hat pleasantly expectant:

"I heard your father had a job for me, Miss Amy!"

"He was looking for you yesterday, but somebody else did it," answered Amy, reluctantly.

"Oh!" his face fell, and he turned slowly away. "Sorry I miss it."

"And poor Joe needed the work!" mused Amy as she watched him walk away with a disappointed air.

"I'm afraid Nan's question of who gave that money will be asked of a higher record than hers."

That night the little cream and gold volume held another entry:

"I will try to be honest this year. The old maxim about being just before one is generous means more than I thought."—Kate W. Hamilton, in Forward.

Our Congressman in his patriotic argument on the tariff question often becomes hoarse and his voice husky. Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein will relieve him and cure coughs, croup and consumption.

Some Clever Catches.

A young lady was once talking with a very young and very smart man, who was inclined to air his knowledge of the languages a little beyond what she felt that modesty required. She therefore said to him, with an air of deference to his superior attainments:

"You are a Latin scholar. I wish you would tell me how to pronounce the word 'so met-i-mes.'"

The youth, with an air of kindly patronage, replied: "I have not met the word in my Latin reading, but I should have no hesitation in saying that it should be pronounced 'so met i-mes'" (giving it in four syllables the accent on the second).

"Thank you for telling me," replied the girl, demurely. "I have always heard it pronounced sometimes, but if you say the other way, that must be right."

This is similar to the perhaps familiar catch of the pronunciation of "bac kac he," which will often surprise the uninitiated by proving to be only back ache. It also reminds one of a question printed some years since, as to the way of spelling "need"—to need bread. The average person will reply, "K n-e a-d, of course," but the answer will be "That is the way to spell knead dough, but not to need bread."

A young lady recently misled a family in a most heartless way. She remarked: "I had a letter to-day, and how do you imagine the little preposition 'to' was spelled?"

"Too," suggested mamma.

"Two," suggested papa.

"Tew," "Teu," "Tu," ventured various voices.

Lily, who was much engaged with her French lessons just then, suggested "tout," and Tom, in derision, improved upon that "tueue," declaring that must be right in order to rhyme with "queue."

"All wrong," exclaimed the young lady, when the alphabet and their ingenuity were well exhausted.

Just then Teddy, who had been soberly absorbed in his bread-and-honey, and who was in his first term at school and wrestling with the problem of words in two letters, raised his head, and with an air of decision and importance, gravely spelled, "T-o, to."

"Yes," cried the young lady, with a peal of laughter.—

"Why," exclaimed the others in dismayed chorus, "that is the right way to spell it!"

"Exactly," she replied; "and that is the way my correspondent spelled it. You do not suppose I correspond with persons who cannot even spell to correctly, do you?"—Harper's Young People.

A Tennessee farmer, the subject of the accompanying portrait, gives the following remarkable statement which our readers are requested to show their friends:

JACKSBORO, TENN., August, 1891.

I was affected with Catarrh for ten years. The principal trouble, the first two years, was the formation of scabs in my nostrils, stopping of one or both sides, a dryness in my throat, a dull, heavy aching in the front part of my head, a tendency to take cold more easily than common, and continual roaring, buzzing and ringing sound in my ears. At times the sound would be like distant bells ringing, or cracking, pricking sensations in my ears, which were a constant and great annoyance to me. After the disease had run on about two years my hearing commenced to fail, and for seven years I was so deaf that I could not hear ordinary conversation, and was all the time growing worse. I had spent a great deal of money for relief and had tried all remedies in my reach, with no effect until I used the Aerial Medication in June, 1888, and the very first application opened out my ears and restored my hearing fully; and a continuation of the treatment for several weeks entirely cured me of the Catarrh, and fully restored my general health, which had become impaired, and for three years I have been entirely free from Catarrh, and my hearing has been and is still perfect.

Talks About Law—No. 10.

BY JUDGE R. W. WINSTON.

SOME DAMAGE CASES.

John William Smith, an Englishman, has written a favorite law book on the subject of contracts. In style it is simple and easy; but it is accurate, very clear and strong. One, not a lawyer, can do no better than to read it.

He says that if we except the law of real property and of crime and causes, then arising in the Court of Exchequer, the whole practice of our courts of common law may be distributed into two classes, contracts and torts. He then proceeds to treat of the former; while we will, in a modest way, consider some principles underlying the latter.

A tort is a civil wrong or injury. To speak generally, wherever there is a wrong, the law provides a remedy. The amount recovered is spoken of as damages.

Without seeking to classify, let us begin in the middle and illustrate by cases determined by our courts.
